Teapot Dome and Gompers

The Teapot Dome scandal is the topic of discussion in every city and hamlet in the United States. Farmers lean across the fences and cite the latest revelation to their neighbors; wage-earners on their way to and from work and during lunch hour in the shop talk of little else. In other nations the scandal that has ripped American political life wide open is of major importance and its effect on the coming presidential campaign is made the subject of comment by scores of writers.

The headquarters of the American Federation of Labor in Washington is silent as the tomb. Not a single official pronouncement on the most important national event since the declaration of war in 1917 has been issued for the guidance of the organized workers, no word has been uttered or written that would give the membership any idea that the shattering of political reputations and the panic in the ranks of the capitalist parties is anything out of the ordinary.

Surely this is a remarkable circumstance and one that should occasion serious thought on the part of organized workers. Here is an administration that broke the shopmen's strike by mobilizing the full power of the government against it; involved in the scandal is the attorney-general, who secured the issuance of a nation-wide injunction that made the strike illegal and who used the bureau of investigation with its thousands of employes to frame evidence against the strikers, yet no word of condemnation has passed the lips of Samuel Gompers.

On the other hand, the acknowledged leader of the democrat party and a candidate for the presidency has publicly told that in return for a fee he attempted to prevent the recognition of the republic of Mexico until it had come to terms with his oil company employers.

The American Federation of Labor was in favor of the recognition of Mexico at the time these attempts were made—successful attempts, by the way—but no condemnation of these nefarious acts has been made by Samuel Gompers.

Here, then, is a situation in which both parties of American capitalism have furnished indisputable evidence of opposition to the most ordinary demands of labor—political and economic. He who runs may read but Samuel Gompers is as silent as the sphinx.

There are times, and this is one of them, when to remain silent is to condone great abuses; Samuel Gompers must know that here is an opportunity for organized labor that may come but once in a life time, an opportunity to hold the enemies of labor in both capitalist parties up to public scorn, to strengthen immensely the position of organized labor.

He will do nothing, as usual, except to cast around for some "friend" in one or the other of the capitalist parties to whom labor support can be thrown. He is opposed to independent working class political action and he prefers to, continue the policy of trading and truckling for petty favors rather than boldly explore the vast fertile spaces in which a class political party can grow like the green bay tree.

The comment in the official labor press on the Teapot Dome scandal differs not at all from that in the capitalist press. Both regret the impetus it has given to radical criticism of the government and both deplore the blight upon the fair name of America.

Here is the key to the Gompers position. He does not want the people to lose faith in "their" government and far from welcoming the scandal as revealing the inner corruption of capitalist rule he worries over it because it confirms the statements made by the Communists whom he fears. Only individuals like Fall for whom no one has a good word will incur the Gompersian displeasure—no criticism of the government as the instrument of oppression will fall from his lips.

Truly the American labor movement is well led—for the capitalists.

Military Prisoners

Since the release from a German prison of the American Legion thug who tried to kidnap Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, the draft evader, a movement has sprung up here in Chicago to bring about the release of those victims of militarism who are serving terms of imprisonment in Leavenworth federal prison from a few years to life.

Far be it from us to favor the incarceration of these unfortunate victims of capitalism who were seduced into the service of their masters and for a slight infraction of the rules perhaps, or in some cases for a serious crime, were condemned to a life of isolation, but we protest against the hypocrisy of the Chicago Tribune and other organs of the very interests in whose behalf these hapless creatures shouldered the rifle and risked their lives only to be rewarded by a punishment worse than death.

The organs of plutocracy regret that conscientious objectors have been released while those who have worn the uniform have not. Why no voice has been raised in their behalf is incomprehensible to them. The answer is obvious. Those who campaigned to force the government to release the war objectors did so because they were of the opinion that these men were impelled by worthy motives in declining to participate in the work of slaughtering their fellow workers in other countries.

On the other hand the unfortunate victims of court martial committed the very serious crime of violating military discipline and must be offered on the altar of patriotism as examples to others. The reactionaries who put them in jail are now of the opinion that enough dissatisfaction already has been created by the refusal to grant the returned soldiers a bonus so they try to win back the good will of the veterans by a belated attempt to secure the release of those serving time for infractions of the military code.

Another war will surely come if capitalism is to live for some time. Soldiers will be needed. It would never do to release the conscientious objectors and keep those who wore the uniform in prison even if some of them committed henious crimes. It will not do to completely eliminate the "pay" in patriotism.

More Liberal Criticism

We pointed out the other day that Norman Thomas, in the press service of the league for industrial democracy, had falsely accused the radicals at the miners' convention of joining forces with the Klan.

Mr. Thomas, in the latest issue of the service, corrects himself as follows:

> One of our correspondents writes regarding our editorial about the Mine Workers' Convention (Service No. 5): "The miner radicals did not ally themselves with the Klan. A number of radicals were the only ones that attended the small Klan meeting and asked heckling questions. However, the radicals seemed glad to have the Klan issue come up because it helped put Lewis in a hole no matter which way he jumped."
>
> We are glad to circulate this point of view as we would any other sincerely presented. From this long range it seemed to us that the trouble with the radicals or progressives was that they were more anxious to put Lewis in a hole than to get the miners out of one. And we say this with no love for the spirit and methods revealed by President Lewis and his journalistic errand boy, Ellis Searles.

Might we point out to Mr. Thomas that the only way yet found to get any group of workers out of a hole is to put their misleaders into one?

This, of course, is a somewhat different method than the liberal-pacifist one of appealing to the humanitarian sentiments of reactionary blackguards, but the record to date shows that it is the more effective. It necessitates much unpleasantness, however, and makes absolutely impossible any fraternization with the enemy, the one thing that our liberal brethern cannot bear to sacrifice.

Radicals make many mistakes; sometimes they make the mistake of thinking a friend is an enemy, but they never make the habitual liberal mistake of mistaking an enemy for a friend.

The class struggle is not fought over the teacups and toasted marshmallows at the Civic club and as far as we are concerned we lean strongly towards the point of view expressed by John S. Clarke:

> You've got to stick a mental pin in this:
> The warfare of the classes
> Isn't honey or molasses,
> And you'll need a sharper weapon than a kiss.

Handing it to the Boy Scouts

Washington dispatches carry the news that Assistant Secretary of the Navy Theodore Roosevelt is about to withdraw from political activity and take up some other line of endeavor on which the white light of publicity does not beat so fiercely.

His friends are suggesting, according to one news item, that he "engage in some big constructive enterprise of a philanthropic nature." The idea is, we are justified in supposing, that charity will serve to cover up some of the Roosevelt-Sinclair sins.

It is also suggested that he become the national head of the Boy Scouts and we rise with alacrity to second the motion.

Young Roosevelt is so besmirched with oil that he is undesirable in politics and is therefore eminently fitted for the post of guardian of the boys who are being taught that George Washington never told a lie, to believe that "Black Jack" Pershing is the finest flower of Americanism.

We heard Teddy, Jr., speak once and at that time cudgeled our brains for some role in public life that he could fill and we feel moved to say that the suggestion that he become national commander of the Boy Scouts is a stroke of genius.

The Scouts need not feel at all embarassed in his presence because he is a child like themselves—mentally.

If the Teapot Dome scandal does nothing else than reduce the crown prince of the Roosevelt dynasty to the status of a Y. M. C. A. secretary. it will have been worth while.

The foisting of a discredited politician upon the youth of the land as a leader in ethics is something we leave for bourgeois moralists to ponder over.

The Destiny of Public Education in Soviet Russia

By A. W. LUNACHARSKY.

FROM the beginning the Soviet Government was filled with the consciousness that the only real supplement to the conquests of the proletariat and the peasants, can be the mastery of science. . . . It is necessary that the proletariat forms from out of its ranks a wide section of various specialists, who will replace the old semi-bourgeois intelligentsia in the ideological and technical leadership of the political and social life. It is also absolutely necessary to raise the level of the whole of the people, in the field of general culture as well as in the field of political self-consciousness.

Now, on the fifth anniversary of our Revolution, we hear many authorative declarations which deal with the relations of the Communist Party to the problems of Public education.

Leaders Put Education First.

Comrade Bucharin declared at the trial of the S. R.'s that the question whether the new economic policy will end with the victory of Communism or the reappearance of the bourgeoisie depended upon how quickly and to what extent the proletariat can provide its own specialists.

Comrade Trotzky at the Youth Congress described the question of the education of the youth as a vital question of the revolution.

Comrade Rykov, pointed out at the Trade Union Congress that the third front, i. e., the cultural front, (the first being the military and the second the economic), was the most important.

We must divide the history of public education during the Revolution into two parts: the years 1918 and 1919 were the period of revolutionary enthusiasm; the years 1920, 1921 and 1922 the years of clear reckoning. Our heritage from the first period are: our Declaration, our fundamental ordinances regarding the Unified Polytechnic Workers' School, the work of political exposition and its methods, a correct formulation of general vocational education, the properly formulated methods for the capture of the higher educational institutions thru the most intelligent forces of the proletariat.

Workers Increased Schools.

But these first years of enthusiasm created much more. They created almost out of nothing a network of primary institutions for children below school age which embrace more than 200,000 children. They raised the number of schools in Russia to 60—70,000. They created a whole series of educational institutions in the provinces. Unfortunately these real successes, which arose during the severe war, have proved to be unstable or at least for the time being,—untimely. The desolation which the war wrought in Russia has also affected public education. All means which remained in the country after the war had to be used to heal those wounded organs of the republic, without whose restoration nothing can live: the heavy industry and transport. Public education can only receive the crumbs.

Poverty Handicaps Schools.

We have to effect a great reduction in the number of the pre school establishments and a great reduction in the elementary schools; in addition to this, the second grade schools are also in poor condition. In a word: the foundation of the Russian people's education is in a greatly shaken position. The ideal Socialist school which we had in view, has not only been retained but in some of the better schools we even see an exemplary extension of many of its main features. For the realization of this plan we simply and solely lack the funds.

What else could we expect? The richest countries, America not excepted, maintain their schools out of municipal funds and out of private means, and only a relatively small percentage is defrayed out of the national treasury. In Russia the conditions during the revolution were quite otherwise. There were no private means available for the maintenance of the schools, there were no municipal budgets, and the central material resources rested entirely on the requisitioning of grain in the village and the printing of bank notes.

Educational System Improves.

On the other hand the results achieved by public education are somewhat comforting. Altho the equipment of the higher institutions has suffered greatly thru poverty, energetic measures have been recently adopted to raise the standard of living of the teachers. The formation of Workers' Faculties, i. e., preparatory schools thru which the most capable proletarians can pass directly into the universities, have almost entirely won the sympathy of the students.

The last elections to the Petrograd Soviet and the elections to the students' councils in Moscow proved that the real leaders of the student body are Communists. We cannot boast that our universities are in good condition, but we can at least say that they are living.

Support Scientific Centres.

Up to now the People's Commissariat for Education has succeeded in supporting the chief centre of scientific and artistic life and almost entirely to maintain it and to collect great treasures which had been stored up by the Czar's aristocrats and monasteries. The enormous work in this field will one day be adequately appreciated. Russian art and science constitutes an important element of human culture, in the sense of preserving the old traditions as well as in the sense of the new discoveries evoked by the revolution.

Taken altogether we may say: all roads that the revolution has taken are right. We know what we have to do and how it must be done. The ideal machine must only be set into movement by steam power and for this we must obtain the necessary fuel in the form of material resources. The country is for the time being frightfully poor, but a better future awaits it. Therefore we can look with confidence into the future of the Russian people's education.

MADE TO LOOK BIG

By J. O. BENTALL

THE announcement that the Pullman Co., has increased the wages of its porters an annual total amount of $1,000,000 looks mighty big.

You would almost get down on your knees in adoration of that great corporation that has as bloody a history of starvation wages and company tenements as the steel strust itself if you did not stop to figure out that when divided among the 10,000 porters it amounts to only about $100 a year for each.

But let us thank the newspapers for laying stress on the million. It gave us a moment of faith in the good old promise our young schoolmaams always give us that we may some day become president of the United States or a millionaire or both.

Our disappointment at the actual figure is lessened by the thought that the income tax will be smaller and that the porters do not have to make up as many "uppers" as during the war.

The average wage of the porters was about $1,200 a year. The addition of another hundred dollars will help some, but no one needs to figure that the porters are in a position to buy out the company—not yet.

The capitalist press always presents the most favorable figure in reporting the wages of the workers or the increase that the bosses may grant. This same press tells us that the miners get $7.50 per day which looks big to the casual reader. It does not tell you that the miners work less than 200 days in the year and that no work means no pay.

It is interesting to watch the capitalist press and see how consistent it is in always showing the most adgantageous angle to the class it represents.

A FENCE

By CARL SANDBURG.

Now the stone house on the lake front is finished and the workmen are beginning the fence.
The palings are made of iron bars with steel points that can stab the life out of any man who falls on them.
As a fence, it is a masterpiece, and will shut off the rabble and all vagabonds and hungry men and all wandering children looking for a place to play.
Passing thru the bars and over the steel points will go nothing except death and the Rain and Tomorrow.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE cannot understand why those organizations that actively or passively favored the release of the class war prisoners and conscientious objectors show no concern for the fate of the soldier convicts who are serving terms of imprisonment for such crimes as rape, murder, sodomy and burglary. It is quite possible that many of those now suffering in the United States prisons are only guilty of trivial offenses against the military code, as in the case of the young lad Fischer, mentioned in this column yesterday. But the machinery that sent these men to prison is the military arm of the system that represents the Tribune and is supported by the Tribune. It is the power with which the capitalist class of which the Tribune is an important unit suppresses the workers who are exploited by that class.

• • • •

When the war to "end war" was declared by Woodrow Wilson, agent of the American capitalist class, a small minority among the workers looked upon that war as a crime against the workers and against humanity. Rather than participate in such a crime they refused war service and expressed their opinions on the question. For being true to their ideals they were given long prison terms by the agents of the political mountebank, Woodrow Wilson. The Chicago Tribune applauded the sentences. It never raised a voice for the release of those men and women.

• • • •

It was no uncommon sight during the war to see soldiers and sailors led by members of the bourgeoisie raiding headquarters of workers organizations, destroying their property and assaulting those found on the premises. The writer witnessed such an event in Boston, Mass., on May 1, 1919, during which women were beaten by young thugs in the uniform of the United States navy. Many of those thugs were afterwards jailed for crimes of various kinds, principally for sex perversion. At the moment they were hailed as heroes, and got their pictures in the press, the same pictures could be seen in the rogues' gallery.

• • • •

Radical and progressive organizations exerted themselves to secure the release of those prisoners who were imprisoned for holding political views in opposition to those held by the administration of the moment. The prisoners were not criminals. Intellectually and morally they were of the highest type. They believed the war was a crime. They had the courage then to say what ninety per cent of the people of this country now openly admit.

• • • •

The men in whose behalf the Tribune is exerting so much energy are not in prison because they stood for their convictions. At best they are the victims of a society which breeds criminals. They did not attempt to improve their environment. They followed the line of least resitance and willingly aided the master class in perpetuating the system. Because they, at a critical time violated discipline in their masters' army they were punished by the servants of the Chicago Tribune, the democratic and republican administrations. Why does the Tribune wail because the radical, progressive, liberal and labor movements take little interest in its efforts to get a little publicity out of a movement to free its own pimps, rapists, panderers, sodomists and murderers? We suggest that the Tribune simply call on Calvin Coolidge, unless he is too busy clearing his skirts of the oil bubbles and say, "'Cal', old top. It seems to us that our lads who slipped a little bit have now been sufficiently punished. After all we may need them again, and a rapist, sodomist or pimp can fight just as valiantly for capitalism as a church deacon. Suppose we turn them loose now." There is hardly a doubt but 'Cal' would call up Secretary of War Weeks unless he is driven out by the fumes from the Teapot Dome investigation and advise him to open the gates of the Leavenworth penitentiary and free the military offenders. Why call on the radical organizations who have no friends in the White House?

• • • •

The Reverend Norman Thomas felt quite uncomfortable while attending the St. Louis session of the Cleveland Conference for Rewarding Our Friends and Punishing Our Enemies because of the presence of C. E. Ruthenberg, executive secretary of the Workers Party. In an article in the Nation the progressive divine tells us that the C. P. P. A. shortly before that meeting showed indications of desiring to lay down and die after making a final wiggle by endorsing William Gibbs McAdoo. But one squirt of oil made all sections of the Conference akin, Socialists, Democrats and Republicans put up a united front against any motion that looked as if it originated in the brain of a communist. Under the influence of Liquor people are known to have lurched back and forth and show signs of activity, not generally associated with progress, but the unsteady behavior of the progressive inactionists at St. Louis, warmed up Mr. Thomas and even "Socialist war horses" were getting fidgety fearing that Ruthenberg from his seat in the gallery had bedevilled the delegates which was perhaps responsible for passing such "progressive resolutions" as favoring trial by jury for contempt of court cases and the elimmation of graft from capitalist politics. "We must hold these fellows back," said one Socialist war horse to Dr. Thomas

Big Strike Hits Sweatshops; 13 Workers Arrested When Bosses Call Willing Police

The struggle the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union is waging against the sweatshops in Chicago opened with a bang today when 85 per cent of the dressmaking plants were shut down by the workers. Three thousand union cloakmakers came out with them for a half-day as a demonstration of solidarity and will furnish a quota of pickets thruout the strike.

Angered by the success of the walkout which exceeded their expectations the bosses struck back thru the police and 13 workingmen were thrown into a patrol wagon and rushed to the La Salle street police station.

Union Prompt in Defense.

All the workers were bailed out promptly by the union and they will have the services of Attorney Oscar Nelson and associate counsel in the fight to defeat the employers' conspiracy.

Nine of the workers were arrested in Blum and Kempler's plant on S. Market street. Pickets were inviting the sweated employes of this notorious anti-labor concern to join the big walkout and men and women were beginning to come out.

Jack Blum, brother of the proprietor, used foul language at them, the strikers say, and with some followers, attacked them. An army of police came in response to a hurry call and commenced rounding up the pickets and strikers.

Blum Arrested Too.

Blum went with them to the police station but found himself held there on a felonious assault charge, preferred by Abraham Abronitz, a striker whom he had charged first with the same offense. The other eight, whose names are printed elsewhere in the DAILY WORKER, are charged with disorderly conduct and all will be arraigned in Harrison street court this morning.

Four others were arrested in the Alvin Dress company's plant on S. Market street at the call of the proprietor.

Strike in "The Loop"

ACKSON and Market streets, the heart of the dressmaking industry in Chicago, was a scene of surging crowds from 10:30 to 11 yesterday morning as thousand of garment workers left their machines in a great movement for the 40-hour week, more wages, sanitary conditions in the shops and maintenance of the unemployed.

Union and non-union alike were in the masses of men and women workers who filled the pavement and began marching towards the halls at 20 W. Randolph St. and 180 W. Washington St., where they would be mobilized into picket squads.

"Whole Shop Out!"

"My whole shop came out with me," a bright eyed Jewish girl said.

"There are only two scabs left in mine," answered another girl who said she worked in Fried's, on Market street.

This conversation the reporter heard was paralelled in front of almost every door in the congested industry area between Van Buren and Adams streets. There are some big scab shops still running but the union expects to get them out before the week is over.

Pickets Force Them Out.

The strike moment was 10:30 but it was not for another fifteen minutes that the streets were jammed. Many of the workers in non-union shops were hesitant. Their bosses were cajoling and threatening by turns. Girl's heads popped out of the windows, tho, and the sight of the crowds outside encouraged them. Pickets forced their way past the guards posted at shop doors, in many cases, and cried to the timid to join their fellows in the great strike—volunteer pickets these, expelled militants among them.

The sight of the enthusiastic crowds on the street was discouraging to the boses. I saw one bosses' face, a fat picture of woe, looking out of a window lettered with the signs "Stylish Stout"—referring to the goods, not their owner.

Cops and More Cops.

Police were there, trying to move on the crowds—police on foot and police mounted on their brown charges. But there were not enough cops on hand to suit the bosses: the crowd wasn't moving on fast enough and more workers, encouraged by the sight of the masses outside, were coming down the long stairs of the lofty buildings and adding to the crowds.

So one boss sent in a riot call. Came a rattling patrol wagon. A

FIRST ARRESTS IN BIG STRUGGLE FOR BETTER DAY IN NEEDLE TRADE

The following strikers were arrested on the first day of the dressmakers' struggle as they were taking part in the strike at Blum & Kempler, 170 W. Adams street.

Charged with assault:
ABRAHAM ABRONITZ.

Charged with disorderly conduct:
HYMAN GOLDMAN.
SAM ROSE.
CHARLES KOFF.
LOUIS ISMAN.
HARRY MATTEN.
JOSEPH GALLER.
DAVID KLESMAN.
BORNEY BORNATSKY.

Amalgamated Will Support Strike of I. L. G. Workers

"The great strike of the dressmakers of Chicago has the support of every member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union," said A. S. Fisch, secretary of the Chicago Joint Board of the Amalgamated, last night.

Fisch said he was speaking as a union member, not an official. The Joint Board meets tomorrow and will discuss ways and means of assisting their comrades of the ladies' garment industry.

A closer feeling of sympathy will come between the two unions as a result of the strike, Fisch said he felt certain. In New York relations between the two organizations are excellent as an effect of the support they have given each other in struggles.

Expelled Left Wing Unionists Aid Strike Against Sweatshops

Evidence of a desire for harmony with the left wing expelled members during the strike was shown yesterday afternoon when Dora Lipshutz was invited by Harry Rose, who is in charge of the strikers' halls at No. 180 W. Washington street, to assist the strike committee.

Miss Lipshutz was an active union member who was expelled for her affiliation with the Trade Union Educational League, which is working for progressive policies within the union.

Expelled members gave valuable aid in picket work yesterday. Clara Gabin, Israel Litwinsky and Jack Perry were among those who were on the front of the picket line.

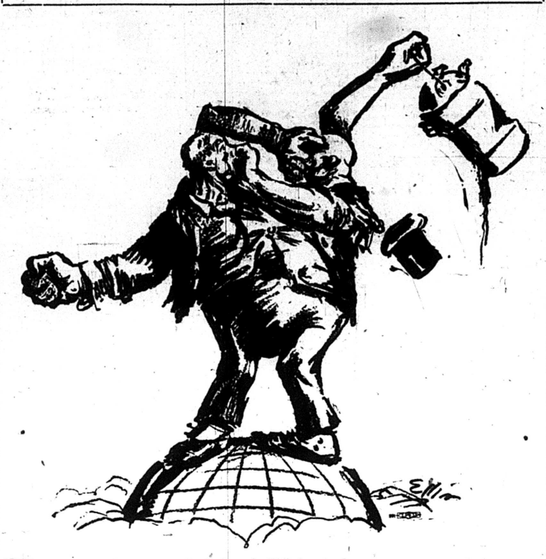
WAR GRAFT PROBE IN SIX DEPARTMENTS ORDERED BY SENATE

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 27.—The treasury, war, state, interior and navy departments of the government as well as the shipping board will be investigated by the senate committees as the result of six resolutions that were passed by the senate today.

The investigators will try to find if it is true that a person with political influence could collect huge sums from the government by filing a claim for imaginary damages.

The claims, most of which grew out of alleged violation of war contracts by the government involve scores of million of dollars. Sensational revelations are sure as a result of the investigations.

TO THE FINISH



Capitalism Is Fighting It Out.

Employers Dictate To Teachers Thru National Educational Ass'n, Sinclair Tells In Series of Articles

Big Business does not only control the education of the workers' children thru the local boards of education. Big Business also controls education thru the professional organization of teachers, known as the National Education Association, or "N. E. A." This is not a teachers' union—far from it. It is against the things a union is for.

Read what Upton Sinclair, author of the celebrated book on American education, the "Goose Step," has to say of the "N. E. A.," which is now having a convention of its superintendents' organization in Chicago. The chapter here given, and the ones to follow, are taken from Sinclair's latest book the "The Goslings."

* * * *

By UPTON SINCLAIR
Author of "The Goslings."

WE now ascend to the top of our great school pyramid, the National Education Association. This is the professional organization of the educators of the United States, and as such it possesses tremendous prestige and power in the educational world. You probably know very little about it, and may think that it has nothing to do with your local schools; but in this you will be deceiving yourself, for its influence is none the less strong because indirect.

What the N. E. A. does is to set the standards of the school world; in its councils, open or secret, the thing called educational greatness is determined.

Who are the "great" educators of America? Who are the ones that really know how children should be taught and what they should be taught? Do you know who they are? Manifestly you do not; you have to be told who they are, and the function of the N. E. A. is to tell you. It is the dispenser of educational prominence and applause. The final test of greatness in the school world is to be invited to deliver one of the addresses before its annual convention; while to have your name added to the list of presidents of the organization is in the school world the same thing as it is in public life to have your name added to the list of presidents of the United States, which every school child has to learn by heart. You step out before this vast assemblage, amid a flutter of applause, and tens of thousands of teachers and sympathizers absorb your utterances, and carry them away to the farthest hamlets—this is what is known in America as "inspiration." The local newspapers print your address in full, and the Associated Press sends a summary of it to its thirteen hundred leading newspapers. Thus, if you are a reactionary, you help to set backward the clock of American history, and to render the position of your capitalist employers secure. If you are not a reactionary, then you do not get within many feet of the platform at the N. E. A. convention.

There are at the present time a hundred and twenty-five thousand members of the N. E. A., and they pay dues at the rate of two dollars per member. More than 80 per cent of them are the plain, ordinary, humble, rank and file class room teachers, whose function is that of the day laborer in the great corporation—to produce the wealth, while their superiors spend it. You will be told that the N. E. A. is a democratic organization, and you will understand what this means when I tell you that Tammany Hall also is a "democratic" organization. New members are welcome, in fact, they are eagerly sought—"drives" are carried on, and the prestige of schools is established by the fact that they have one hundred per cent membership in the N. E. A. Some school systems are even going so far as to make membership in the N. E. A. compulsory to all applicants for

MORE MINING FATALITIES IN ILLINOIS STATE

Brother of Union Secretary Dies in Belleville

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 27—Bodies of two men, killed in a dust explosion late yesterday in Citizens' Coal Mine, west of here, were recovered early today by a mine rescue crew.

The men were shot firers and were the only workers in the mine when the blast occurred.

A mule tender, who sought to rescue the mules after the explosion, was gassed but will recover.

Union Leader's Brother Killed.

BELLEVILLE, Ill., Feb. 27.—Edw. Nesbit, 42, was killed yesterday in a fall of slate in the St. Louis and O'Fallon mine number 2 here. Another miner was crushed badly in a previous accident the same day.

Nesbit was a brother of Walter Nesbit, secretary of the Illinois Mine Workers' Union.

Rumor Several Hurt in Big Accident at Fair on State Street

The Fair, one of the largest downtown department stores on State Street, was closed today.

Officials of the store announced that a large electric cable had been broken in the boiler plant, putting lights and elevators out of commission.

A report that several persons were injured was denied.

Workers Elect Spokesmen to Apply for Membership in Russian Party

(By The Federated Press)

MOSCOW, Feb. 27.—Applications for membership in the Communist Party of Russia have flooded the party offices. This in the face of the stringent test one must undergo to enter, in face of the onerous duties imposed upon party members, in face of the control the party exercises over its members, and in face of the tremendous deductions made from the salaries of party members for unemployment and for party work.

Groups of working men have elected men from among their number who are politcally most active and most likely to get into the party, to act as their representatives within the party. Thus a curious phenomenon has developed—men and women are being elected for the purpose of applying for membership.

Tried to Work on Walsh to Save McLean From Telling About $100,000 Given Fall

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The names of Oscar Underwood and William G. McAdoo, both candidates for the democratic nomination for president, have been found in telegrams submitted to the Senate Oil Investigating Committee in secret, and which will be made public tomorrow, a committee member told the DAILY WORKER correspondent this afternoon.

Underwood, the committee member said the telegrams disclosed, was to be approached by A. Mitchell Palmer, former attorney general and counsel for E. B. McLean, Washington Post publisher, to "work on Senator Walsh in an effort to have him refrain from questioning McLean regarding a loan of $100,000 to Albert B. Fall."

McAdoo and his son, Francis H. McAdoo, a New York lawyer, were named in a telegram sent by McLean from Palm Beach to one of his employes in Washington. In this telegram, the Senate committee member said, McLean told his man here to go to New York and "see McAdoo. You can trust him. Either he or his father has been my personal attorney for seven years."

Apparently the efforts to get Underwood and others to "work on" Walsh were unavailing, for according to the committee member who told of the as yet undisclosed messages one of McLean's men wired him a little later that "We are helpless. It's no use to do anything more. Walsh is in a fighting mood and has set his jaw."

Some of the telegrams which will be read tomorrow are understood to be in code, the word "apple" designating one man and "cherry" another.

Committee members indicated today that Francis H. McAdoo, A. Mitchell Palmer, "Doc" Smithers, White House telegrapher; John Major, employe of McLean, and possibly others mentioned would be subpoenaed.

Smoot and Lenroot Admit Warning Fall of His Danger

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—Senator Lenroot, chairman of the Teapot Dome Committee, revealed today that he and Senator Smoot had a heretofore secret conference with former Secretary of Interior Fall, just before Fall told his first story as to where he got the $100,000 for his ranch improvements.

The significance of this revelation lies in the open charge of Senator Walsh of Montana that republican members of the investigating committee attempted to hinder his inquiry until "the scandal" was really brought to light.

Lenroot and Smoot went to Fall's apartment at the Wardman Park hotel during Christmas week.

The complete story of the Wardman Park conference was told to the DAILY WORKER today by Senator Smoot.

"Lenroot and I went out to see Fall at Wardman Park. We told him everything in the record had been explained except where he got the money for the improvement of his ranch," said Smoot.

"He told us he borrowed it from an old friend.

"'I'm not a pauper; I can get money when I want it,' Fall said.

"'Well, Albert, why don't you tell the committee where you got it?' we asked him.

"'It's a private matter,' Fall answered.

"He was a sick man then. He was lying on a couch and perspiration was streaming from his face."

Poor Hearing.

Lenroot says that Fall said, as we were leaving, that he got the money from Edward B. McLean, but I did not hear that.

"We went there as friends to get him to clear the matter up for his sake, the committee's sake and the sake of the public. This was a few days before he sent the letter to the committee that he got it from McLean.

"I have never sent a telegram to Fall or received one from him since then.

"The only communication I have had with him was when J. W. Zevely (Harry Sinclair's Washington attorney) called me on the telephone from New Orleans and told me Doheny was coming to Washington and tell it all. He then said 'Albert Fall is here and wants to talk to you.'

"Fall told me that he would arrange to come up later, that both of his daughters were ill and that he could not come at that time.

"It was two or three days before Senator Fall wrote his first letter to the committee," Lenroot told the DAILY WORKER. "Both Senator Smoot and myself insisted that he come before the committee and tell the whole truth.

"He made us a definite promise that he would and told us that he had obtained the money from an old friend here in Washington. I am sure he said he obtained the sum from Edward B. McLean."

Admit Lies.

Both Fall and McLean later admitted that this story was untrue. McLean said that he had given checks for $100,000 to Fall but that Fall had returned them and they were destroyed without being cashed. Washington bankers, however, testified McLean's checking accounts were as low as $4,950 around this time and at no time within a year had they totaled anywhere near $100,000.

The fact that Lenroot and Smoot, ranking republican members of the investigating committee had gone secretly to see Fall was never revealed to the Fall committee.

"That is the only conversation I had with Senator Fall since the matter of the $100,000 was first brought up," Lenroot said.

These reports prompted Walsh to investigate the files of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies for records of all messages sent from Washington to Fall or McLean at Palm Beach or New Orleans.

Secret Hearing Continues.

This examination was resumed today by the committee in executive session.

Files of the Postal were submitted today. After all the messages have been examined those which are believed to be pertinent to the oil investigation will be made public.

The name of a "Francis McAdoo" was found in one telegram sent to McLean, committee members said. In others the name "McAdoo" was discovered. Members of the committee are attempting to identify "Francis McAdoo." The telegrams did not make clear his connection with

REED HINTS BRIBERY OF OFFICIALS FROM THE PRESIDENT DOWN

HANNIBAL, Mo., Feb. 27.—"If the Cabinet is not purged soon, President Coolidge should resign," was the message Senator James A. Reed carried in his campaign for the endorsement of his home state for the Democratic presidential nomination today.

In a speech here last night, Reed said he believed "bribery was not confined to Fall."

"After the war, word got out of Washington that you had to get a man with a pull instead of a lawyer, to do your busines.

"Doheny bribed Fall. He also hired McAdoo to work with the Wilson administration of which he had just been a part."

Reed charged McAdoo sold his influence to the movies, under the guise of "legal ability."

"All he did was don a cowboy hat and hair leggings and have his picture taken with movie stars."

OIL SKIDS FOR DESCENT OF DAUGHERTY

Hectic Secret Session Says He Must Co

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—Attorney General Daugherty will leave the cabinet; the only question remaining to be decided is when and how he shall go, it was learned today on the authority of those close to President Coolidge. An announcement will be made within 48 hours.

Conferences scheduled for today between Mr. Coolidge and his advisors and with representatives of the Attorney General are expected to crystalize an understanding on the date and manner of Daugherty's withdrawal from public life.

The attorney general is understood to be holding out determinedly for postponement of his resignation until after the senate committee to be named under the Wheeler resolution has given him a public hearing and an opportunity to defend himself against charges that he has not vigorously prosecuted offenders and that his conduct of the department of justice has weakened public confidence.

Daugherty Stubborn.

Conferences which lasted until late last night failed to bring the attorney general around to the view of those who feel he should get out now. It was suggested that Daugherty agree to withdraw if Senator Wheeler would drop his resolution for a senate investigation. This suggestion, it was understood, did not get far.

The utmost secrecy was maintained at the White House and among Daugherty's advisers regarding the White House conferences yesterday. First Paul Howland of Cleveland, Daugherty's personal counsel, saw President Coolidge.

Then Daugherty, Secretary of War Weeks and Postmaster General New talked for more than an hour with Mr. Coolidge. Howland went back to the White House in the afternoon and last night Daugherty was in consultation with the president for nearly two hours. He left that conference worried and curtly refused to discuss what went on.

Senator Curtis, republican whip of the senate, also was called on by Mr. Coolidge during the day. Curtis explained the parliamentary situation regarding the Wheeler resolution which has been reported from committee and is ready for action.

Slemp In Sessions.

With the unexpected summoning to the White House last night of C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, it was thought for a while that Daugherty's resignation would be announced then. Slemp conferred with the president, William M. Butler, manager of Mr. Coolidge's campaign for the presidency, and Frank W. Stearns, close personal friend and adviser of the president.

The dating of Daugherty's resignation sufficiently ahead to give him time to meet the charges against his administration of the department of justice, still seemed today to be one of the most likely solutions.

Emporia Paper Makes Statement.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 27.—William Allen White of Emporia, Kansas, here on a brief visit, gave out the following statement on the oil scandal yesterday:

> If I were a republican in the senate, I should offer an amendment to the Wheeler resolution calling for the investigation of Daugherty, and in the amendment I should add the name of A. Mitchell Palmer to the resolution.
>
> If the democrats did not vote for the amendment their refusal would put the hand of insincerity on them. If they did vote for the amendment it would keep the democrats busy explaining in the campaign and prove that it is not one party or the other that is crooked but the loose and disillusioned times.

Daugherty and Burns Desperate As Investigation Heads Their Way

By JAY LOVESTONE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—Everything in Washington is done in oil today. You can't talk to anybody for even a few minutes without stepping into some oil cesspool.

The scent of oil is everywhere and it has irritated and made raw the nostrils of many an old political war horse.

Daugherty Center of Attack.

Just now Daugherty is the high light of the republican tragedy that is being enacted here in countless scenes and indefinite acts. Yet, the attentive observer feels that at any moment something bigger might break, new oil deposits might be discovered, and new Teapot Cabinet heroes or presidential secretaries might be uncovered.

The leadership in the present fight on Daugherty has fallen on the shoulders of the junior senator from Montana, Burton K. Wheeler. In launching the attack on Daugherty Mr. Wheeler has picked for himself the job of cracking the hardest and toughest nut in Coolidge's whole hard-boiled Cabinet. The attorney-general knows the rules and ruses of the political jungle perhaps better than any man in the wild thickets of politics today. Wheeler knows what he is up against, but he is determined to go thru with the fight.

One of the senators who has been in the thick and thin of the present oil fight told me: "This time Wheeler is going to get him. This is a finish fight on Daugherty. And, by God, I know there is nobody and nothing that can stop this from being a finished fight, with Daugherty being counted out. Wheeler won't stop even if he has to draw Daugherty into all the prohibition scandals which may pull Mellon and others along with the attorney general into even worse messes."

Strikebreaker-General Fights Back.

The attorney-general has already marshalled his force for a fierce counter-attack. I have learned from most reliable sources that William J. Burns, at the express orders of Daugherty, has wired his numerous agents in Montana to rush Wheeler's war record and everything else they have on him to Washington. Daugherty has sent out his entire squad of Burns bomb agents with strict orders to shoot to kill the truth about Wheeler in order to rattle a few skeletons in the Senators face. It's plain that Daugherty hopes thus to draw away from himself some of the scorching publicity.

The Attorney-General is now making full use of the elaborate, detailed card-index system that his bureau of investigation headed by William J. Burns has compiled on every "dangerous" progressive Senator and Congressman. Daugherty's first denunciation of Wheeler's resolution was vociferous but undamaging. It was the hackneyed, old, thread-bare attack of Burns that Wheeler was a Bolshevik and was once the I. W. W. candidate for office in Montana.

Crime For Wheeler to Know Dunne.

Daugherty is planning to brand Wheeler as a pro-German and to lash him for his alleged failure to prosecute certain cases during the war while he was Federal District Attorney. One of the worst crimes charged to Wheeler by the Burns blast is that he was "a firm friend of William F. Dunne, a publisher at Butte, who is known to have exceedingly radical tendencies" and now is serving as one of the editors of the DAILY WORKER.

People here don't take the Burns-Daugherty counter-offensive seriously. Everybody knows that Daugherty should be the last one to say a single word about not trying sufficient war cases. The Attorney-General's own record in the war fraud cases, for instance, has, to date, been of not trying cases often enough and failing all too often when he did attempt to try such war fraud cases. And as to Burns, it is common knowledge here that his detective agency was extensively employed by the Imperial German Government during the war.

To Be Forced Out.

"And what about Daugherty's threat to take his case to the people?" I asked the Senator. "That's all bunk. It's rot. Daugherty once tried one of his cases before the people in his own state of Ohio when his record wasn't half as notorious as today and he was licked to a frazzle by an opponent, who was practically unknown, for the office of delegate to the Republican conventions. Daugherty of course, dare not go out to tell all he knows about almost everyone of his colleagues. His quitting is only a matter of days. We will force him out and rid the country of his baneful presence in the high post which he now holds in the government."

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

By LAURENCE TODD.

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—From coast to coast, and from centre to circumference of the nation, said Borah in an impassioned talk to the Senate on the Daugherty scandal, the people are distrustful of the head of the Department of Justice.

They have no confidence in either the competence or the cleanliness of method of some of the highest officials in their government. For the continuance of this situation only Calvin Coolidge can be held responsible. As president of the United States he has sole responsibility for Daugherty's continuing, from hour to hour, at the head of that vital department—the most important of all the executive departments of the government—when the country is aghast at wholesale violations of law.

There is a lot of senatorial courtesy and dodging of hard words, in any discussion of a cabinet member by a prominent leader of the same party, even when that cabinet member is Harry Daugherty and that leader is Borah. But the meaning of the Idaho senator's talk was quite clear; he was warning Coolidge that Coolidge himself would soon be considered to be "oiled" and politically ruined if he did not kick Daugherty out and put a responsible and capable man into his place.

National Chairman Adams might try to bolster up Daugherty with what Senator Robinson called "a wild cry of rage" at Lodge and Pepper and the republican membership of the senate, who had asked Coolidge to get rid of the attorney general. Adams might claim that "blackguards and scandal-mongers" in the senate had conspired to ruin Harding's friend. Yet, Robinson said, the country was aware that the only activity to which the agencies and resources of the department had yet been devoted in this gravest of all national scandals was to organize for defense of Daugherty. This fact of stubborn failure to uphold the law against lawbreakers, known to the people, would amply justify the instant removal of such an officer while official inquiry into the details of his official conduct was being arranged. Daugherty was entitled to a fair trial, but he was not entitled to the privilege of blocking the enforcement of law while this inquiry into his past offense should be in progress.

Editors all over the country who have hastily guessed that the oil scandal is dying out, merely because it is embarrassing to Calvin Coolidge, must revise their opinions. Denunciations of Senator Wheeler and crocodile tears for the physical collapse of Senator Walsh are premature. The two senators from Montana are getting at the stock gamblers names, and winnings or losses are being uncovered, and every day further names are being added to the list of politicians or public officials here who have been parties to the oil graft orgy. Doheny is just now attacking Wheeler for saying that Doheny went to Daugherty's apartment, but he is not saying that Daugherty did not visit Doheny's apartment in the Wardman Park hotel here. The half of the intrigue has not been told.

Cabinet changes are rumored so frequently that it seems certain that a number of resignations will soon be filed. Hughes is said to have been ready to quit, for a month past. He wants to get back into the profitable practice of law. Unlike James M. Beck, solicitor general and chief defender of Daugherty, who formerly was one of Standard Oil's lawyers and attorney for the sugar trust, Hughes has not yet made a fortune.

Hoover has recently found desirable jobs, in private business, for a number of his friends in the department of commerce—the kind of protection that a man generally tries to give his friends when he is leaving a big public job. Hoover has quarrelled with Wallace, head of the department of agriculture, and he has disliked the association with Daugherty in the cabinet. With Daugherty gone, he might take Hughes' job if the latter quit.

Wallace is ready to resign, because he no longer agrees with the president or with Secretary Mellon or Hoover as to help for the farmers. He has been driven to endorse the McNary farm export credit bill, which is to be substituted in congress for the more radical Sinclair-Norris bill for federal control of farm marketing at home and abroad.

Friends of Borah wonder whether he will be a stampede candidate against Coolidge, in the Cleveland convention. A book of his speeches, just published, shows that he has drawn a sharp line between himself and Coolidge, on the Russian question, freedom of speech, constitutional guarantees of liberty, imperialism, and many other issues. He will be a factor in the Cleveland convention. He may even become a sort of salvage contractor to gather up the wreckage after the oil scandal has battered the administration to bits. The Old Guard is afraid of him, yet dare not read him out of its inner councils. He will probably make the one notable speech of the entire convention.

Only a Barber Shop Fire.

PEWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 27—Fire which started from an unknown cause in the Christofferson barber shop here late yesterday, destroyed three buildings in the heart of the downtown district here and seriously imperiled other business structures. The loss is estimated at $10,000.

the case. William McAdoo's son is named Francis.

Open hearings will be resumed tomorrow.

McLean Informed On Oil.

Francis H. McAdoo, son of Wm. G. McAdoo, democratic candidate for president, has been definitely identified by the senate oil committee as the "McAdoo" mentioned in different telegrams sent E. B. McLean, Washington publisher, during his recent sojourn in Palm Beach.

Official announcement that the mysterious "McAdoo" was the son of the democratic leader was made by Chairman Lenroot of the committee after the telegrams had been read today.

All the messages made public showed how closely McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, was kept informed of Washington developments regarding the naval oil scandal.

Names of many persons who have figured in the inquiry were mentioned in them.

Signed by Major.

John K. Major, one of McLean's employes, signed many of them. They disclosed:

That Major advised McLean to install a leased wire between Washington and the McLean cottage in Palm Beach, Fla., "to provide easy and quick access to the White House," and also because "of the congressional situation."

That Major had talked with "Smithers at the White House." Smithers is chief White House telegrapher.

That Major was in communication with Albert B. Fall, who was in Washington at the time.

Major referred to Fall as "the man at Wardman Park hotel." He also stated he was in close touch with J. W. Zevely, attorney for Harry F. Sinclair, who leased Teapot Dome.

Matter Very Important.

Fred Starek, of the war finance corporation, was anxious to get in touch with McLean "on what he says is an important matter," Major wired on one occasion, adding he did not believe it was about "the main issue," but about "a New York transaction."

Starek, Major said, thought, the matter important enough to make a trip south to see McLean about it, but as he was ill, Starek asked McLean to call him on the long distance telephone.

Major was also in communication with McLean, the telegram shows, over the departure of Wilton Lambert, McLean's attorney, for New York and the delivery of a message from McLean to Lambert there.

Another telegram mentioned the name "McAdoo," saying Major would "deliver message re McAdoo." Another said, "Talked over long distance with McAdoo."

A message from Major dated Dec. 25 stated:

"After talking with Dunphy over the telephone tonight I again talked with J. W. Zevely. He said that the matter would be attended to in a manner which would meet with your approval.

(Signed) "MAJOR."

Telegram dated December 26 and signed by Major follows:

"Palmer and his associate named Zevely told me tonight that under no circumstances should you send a message to the chairman of the committee. They both said to assure you that your interests would be fully taken care of and at this time the chances of you being called were very slight. Both declared that after the man at Wardman Park Hotel testified that if the committee showed any indication that you were to be summoned that they could take care of it. From the present outlook I personally believe that everything is well in hand from your standpoint. Sinclair is to testify tomorrow. He is going to issue a statement to the committee before he goes on the stand. The high spots in it are that he is going to refuse to discuss his private affairs concerning his friends who are not in any way connected with the transaction. I will have the statement in full on the wire to you before noon Thursday. Fred Starek is anxious to get in touch with you on what he says is important. I do not believe that it is in connection with the main issue on this wire, but believe that it has something to do with a New York transaction. He said that it was important enough for him to take a trip South to see you, but on account of not being well, requested that you telephone him.

(Signed) "Major."

Another message to McLean was dated "The White House." It said:

"Telegram received. Have wired Wilkens at Hopkinsville, Ky.

(Signed) "E. W. STARLING."

Starling is a White House secret service man.

Make Wires Public Thursday.

"I saw the secretary and he said the whole matter would be dropped after Sinclair had been questioned perfunctorily," another message to McLean from Major said.

On January 2 Major wired McLean that Palmer said he had "other people working on Walsh."

The committee adjourned until tomorrow when the remainder of the telegrams will be read. They will not be made public until then.

Scab Coal Baron, Slemp, Private Secretary to Coolidge, Makes Pitiful Witness in Oil Scandal

By LAURENCE TODD

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—President Coolidge's private secretary, Bascom Slemp, a millionaire non-union coal operator, was a pitifully evasive witness when he came before the committee investigating the oil scandal, on Feb. 26, to explain his meetings with Edward B. McLean, Albert B. Fall and Fall's lawyer, Glasgow, at Palm Beach in December and January. He could remember that McLean, walking with him on the sand, had said "I'm going to tell 'em all," but he had not asked any questions.

He remembered that Fall, after a dinner at McLean's house, where they all met daily, said that he, also, was going to tell the whole truth. Still the secretary to the President asked no questions. And he did not report to Mr. Coolidge on the confessions of the former cabinet member and the owner of the Washington Post that they had deliberately lied to the Senate committee.

The Innocent Slemp.

He was just an innocent tourist, and an old friend of McLean!

Word had run about the capitol that the foxy Slemp was to be questioned as to certain telegrams of warning, from leading Republican senators on the committee, to prospective witnesses. There had been a "leak" of information that subpoenas were to be issued, and the men wanted had had private information that they would be summoned. Slemp was not asked directly as to whether he had heard of these private tips to witnesses, but Sen. Walsh did ask him how long before Walsh arrived in Palm Beach the McLean-Fall house-party had been informed of his coming. Slemp thought they learned it first from the newspapers. Really, they had been thinking of other things, talking about the Volstead law and the weather, senators, and the oil case had not been much discussed!

Worthless Checks.

When Mr. Coolidge's confidential man was asked how it happened that he could meet and talk with Fall in Palm Beach, while Senator Walsh, representing the committee, could not get at the ex-cabinet member, Slemp replied that he was "not Mr. Fall's or Mr. McLean's keeper". He had never had anything to do with the oil leases, and did not care to ask questions.

In the hope of locating the hidden funds against which McLean drew the alleged checks for $100,000 which he claims in his last story he gave to Fall—and then received back and destroyed—the committee questioned officers of the three local banks in which McLean had funds in October and November, 1921. He never had more than $41,000 in any of these banks in that period, and most of this time his balance was below $5,000 in any of them. The checks he says he gave seem to have been worthless if they ever existed.

Doheny New Leader.

At the White House, the flag of loyalty to Daugherty still flew, and much satisfaction was taken in the fact that Doheny had come to the political support of the president and Daugherty and Denby. But on the Senate floor the daily offering of attacks on the Senate committee and on the Wheeler resolution aimed at Daugherty's misuse of the Department of Justice, in McLean's newspaper, was torn to tatters by Walsh and by Heflin of Alabama.

Heflin pointed to Doheny's "new leadership of the Republican party", and to Doheny's admission that he talked European oil, at the millionaire Metropolitan Club here, with five members of the Harding-Coolidge cabinet. He remarked that Doheny could not be expected to see anything but prosperity under Republican rule, since "he has got his, at the hands of this party", and the bankruptcy and despair of the farmers and small business men does not touch him.

The Ghost at the Feast.

Walsh of Massachusetts interrupted him by reading a telegram from Fall River, begging for federal aid because the cotton mills are all closed down, and suffering has followed general unemployment.

H. Foster Bain, chief of the Bureau of Mines by appointment under Fall, was grilled by the committee as to the meaning of his letter, previously put in evidence, urging that Daugherty be asked to give a favorable opinion on the tankage contract deals, since Standard Oil and other big interests had refused to bid because they were illegal. Walsh asked him why he had not insisted on getting the opinion before the contracts were let, and why he had considered it unwise to seek an opinion afterward.

Bain, who proved adroit, stubborn and ingenious in protecting the game of Fall and Doheny and Sinclair, admitted at last that he did not—altho a federal officer sworn to protect public interests—want to run the risk of getting an adverse opinion on the secret oil tankage "a very grave matter". Hence he helped to cover it up.

Pinchot Says Palmer Aided S. P. in $500,000,000 Steal

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—The name of former attorney general A. Mitchell Palmer has been brought into the naval oil lease reserve controversy by Governor Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania.

Pinchot, speaking before the Survey Associates, Inc., here last night, said that "in 1920 Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, without a fight, turned over $500,000,000 of oil lands from our public domain to the Southern Pacific railroad.

"Palmer refused to appeal to the United States Supreme Court from the decision of a lower federal court favorable to the Southern Pacific."

Former Secretary of the Interior Fall, chief figure in the oil lease investigation, "was also involved in the last and most dangerous attack on the national forests," Pinchot said.

"He tried to get them transferred from the department of agriculture to the department of the interior so that he could give them away to private interests, as he did the oil lands."

Injunction Suits Will Decide Government Right to Own Oil

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The government's case for cancellation of the oil leases granted by former Secretary of Interior Fall and Secretary of the Navy Denby to Edward L. Doheny and Harry F. Sinclair will virtually stand or fall by the outcome of injunction suits shortly to be instituted to halt withdrawal of oil from the reserves.

Because of this, Atlee Pomerene and Owen J. Roberts, special presidential counsel, in whose hands President Coolidge has placed prosecution of the cases, were taking "exceptional pains," it was stated, to be ready to fight out the major issues of the case at an early stage of the battle. This, it was said at their offices, explains the delay in taking definite action.

Pomerene and Roberts believe that the defendant oil companies will force the government to show its hand almost immediately after suit is filed to check further oil losses from the reserves. As soon as temporary injunctions are asked, the counsel anticipate that Sinclair and Doheny will ask the courts for immediate hearings on making the injunctions permanent, forcing the government into the open.

Criminal Action Later.

This applies only to civil suits. Whatever criminal action may be contemplated will be taken later, with the convening of a special grand jury.

The task of Pomerene and Roberts, it was explained today, is difficult because of mountains of documents and testimony to be examined on the one hand and the unavailability of much of it for court use on the other.

With six assistants, they are holding daily conferences, sifting the material turned over to them by the senate investigating committee and searching the books for applicable laws.

Finnish Workers Pledge Their Support to the DAILY WORKER

DAUGHERTY IN FLIGHT; CHICAGO AND FLORIDA

Left His Resignation with Coolidge?

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—Attorney General Daugherty today left Washington on a trip to Chicago and Florida.

His office announced that the trip was taken on personal business.

Daugherty's unexpected departure came at a time when he was believed to be preparing a statement announcing his intention to resign or remain in office. He conferred with President Coolidge twice during the day and announced he would have an important statement to make later in the day.

Instead he motored to the station after his second conference with the president and took a fast train for Chicago which was held five minutes in order that he catch it.

Some time after Daugherty's departure, his office announced that he was going to Chicago on government business and then was going on to Florida on "personal business."

There was no mention made in the statement of his resignation other than to say the department was "functioning one hundred per cent."

The statement issued at Daugherty's office follows:

"I have been called to Florida on a personal matter but I am compelled first to go to Chicago to attend to important government business which demands my personal attention.

"I will return from Florida as soon as I can. In the meantime, proper attention will be given to all government matters. The department of justice is functioning 100 per cent. Tho temporarily absent, I shall, nevertheless, be in constant touch with the department. Several important cases and other pressing matters which require my personal attention will be taken along with me in order to facilitate action thereon."

Daugherty arrived at the station accompanied only by W. J. Burns, department of justice director of investigation, and his secretary. Burns did not take the train with him.

It was reported at the White House that Daugherty had left his resignation with the president before leaving town.

Fight on to Appeal Conviction of I. W. W. Defense Secretary

By MIRIAM ALLEN deFORD.

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Feb. 27.—Futher light on the exact nature of the arrest and conviction of Tom Connors, secretary, California Branch General Defense Committee, on a charge of jury tampering, is given as an investigation of Judge C. O. Busick, the condemning judge, continues in the fight for appealing Connors' case.

The circular which formed the basis of Connors' conviction was one of 20,000 sent broadcast thru the state in favor of the repeal bill against the criminal syndicalism law introduced in the state assembly last year by Assemblyman Roy Fellom. The juryman, H. D. Arnold, whom Connors has accused of "influencing," Connors himself never saw. Arnold was not even actually a juryman in any criminal syndicalism case, but simply on the venire. The circulars in question were sent out not only from defense headquarters, but also from several other organizations interested in repealing the bill. There is no evidence whatever that the particular leaflet in question was ever sent out by Connors.

If this conviction stands it means that any agitation against a law affecting court procedure may make its opponents responsible for suborning a jury if by the merest chance some of their propaganda should fall into the hands of a man or woman who has been, is, or may be on a jury trying a case of the nature concerned, and who takes it upon himself to pass the appeal on to the prosecuting attorney, as Arnold did.

It is a direct blow to the referendum in California.

KILL RADICALS, IS DOCTRINE OF PLATOON ZEALOT

Dr. Tigert Boosts For Robotizing Education

Shall the platoon system of education rule in all the American schools. John F. Tigert, U. S. Commissioner of Education says it shall and yesterday he opened his Chicago conference in furtherance of this idea which appeals so much to American capitalists.

Meanwhile the Chicago teachers' union is considering what action to take to prevent this robotizing system from being applied in Chicago.

Execute Radicals.

Tigert, who is spending Uncle Sam's money to push the platoon system is perhaps the most reactionary commisioner of education who ever held that office. He has said that he believes in putting radicals to death.

Upton Sinclair quotes him in the "Goslings" as warning San Diego school teachers against the increasing tendency of the public schools to delve into sociology and economics, as subjects perilously close to radicalism. Tigert continues:

> There is altogether too much preaching of these damnable doctrines of Bolshevism, Anarchy, Communism and Socialism, in this country today. If I had it in my power I would not only imprison, but would expatriate all advocates of these dangerous, un-American doctrines. I would even execute everyone of them—and do it joyfully.

What an "Educator" Thinks.

In a speech before the Des Moines convention of the N. E. A., Dr. Tigert said that the vote for Debs proved that 900,000 Americans were advocating the abolition of all law, all constitutions, and all forms of government.

Tigert is an ardent Coolidge man. The platoon system will be further encouraged at the National Educational Association's sessions today, at the Auditorium Theatre.

Last night Dr. Tigert was toastmaster at an affair at the Hotel Sherman at which addresses were made by William Wirt, superintendent in Gary and originator of the notorious Gary System which is now masquerading under the more polite "platoon" name, and by Dr. P. P. Claxton, former U. S. Commissioner of Education and now superintendent at Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Candidates for Presidency.

Milton Potter, superintendent of schools in Milwaukee, is leading candidate for the presidency of the N. E. A. at the elections to be held at the end of the week's convention.

Potter has the support of the American Book Company, which is the leading source of supply for school text books.

Another candidate is William McAndrew, superintendent of schools for Chicago.

Rumors of Bulgar Revolt Continue to Flourish in Athens

ATHENS, Feb. 27—An unconfirmed report from the Bulgarian frontier today said Premier Zankoff, head of the revolutionary government, has proclaimed a republic. Troops immediately issued a counter-proclamation in favor of a Communist state, the report said.

(Rumors of trouble in Bulgaria and that King Boris was about to be overthrown have reached Athens persistently within the past few days. They have been as persistenly denied by the Bulgarian legation in London.)

MacDonald, Pacifist, Poincare, War Lord, Leary of Teutons

PARIS, Feb. 27.—Premier Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain has sent a note to Premier Poincare, urging the necessity of renewal of armament control of Germany. The conference of ambassadors will examine into the facts immediately.

Storm Hits Shipping.

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 27.—A terrific storm struck Norfolk early today, damaging crops and property. Rain, hail, and later snow, accompanied the storm. The wind increased hourly and by 9 a. m. had reached 50 miles an hour. The storm played havoc with shipping in Hampton Roads and coastwise steamers were delayed.

Forest Fires Cause Big Damage.

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., Feb. 27.—Forest fires in the foothills caused $200,000 damage before being brought under control by 500 workers.

The Youth in Russia

William F. Kruse, who recently returned from Soviet Russia, will speak on the "Youth of Russia".

In the DAILY WORKER there recently appeared a series of articles on the Russian Youth by Comrade Kruse. Now he will relate in person all his impressions gathered during his stay in Russia. This meeting will be held at the Workers Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Blvd., Thursday evening, February 28th, at 8:15.

The lecture is being held under the auspices of the Maplewood Branch of the Young Workers League. Workers old, and young are invited. Admission free.

Strike Starts in the Loop

bevy of bluecoats trotted out with thundering voices crying "Move on!"

Red strike calls, distributed by the union in the morning, told the workers the addresses of the buildings on W. Randolph and W. Washington streets where they were to get instructions and form shop strike committees.

Many Read Daily Worker.

This strike call was reprinted in its entirety in The DAILY WORKER, the only Chicago daily paper to give prominence to the strike. Many strikers had copies of The DAILY WORKER.

The workers from the union shops went to the W. Washington street address, where meetings were held on three floors and the workers from the non-union factories went to W. Randolph street where two huge halls were thronged with the people from the sweatshops.

Union officials spoke at all the meetings, urging the importance of faithful work on the picket lines and pledging the support of the international union.

Federation Aid Pledged.

Charles Wills, of the machinists' union, spoke, representing the Chicago Federation of Labor, and stirred the strikers to enthusiasm at halls in both buildings. He told them that the federation would give them all possible aid because this fight was the fight of all labor.

Wills painted a heart-rending picture of the sweatshop in the home, where father, mother and little child toil sorting out beads and putting them on gowns for almost nothing at all, and said that the strike must end forever this evil that was destroying the lives of the people who were sweated at home but was, by its competition, depressing the conditions of the factory worker.

One demand of the strike is for the elimination of home work.

David McVey, also spoke for the Chicago federation, and the support of the general body of labor of Chicago was again pledged. McVey spoke at the W. Washington street halls and Jay G. Brown, of the Farmer-Labor party addressed the workers at W. Randolph street.

Lining up of non-union strikers into the ranks of the International Ladies' Garment Workers was the next step on the program, following the speeches, and then shop groups were brought together separately and divided into picketing squads.

Strike meetings will be held every morning at 10 o'clock in both buildings—besides those taking place in the West Side Auditorium at W. Adams and Racine streets, and at Schoenhofen Hall, Milwaukee and Ashland avenues.

100 Per Cent on the Northwest Side

APPROXIMATELY 1,500 strikers gathered in Schoenhofen Hall, 1214 N. Ashland Ave., at 10 o'clock, yesterday morning to listen to plans for the conduct of the strike.

The chairman of the meeting announced that every union shop on the North-west Side came out 100 per cent and the great majority of the non-union shops. The cloak makers went out to a man.

Sluggers in hundreds are employed by non-union shops to prevent the pickets and organizers from appealing to the employes to quit work and join in the organizing campaign.

The strikers were given instructions to be on the job every morning at 7 o'clock and to report again at 12 o'clock. From now on, declared the chairman, this strike is a serious matter and every striker must be willing to carry out instructions.

Several speakers addressed the meeting in foreign language and T. J. O'Flaherty, of the editorial staff of the DAILY WORKER, spoke briefly, assuring them of the hearty cooperation of labor's only English daily in the city of Chicago.

"The DAILY WORKER," he declared, "is always with the workers in their struggles against the bosses. Our paper will back you up in this strike, encourage you and give your side of the fight the widest publicity. On your part, there must be solidarity and enthusiasm. The clothing manufacturers will have the capitalist press on their side, the police and the judges. You must rely on the assistance of your fellow workers."

Meetings will be held in the same hall every morning until the strike is over for the strikers on the north west side.

Good Spirit on the West Side

WORKERS in the west side dress and waist shops yesterday quit work and went on strike, taking their place in the general strike called by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union to demand better wages, shorter hours and decent working conditions.

Hundreds of workers from scores of shops went to the West Side Auditorium to organize themselves for the strike. The cloak makers of the west side district came out in full force to help the dress and waist workers.

As soon as the workers from the shops assembled, they began to organize themselves for picket duty. Mollie Alterman, in charge of picketing, told the strikers that this strike was not a vacation but it meant work for every striker. Picketing would win the strike, she said. As every worker came into the hall he or she was required to register their name and address with Philip Hauser, who is in charge of the strike on the West Side for the strike committee.

After the workers had been registered and the strikers had been assigned to picket duty, Hauser asked the cloak makers who were returning to work to go to the Perfection Dress company, 1011 Roosevelt road, and ask the workers there to come out on strike.

Strike Perfection Shop.

About a dozen cloak makers who were returning to their work in the neighborhood of Roosevelt road went to the Perfection shop and talked to the workers, who were going out to lunch. After a little good natured chatter the girls who had been working in the shop agreed to go on strike and went to the strike headquarters and registered.

The pickets who were assigned to duty went out and picketed the shops without any disorder. In the neighborhood of several of the shops young fellows of the amateur hard-guy type hung around and watched the picketing. They did not try to interfere or cause any trouble.

HITTLER AND LUDENDORFF ON TREASON TRIAL

Both Plead They Were Out to Destroy Labor

MUNICH, Germany, Feb. 27.—Declaring that Germany would be saved on the day the last Marxian was destroyed, Adolf Hittler, Fascisti leader on trial here for high treason, took the stand in defense of General von Ludendorff, leader of the "beer hall" Bavarian revolution.

The trial was held today at the war academy behind barbed wire and bayonets. Dr. Frederick Weber, head of the Oberland Bund, one of the most important of Bavaria's Fascist organizations, took the stand and testified that the purpose of his organization was to create a new fatherland, by destroying the labor unions and the radicals.

His organization wanted the leadership of Ludendorff as he was the proper man to lead the German "whites" against the radicals and the Jews.

Hittler's testimony was sensational. "I am absolutely anti-Semitic," he declared. "I am a fanatical nationalist. I joined the German army during the war (Hittler is an Austrian) rather than the Austrian, because I felt Austria's fate rested in Germany's hand." Referring to his anti-war activities he declared: "I wanted to create an organization to break down the Communists."

Ludendorff wanted to follow in Mussolini's footsteps. "I only wanted to do for Germany what Mussolini did for Italy," he said. "I do not wish to disavow Hittler but I was taken by surprise when the rebellion came off."

The gallant Ludendorff is now trying to squirm out of his predicament. He is willing to throw Hittler to the wolves in order to save his own hide. Judging from his easy manner in court he does not fear any punishment.

Tikhon, Former Russ Patriarch, Is Dying of Heart Disease

MOSCOW, Feb. 27.—Former Patriarch Tikhon is dying of heart disease, his physicians said today.

The churchman, former leader of the Russian Catholic Church, has suffered several severe attacks during the last 24 hours.

Tikhon drew world wide attention a year ago when he was arrested by the Russian government for advocating resistance to the confiscation of church property by the state, to aid the starving population.

Tutyshkin to Speak.

Prof Tutyshkin, director of Moscow Medico-Pedological Institute who has been giving a series of lectures in Chicago and Milwaukee will lecture for the last time in Chicago at the Russian Technical School Auditorium, 1902 W. Division St., on Sunday afternoon, March 2nd, at 2 p. m. sharp.

The subject of his lecture will be "Rejuvenation of Humanity." Admission 25 cents. Every body who understands Russian cannot afford to miss this most interesting lecture.

Professor Lectures for Y. W. L.

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 27.—Prof. Orlando Norris, of the State Normal College at Ypsilanti, Mich., will deliver a lecture on "Education" at the headquarters of the Young Workers League, 2119 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, on Saturday, March 1st, at 8 p. m. This is part of the educational campaign being conducted by the Young Workers League. Everyone is invited to attend, especially the young folks.

FRENCH PACT BRINGS DOWN BELGE CABINET

Overthrown When It Spurns Poincare

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BRUSSELS, Feb. 27.—The Belgian cabinet went down with a crash today following a discussion on the Franco-Belgian economic convention which provides for the redistribution of the profits from the Ruhr-Rhine occupation including operation of railroads, mines, coal deposits, forests and shipping.

By a vote of 95 to 79 the parliament defeated the government and rejected the economic convention.

Premier Theunis went to the palace at once and handed in his resignation with those of his ministry to King Albert.

Big Gifts Taxed 40 Per Cent Under Bill House Passes

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—After a bitter personal row between Chairman Green and Representative Mills, New York, the House today adopted Green's gift tax amendment, designed to stop tax dodging. The vote was 191 to 65.

Green's amendment would impose a tax of one per cent on $50,000 gifts increasing to 40 per cent on gifts of $10,000,000 and over. Gifts to charity are exempt, under the amendment.

A definite division in House progressive ranks opened the way to an eleventh hour compromise on the income tax rates in the new revenue bill.

Mexican Government Will Strip Revolting Fascists of Property

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 27.—The possessions of all fascisti will be taken over by the state as a punishment for their rebellion, according to government decision. As the big landowners were among the counter-revolutionists, if this decree is seriously carried out, it will give a big impetus to land redistribution, cutting thru many legal obstacles. The new emergency governor of Zacatecas, Ezequiel Salcedo, labor leader, has done a little confiscating on his own hook. Finding the landowners in rebellion and the treasury empty, he proceeded to take the wealth of the fascisti landowners for the treasury and is distributing the land among the peasantry.

Bok Is Imitated by Banker Offering a $25,000 Peace Prize

A Detroit banker, now living in California, has deposited a check for $25,000 to be given the winner of a new "Educational Peace Plan," Dr. A. O. Thomas, Augusta, Me., announced here today in a speech to the superintendence section of the National Education Association Convention.

Dr. Thomas said he was acting as agent for the banker and that all peace plans must be submitted to him. He refused to name the banker, stating the donor preferred to remain anonymous. The plans must be in his hands by July 1.

McNary Grain Bill May Pass Senate, by Bankers' Aid

(By The Federated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—A favorable vote by the Senate committee on agriculture, on the McNary grain export marketing bill, with possibly the addition of some features of the Norris-Sinclair bill, is likely before the end of February. The Wheat Growers' Association, National Grange, Farm Bureau Federation, National Farmers' union, and many bankers' organizations have endorsed the McNary measure while opposing the Norris plan of permanent government operation of the marketing of farm products.

Party Industrial Organizers, Cleveland, to Meet on Friday

The industrial organizers' meeting for Cleveland will meet next Friday, Feb. 29, 8 p. m., at Labor Temple, 2536 Euclid avenue, in the Workers Party office.

This meeting is of very great importance. Every branch industrial organizer is urged to be present, and all tailors who are members or sympathizers of the Workers Party in Cleveland are invited to attend.

This Professor Will Never Become a Pal of William J. Bryan

BERLIN, Feb. 27.—Dr. Adolf Heilborn, Berlin physiologist, has started a storm of controversy in the medical world by announcing that newborn babies frequently have tails, which they can wag. The tails disappear rapidly as the infant grows, Dr. Heilborn claims.

British Shipowners Gains in 1923 Netted 60 Times Sum Dockers Asked

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 27.—British shipowners who have been fighting the dockers' demands for a two shilling raise on the plea of "poverty" netted profits in 1923 that total sixty times the amount asked by the workers, according to figures obtained by the dockers' organizations.

The total profits for last year are listed at 122,584,064 pounds for 1,351 shipping companies. The two shilling day increase would amount to an annual charge on the industry of only 2,000,000 pounds. Publication of these facts reduces the "poverty" plea to absurdity.

9.8 Per Cent Profits.

These 122,584,064 pounds profits represent a profit of 9.8 per cent on the total capitalization of the 1,351 companies, which is listed at 1,254,000,000 pounds. The actual percentage of profit is much greater for shipping stock is notoriously watered.

Last year's profits were 28,000,000 pounds, or 30 per cent greater than the profits of 1922. While the shipping lords were piling up this fabulous wealth the London, Liverpool and Manchester papers were urging the workers to accept reductions as a patriotic means of restoring industry.

The Peninsula and Oriental steamship company alone netted 350,000 pounds last year. It was a good year for all the big transportation concerns. Crying "poverty" they sought to cut wages and boost freight rates, while they made more and more money.

40 Shillings Average Wage.

Less than 40 shillings a week are received, on the average, by workers in the larger ports. Daily wages on a full time basis, would run at 10 shillings in the larger ports and nine shillings for the smaller ports—or four and five shillings, respectively, less than the very conservative estimate of a living wage made by the Shaw commission. Actually few workers get regular full weeks' work.

CO-OPERATION

Office of the Postmaster, Chicago, Illinois

"An efficient postal service is dependent in a great degree upon close co-operation between postal workers and the public," says First Assistant Postmaster General John H. Bartlett, in an appeal for better service. "Better mailing means improved postal service. The postal service is the people's service; it is the greatest of public utilities, reaching the most remote parts of the country and serving the greatest number of people. A full and mutual understanding is essential. We must know the needs of the public from a postal viewpoint in order to supply them. The public must have the widest knowledge of the postal service and its requirements before it can extend its full co-operation. The 'Better Mailing Week' will serve to promote this understanding.

"Complaints should never be handled perfunctorily," continues Mr. Bartlett. "Ascertain the patron's trouble; correct it if you can, and if not explain to him fully. Make him a booster rather than a knocker. He will appreciate attention and courtesy. Teach him that good postal service depends upon a complete street and number address, with the stamp in the upper right hand corner, the return address in the upper left hand corner, and the prompt deposit in the mails as soon as the letter or package is ready."

This is good, sound advice. If we follow it we will get what we want: A BETTER POSTAL SERVICE.

Pruning Knives Stop Work on Tax Bill to Mourn Harding

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—Work on the new revenue bill was laid aside by the House as congress did homage to the late President Harding. Under the surface there were rumblings that threatened tax reductions.

Outstanding developments were:

1. The split in progressive ranks, brought about by the Longworth compromise, was widening, despite denials from progressive leaders.
2. Administration republicans, dissatisfied with amendments that have been written into the bill, which they declare will cause a deficit of $350,000,000 in the treasury, threaten to vote against the bill.

Most of the major amendments have been disposed of and a final vote on the measure is expected by leaders not later than Friday.

An amendment by Representative Clancy, Michigan, cutting taxes on automobiles and the provision that a board of tax appeals remain to be passed upon by the House.

STERLING, Colo., Feb. 27.—A total of five have died as the result of botulism following the eating of poisoned meat and physicians fear one more will not recover. Eight others taken ill at the same time are believed past the crisis and hope is held out for their recovery.

Current Issue of Soviet Pictorial Has Fine Lenin Article

"Lenin was personified realism," answers an article in the March issue of Soviet Russia Pictorial to the accusation of labor's enemies who love to quote Princess Radziwill's "smart" accusation that he used "empty phrases to sway empty heads."

Just how realistic Lenin was in all the problems confronting him in his leadership of the revolution makes interesting reading in the splendid summary of his life and actions in the current issue of this magazine.

The article is dotted with photographs of Lenin in his youth, his widow, and the picture of both from the police records of the days of the Czar.

Besides these and one of a close-up of Lenin's body lying in state, the issue contains a full page photograph of Lenin published for the first time in this country. It is an excellent souvenir issue for the files of every worker's library.

Great Britain's recognition of Soviet Russia, Soviet censorship, the latest developments in America's attitude towards Russian recognition, and first-hand information on conditions in Germany are dealt with in timely and interesting articles. Soviet Russia Pictorial sets a high standard.

Anna Louise Strong to Speak on Her Russian Experience

We know that you are interested to know the truth about Russia.

Who can tell the truth? The kept press has been telling its readers so many conflicting stories that even the most docile reader is disgusted and does not believe it. The Communist Press? But the Communists are the rulers of Russia and therefore are suspected of being partial.

There is an opportunity to hear the truth from the mouth of an impartial observer, Anna Louise Strong, who just returned from Russia, where she stayed for almost three years as a correspondent for The Federated Press. As a correspondent she was able to observe more and better than any other individual. As a capable writer and lecturer she will be able to tell what she has seen.

Anna Louise Strong will lecture on the Truth About Russia, Saturday, March 1, at 7:30 p. m., at the Russian Technical School, 1902 W. Division St. Admission 25c.

Daugherty's Friend Selects Committee for Whitewash Job

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb. 27.—The senators selected by Frank B. Willis of Ohio to investigate the conduct of Attorney General Daugherty will surely meet with the approval of Daugherty if not of Senator Burton K. Wheeler the author of the resolution to let some fresh air into the Department of Justice.

With the exception of two, the suggested members of the committee are guaranteed to give Daugherty a nice coat of whitewash. Senator Willis is the friend and protector of the attorney-general.

The members of the proposed committee are: Wesley Jones, Washington; Richard Ernst, Kentucky; Bert Fernald, Maine; Samuel Shortridge, California; Robert Howell, Maine, and William Morah, Idaho. Only the two latter could be by any stretch of the imagination considered capable of giving an impartial trial. The majority of them are already predisposed toward Daugherty.

WEALTHY WOMEN FELL FOR FRANK'S MOVIE PROMISES

$500,000 of Stock Was Quickly Sold

By CYRIL LAMBKIN

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 27.—Detroit workers were treated to a picturesque illustration of what is meant by "incentive", which according to the upholders of the present order is the motive power behind all progress. The illustration, curiously enough, came in the form of lawsuits started by a number of creditors against the Detroit Motion Picture Co.

The moving spirit behind the organization of the Detroit Motion Picture Company was one Frank L. Talbot. The "incentive" for organizing a motion picture company in Detroit apparently was the number of persons, particularly wealthy women, who could be inveigled into buying stock. The plan was novel but was crowned with immediate success.

Promised Place In Movies.

Clever stock salesmen sold stock to wealthy women, promising them try-outs and parts in the forthcoming production. Stenographers and other office girls yearning for romance amidst monotonous routine work were not overlooked either. In order to cover the promises with the cloak of probability, a studio was built, out of the proceeds of the first sales of the stock, and prospective purchasers were invited to come to the studio and take a "camera test". The "tested", generally, were advised to take a course in a motion picture training school in this city. The bait proved excellent, for within a comparatively short time approximately a half million dollars worth of stock was sold. Society women and debutantes proved the best fish.

The Company produced one picture called Mary. Kennet Harlan, a regular star was brought here for two days to play the leading male role. The leading female role was played by the wife of the promoter Mr. Talbot, undoubtedly for a stellar salary. The many women stock purchasers were given roles in the mob scene.

Then the drama was begun outside of "Mary". The half million dollars were gone, several bills remained unpaid, and the picture was not yet shown. When the suits were filed Mr. Talbot went to New York to market the picture, but he returned a few days ago with the film in his pocket, and the Michigan State Securities Commission at his heels.

The present "incentive" episode was not the first in the life of Frank L. Talbot. In 1916 he managed a charity bazaar for the United German Societies and Churches the proceeds of which were to go for the benefit of the war widows and orphans. Under the terms of the agreement entered into between himself and the committee representing the German organizations he was to get 40% of the gross receipts. He wished to include in the gross receipts money contributed directly to the war widows and orphans fund which had been in existence previously. And altho the dispute which arose as a result of this was settled Talbot's reward for his incentive was almost $40,000.

Riga Lies Losing Their Welcome in Most Newspapers

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—It is interesting to note how small has been the crop of anti-Soviet canards from Riga, Helsingfors and other borderland "listening posts" during the past two weeks.

It would be an error to suppose, however, that the rate of bunk production has decreased. It has increased, as a matter of fact, as any one of New York's newspaper and news service editors might inform you. With the Soviet being recognized by Italy, Norway, Austria, Great Britain—Riga saw the necessity of starting new revolutions within Russia—saw the necessity of setting the Soviet Government at its old occupation of "tottering on the brink."

Trotsky was exiled; the peasants rose by the millions; the Communist party was split in a dozen warring factions. For a day or two the Soviet tottered in obeyance to the string pulled by the rumor manufacturers—tottered, that is to say, in the columns of the Times and the Boston Transcript, etc. But the game, once played with so great a zest, seemed rather flat; and the Federated Press is reliably informed that the Soviet is not likely to collapse, much less totter for some months. The point is that the rumors are still being manufactured wholesale, but they are not getting into the newspapers.

Get This Tangle Straight.

CANVASSERS WILL RAISE FUNDS FOR GERMAN WORKERS

F. S. R. Wants Volunteers for March 9

Volunteers for a day's house-to-house canvassing in behalf of the starving German workers Sunday March 9, are asked by the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers Germany. The men and women who will give their time to the cause of their comrades across the seas are urged to send in their names promptly to the organization's office at Room 307, 166 Washington street.

Aid from the American workers will not only help to keep the German workers alive, says the F. S. R. appeal. It will also keep alive their faith in the internationl revolutionary movement.

Russia, Holland, France, America and Czecho-Slovakia hastended to give aid at the first call but in view of the immeasurable need this aid must be vastly increased. The appeal follows, in part:

Today the metal-workers of Berlin are on strike—tomorrow perhaps, it will be the printers—the chemical workers. In the next few weeks in the Reich and in the various states, about a million civil servants will be thrown on to the street. On the grounds of the Special Powers Act, the regulations for the welfare of the young, care of invalids and protection of mothers and children are all set aside and unemployed benefit has been abolished. Every widening circles are handed over to death by starvation or thrust into strikes. But if strike struggles are to have any hope of success, then it is a case of forward with the mass kitchens for the strikers and their families, with money and food from other countries.

Do not forget the families of political prisoners. The bourgeois state refuses to support them. They also need energetic help. The International Workers Aid takes in all those in need so far as its means and resources allow.

Mysterious Fire Sweeps the Wabash Shops in Decatur

DECATUR, Ill., Feb. 27.—Fire which swept the Wabash shops here early today was brought under control after a bitter battle by the entire fire department.

Starting in the coach shops the flames consumed six buildings in the Wabash yards including the coach shops, two office buildings, water supply service station, blacksmith shop, twelve passenger coaches and a large string of freight cars, at an estimated loss of $250,000.

Cause of the blaze is undetermined.

Bach's Passion Is Superbly Rendered by the Apollo Club

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN

Bach's "Passion According to St. Matthew" was performed for the first time in some years by the Apollo club at Orchestra Hall on Feb. 25. Bach once declared that "music is for the glorification of God, and for pleasant recreation."

Generally speaking, to modern ears the music that old Bach wrote for pleasant recreation offers nothing but an interesting technical display, or the delights of a nap in a chair at a concert hall. But his religious music is some of the finest that the world affords. The Christ myth, with its elaborate system of enslaving belief will pass into the dust heap of dead legends, but the music that it inspired will remain and live.

A Long, Dreamy Revery.

The Passion music is an elaborate setting of that part of the gospel of St. Matthew that deals with the crucifixion of Jesus. It calls for a large chorus, solo voices and orchestra. The music contains little that can be called dramatic or exciting; it is the long dreamy revery of a soul completely at peace. The tenor solo carries the burden of it, with occasional solos for other voices with the chorus singing the words of the mob in the story.

Richard Crooks, a singer not very well known hereabouts, sang the tenor part superbly. His is one of the few voices to which the hackneyed adjective "golden" can truthfully be applied. His interpretation left nothing wanting. He was thoroly in the meditative, unperturbed, spirit of the calm, faith-inspired genius whose music he sang.

The other soloists, Else Arendt, Mary Welch, Burton Thatcher, and John Barclay had little to do, Mr. Barclay's few arias showed a voice pleasant in quality, but somewhat deficient in power for his part.

The Apollo club is a chorus of some three hundred amateurs directed by Harrison Wild, who is probably the most able choral director in the city, and the effects its members accomplish are those to be expected from an excellent chorus with a conductor of Wild's ability.

The club announces for its last concert this season, to be given at Orchestra Hall on April 7, Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and "Resurgam," by Henry Hadley.

The Discussion Within the Russian Communist Party

NOTE—The DAILY WORKER will publish, from day to day, in full, the important discussion taking place with the Russian Communist Party that has been grossly misrepresented by the capitalist press. In an introduction to this discussion, issued by the International Press Correspondence, it is pointed out that this is the third great discussion that has taken place within the Russian Communist Party since the victory of the workers' and farmers' revolution in 1917. This introduction, which will be followed tomorrow by the speech of Kamenev, chairman of the Moscow Soviet, at the meeting of the functionaries of the Moscow party organization, is as follows:

• • • •

THE third great discussion since the victory of the proletarian revolution in Russia is taking place in the Russian Communist Party.

The first discussion dealt with the Brest-Litovsk peace, with the question whether we should take up arms against the German Imperialism. The Bolsheviki were victorious in the "armed discussion" against the Mensheviki and Social revolutionaries, but they were too weak for an "armed discussion" with "German Imperialism" which, at that time, was still armed to the teeth.

The second discussion in the party took place in the year 1920. After the victory of the Russian Workers and Peasants in the War with Entente Imperialism and the inner counter-revolution, the Russian peasantry numbering many millions, began a "discussion" on the so-called War-Communism. The debate arose on the question of the Trade Unions. The originators of the discussion could not understand that the question was identical with the problem of the relations to the peasantry, as was the case also with the discussion on the Brest-Litovsk peace.

The discussion ended at the 10th congress in an extensive compromise with the peasants in the new economic policy, as well as with the consolidation of the party unity according to the line laid down by Lenin, i. e. the strict prohibition of any formation of factions or groups within the Party.

The roots of the third discussion can be traced back to the discussions over the Brest-Litovsk Peace and the Trade Unions; only the number of those comrades who fought on the side of the opposition against Lenin's line, has grown smaller (altho the leading personalities of the opposition are practically the same now as they were during the former grouping against Lenin's tactics). The attack of the opposition is directed precisely against those principles of the Party, which in former discussions were accepted as the decisions won by Bolshevism in a twenty years struggle.

As at the time of the debate regarding the trade unions, so also now in the third discussion the main question remained in the background. The discussion did not rage round the new economic policy or the relations to the peasantry (these questions seemed to play only a subordinate role), but round the question of the limits of democracy inside the Party.

The resolution of the Central Committee unanimously carried at an opportune time, afforded not the least point of attack for the opposition. The opposition was therefore obliged to seize on the decisions of the 10th congress on Party Unity and on the old guard of Bolshevism, who constitute, so to speak, a personal guarantee of unity.

A victory on this question, or at least, the winning of a concession from the Central Committee would have given the opposition an opportunity to begin their attack on the economic front, in regard to the question of relations to the Peasantry. It has now become clear during the course of the debate, that the opposition was not able to develop a positive economic program, which was considered by any great number of comrades as worth disputing.

Thus nine tenths of the discussion turned upon the question of organization. Just this fact will render the discussion irrelevant for the masses of the membership. Workers Democracy with the Party was realised for the Masses of the Party Members thru the thesis of the Central Committee. The discussion concerning this question was, in its form, its extent and its method a proof that all demands for guarantees for the realization of inner Party Democracy were groundless. There is not perhaps a single party nuclei in the Communist Party of Russia, where the widest and freest discussion was not held or will be held. There was not a single casa where the apparatus, which formed the butt of the oppositition, has limited the liberty of debate. The masses of the party members too have likewise not regarded inner Party Democracy as a gift coming from above, they sought and found the guarantees for the carrying out of the decision above all in themselves and in the old guard of Bolshevism which has been well-tried in the struggle against opportunism.

The demands of the opposition to have the liberty of forming factions was energetically refused as threatening the Party Unity. The great mass of the party members were conscious of their responsibility not only to the Russian proletariat and the Russian peasantry, but also to the International Communist Movement and whole-heartedly supported the Central Committee in this question.

The discussion showed that the collective judgement of important questions of the Soviet Union and the Party do not in any way require the formation of factions within the Party. The unity of a governing Party, which is responsible in the first place for the international revolution, cannot be hazarded even for the shortest time without the most serious consequences.

The Party was no less unanimously in agreement with the Central Committee in the second question: the question of the relation of the old Bolshevist guard to the young party generation. In the Communist Party of Russia every current which is directed against Lenin tactics meets with the most violent opposition from the disciples of Lenin, of the old Bolshevist guard. This guard however, was not at all isolated in the battle for the defense of those results which were immediately attained under the leadership of Lenin.

Thus, as the demands for Liberty for faction building were rejected by the mass of the party members, the old Bolshevist guard discovered the young party members to be on their side against the attempt at splitting the Party according to generations. The declarations of the Leaders of the Youth League, of the Youth organizations of Petrograd and other industrial centres, stand opposed to the decision of a few University Party nuclei, who demand liberty of forming factions. The unity of the old and young Bolshevist guard was not only not shaken during the debate, but strengthened by the fact that the youth gained an insight into the roots of the discussion, which dated back as far as the old struggle of Bolshevism. It was only now that they began to understand the real import of the old struggles within the party.

The result of the discussion will be decided at the All-Russian Party Conference. According to all indications, there is no longer any doubt as to what form the decision will take. Not even a very small minority have definitely adopted the standpoint of the opposition. On the other hand, the overwhelming majority (in some districts 90 and even 100% of the membership) declared themselves to be absolutely for the old Bolshevist guard.

The great majority of the Party took full account of the fact that the Communist Party of Russia is not merely one of the Communist Parties, but is a governing party, whose crisis is at the same time a crisis of the proletarian state, that the Communist Party of Russia is the leading party of International Communism and its crisis means a crisis for the Communist international.

The overwhelming majority of the Party, soberly and without faction hatred, pointed out the political faults of the leaders of the opposition. At the same time not one of the comrades of the majority thought of taking advantage of these faults to render the position of the leaders of the opposition impossible, or to deprive them of their positions.

The Communist Party of Russia will emerge from this discussion, no only richer in experience, but mor firmly united and with more closely consolidated ranks.

THE LITTLE GREY DOG

By Herminia Zur Muhlen.

(Synopsis: Little Benjamin was a negro slave who lived with his mother Hannah and his father on a southern plantation in the days of negro slavery. He had just saved a little grey dog from being drowned by his rich master and was feeling happy. The daughter of the rich man then came down from the northern states and wanted her father to give her a black slave as a servant.)

* * * *

THE rich man thought a while and said, "The young slaves that I own are all clumsy, incapable; the old ones of course could not become accustomed to living in a large city and would be more trouble than help to you. Whom can I give you?"

He considered for a moment, then cried happily, "Now I know, Hannah is just the right one for you. How could I forget her? Of course, she has a little boy. . . ."

"I don't want him," the daughter interrupted. "My dear little son must not play with a dirty Negro child. You can keep Hannah's son here."

"You are a good mother, my beloved child," said the rich man, moved. "You always think of your son. Good, Benjamin shall remain here and when you go back to the city tomorrow, I will give you Hannah to take along. I will immediately tell the overseer, so that he may tell her to be ready."

And the rich man called a servant and bid him bring the overseer.

Ah, what a sad night that was in the little hut of the Negroes. Poor Hannah hugged her little son close in her arms and cried as tho her heart would break. Her husband Tom sat gazing at her with worried eyes and was so miserable that he could not say a word. Hannah kept looking anxiously toward the little window, trembling with the fear of seeing the first ray of light that meant that day was near, when she would leave her loved ones.

The little grey dog seemed to understand the grief of his friends, he nestled quite close to Hannah's coat, looking up at them with loving, clever eyes. Then Hannah cried loudly, "If they sell you, too, Tom, what will become of our poor child?" the little dog laid his paw on little Benjamin as tho to say, "Don't fear, poor mother, I will take care of him."

Hannah noticed this, sobbingly patted the shaggy head of the dog, and said to him, "Guard my little boy, you good little dog. We are all as helpless and deserted as you."

The following morning, poor Hannah, weeping bitterly, rode off with the young woman. Her family was not allowed to see her off, for Tom had to work in the field and Benjamin, like all the slaves, was forbidden to come near the house of the rich man.

Little Benjamin lived thru many sad days. His father was so unhappy that he no longer wanted to work, and many evenings he would return home with his back all bloody. Instead of the carressing and joy to which Benjamin was accustomed there was a strange silence in the house. Tom sat sadly on the ground, sometimes stroking the wooly head of his little son, but never speaking. Only once in a while he would cry out, "Hannah!", sigh deeply, while great tears rolled down his black face. And sometimes he would clench his fist, looking so angry that Benjamin took the little dog and crawled into a corner with him.

The overseer was always unsatisfied with Tom, he complained to the master of the laziness and obstinacy of the slave. Had poor Tom known the results of his disobedience, he would have worked as industriously as he used to, in spite of his anger and unhappiness.

The rich man celebrated his birthday. There was a great feast, chickens and calves and lambs were roasted, the rich foods could be smelled all thru the house, the servants brought countless bottles from the wine-cellar. After supper the young guests danced in the large hall, the older men seated themselves at a table and began to play cards.

The rich man had no luck, he lost again and again, until at last his purse was empty. "One more game," said he to his friend who had won all the money. "We will gamble for my strongest and best slave." And he thought to himself, "If I lose Tom, that will not be a misfortune, for lately he is lazy and obstinate, anyhow."

His friend agreed. The whole life and fate of a human being depended upon a few cards, a bundle of paper. The rich man drew a card, his friend did the same. They threw the cards on the table. The rich man had lost.

When Tom came to work the following morning, the overseer told him to go to the house of the rich man, the master had sold him and his new master would take him to his estate at once.

That evening Benjamin waited in vain for the return of his father. Night came, it was quite dark, and his father did not come. Benjamin sat huddled on the threshold, peering anxiously into the darkness. The little grey dog lay near him. He was sad and quiet, he seemed to feel that something was wrong. At last Benjamin could stand it no longer, ran crying to the hut of a neighbor, and asked about his father. The stout Negress informed him that a strange master had taken Tom with him that morning; he was sold and would not return.

WARRING CREEDS FIGHT OVER WHO IS DEITY'S CHOICE

Religious Bigots Attack "Miracle" Play

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—The way he children of the Lord battle with ach other over the proper way to worship him is regretted by all true lovers of peace. The various religious institutions exact a stiff penny from their followers for guidance along the path of righteousness, and they quarrel with each other like fish wives for the ear of the public.

There is an element in this country which has inherited from the age of religious persecution, a mania for seeing Catholic plots in everything. Quite recently McAdoo was accused of allowing some mysterious papal insignia to appear in the corner of a dollar bill during his administration. And strange to say Mr. McAdoo denied that it occurred during his incumbency. It never happened, of course, except in the diseased brain of some bigoted moron.

In the city of New York three enterprising Jewish theatrical men produced the "Miracle" which is branded as Catholic propaganda in a pamphlet sent thru the mails to hundreds of people in this city. The pamphlet prophesies that God will never allow the Catholics to build a theatre of their own in the Metropolis.

They should not be so sure of that. God has a habit of making the best possible bargain on the basis of friendship for those who can deliver the goods.

The Jewish producers are called "Judas Iscariots" and the poor protestants of America are in danger of being lured from the path of 100 per cent Americanism into the quagmires of Romanism, thus losing "their priceless heritage," whatever that may be.

The pamphlet refers to an incident during a recent meeting of the National Council of Catholic Women, when Archbishop Hayes, who presided, referred to this city as "Catholic New York, with the Cross in the right hand and the Stars and Stripes in the left." This was not balm to the wounded souls of the Protestants.

The leaflet also attacked Sir Esme and Lady Howard, British ambassadors to Washington, appointed by the British Labor Party government, who are on their way here. It appears they are Catholics.

Morris Gest declared the "Miracle" is a work of art and not connected with Catholic propaganda.

There is more easy money in religion than any other line of graft in the country and the leaders of all denominations quarrel like bootleggers over the spoils.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place hunter, and Martuinov, whose middle-class antecedants allow him to fit with some difficulty into the movement to which his idealism led him. In the last issue the party has organized a Saturdaying expedition into the Public Gardens for firewood. Lisa, a school teacher in the Red Army, goes, glowing with ardor for the work. She returns to her rooming house where she finds Repin, the counter-revolutionists who is posing as a revolutionary "military observer."—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

SEREZHA SURIKOV . . . tall and well-made, a little bent, chestnut hair touched with gold, a face, at first sight the most ordinary face of a young Red Army soldier, a handsome lad from the country, but lit from within by some sort of fire that beautified every line of the simple face, like a candle turning an unpretentious lantern into a most marvelous star. A broad nose, blue eyes, soft, humorous mouth, gold hair on his cheeks, upper lip and chin. . . .

Quiet, taciturn, as if he were keeping some secret, he used to come home after a long day's work in the Cheka. His movements were unhurried, like his sensible rarely spoken words. His mother, with affectionate glance, watched every movement of Serezha, listened to his every word, and gave what was left over of her affection to Stalmakhov who was already grown-up, hardened, and forgetful of mother-love, remembering it as something far, far away.

Stalmakhov was sorry for her, found it hard to lie to her and at the same time was vexed that he had not lied more and told her that Serezha had gone to Germany.

Not long before, a woman who had loved him dearly, had given Stalmakhov a little vase as a keepsake. On it was an old-fashioned picture of some sort of amorous fancy. . . . Doves spread cloudy-blue wings over their young. . . . Plump naked cupids were scattered about, and in the middle, on a cloud, sat a shepherd and a shepherdess. The shepherd was playing on a lute, probably playing well, because an affectionately thoughtful smile lingered on her face; a little white lamb was nibbling the flowers of a bouquet she had on her knees. The neck of the vase was made in the shape of a flower, and on the blue were scattered stars, gold and silver ones, and some of the powdered glass that glittered with little fires. . . . He had taken the vase in awkward hands.

"I don't know where I'm to put this pot," he had said to himself, looking round the room, and had put the vase on the top shelf of the what-not. And every morning, on waking, he had raised his eyes to the what-not, and seeing the vase, had remembered her with humorous affection, that incomprehensible woman, alien in ideas and appearance, beautiful, smelling of rare scents, and so dearly loving him, an uneducated workman, who did not know how to speak words of love and had a face eaten over by smallpox.

She was an actress and had soon left the town. He too had gone off on food-work into the country. And when, after long absence, he came back to his room and sought the vase with his eyes, he had seen it standing on the table, covered with dirty ink-spots, with a piece broken out of its neck. It had turned out that Serezha Surikov, not suspecting that for Stalmakhov the vase was a love-token, had used it as an ink-pot. Stalmakhov had been much displeased, but, not saying a word to Serezha, had poured the ink out of it, and had set it on the far side of the what-not, so as not to see it, darkened and dirty, with a thin crack spoiling the tender smile of shepherdess.

And always now, when people gave him something as a souvenir, a photograph or some sort of useless thing, he remembered the vase and took the gift unwillingly. Even the letters he got from his comrades somehow or other got lost.

Suddenly hatred awoke in him. Swine! Swine! That curly-headed boy, so clever, so conscientious, so boundlessly devoted to the Party, buried alive in the ground!

Revenge? But there was no one on whom to avenge him. Rage boiled up in him and he clenched his fists. Then he remembered what Gornuikh had asked him, and the energy of his hate found an outlet. Yes, he would find Klimin and urge him to be on his guard. And tomorrow he would ask the Party Committee to give him a detachment of troops and then he would go and smash up the bandits. But now, at all costs, he must find Klimin. With this idea he went out of his lodging.

Klimin, at the doors of the Party Committee, ran right into Stalmakhov and was amazed at the excitement and bitterness playing on that face, that was usually so calm.

"What's the matter with you?" asked Klimin, greeting him.

Stalmakhov told him of his meeting with Gornuikh and reported all his fears. They walked quietly along the street empty but for children, dogs and hens that bustled away under the gates.

"I tell you plainly, Stalmakhov, I do not know what Gornuikh wants me to do," said Klimin irritably. "All the preventive measures that depend on me have been taken, the guard strengthened at the Communist Company. . . . Karaulov has given the battalion to understand that they must be on the watch. . . . And then, too, Gornuikh has no sort of data. And in any case I am not going to hold up important economic work on account f the premonitions of a single Chekist. There is enough to do without that, what with thinking of everything and foreseeing each trivial detail. One has to do everybody's work, to such an extent are our comrades incapable. Everything is done slowly, people dawdle, and that when the situation is such that we ought to value and make use of every minute. Working with Ziman is torture; you simply can't stir him up. And now Gornuikh with his fears and suspicions. . . . I am sick of things in general today, Stalmakhov. . . . I sent a Chekist into the steppe on an important mission, and the bandits have killed him and now I cannot forgive myself for sending him him at all. He was not fit for such work, too nervous altogether, an intellectual. . . ."

"I knew him. He was my comrade. We shared a lodging. His mother is left. . . ." Stalmakhov's voice sounded duller and duller. "He sent me a note from the station, and asked me, in case of his death, to give you this letter. Here it is."

A few quiet minutes passed while Klimin hurriedly ran his eyes over the letter, finished it and carefully folded it.

"Look here, Klimin . . . tomorrow I'm going to ask the Party Committee to send me out against the bandits. And that filth that killed him. . . . I'll take the skin off them. And now, I beg you. . . . Read me his letter. Every word of Sergei's is dear to me. I'll listen and see him as you read."

"I'll read it," replied Klimin. They sat down on a low bench.

What does it matter if thousands of hopeless ripples and diseased men suffer he tortures of hell so long as a roup of political friends get their due?

Charles R. Forbes was given the ob as head of the Veterans' Bureau, y. President Harding because he ould tell such good stories. Just hat kind they were is not revealed. ut facts just uncovered show that resident Harding chose for one of he most responsible positions in the overnment one of the worst types f criminals, a former army deserter nd a man who was ready to enter ny kind of a deal so long as there as money in it for him. Forbes eaned up $225,000,000 out of the isery and suffering of thousands of -soldiers who fell for "war-for-mocracy" stuff in 1918 or were ced in to the world slaughter thru draft.

While millions of dollars are rob- in the Teapot Dome scandal, ulous sums from the Veterans' eau, and millions yet uncovered, official spokesmen of the Legion such other organizations who at one with the discredited politicians in Washington cry out against a paltry bonus for those who paid the penalty either in time of suffering during the late war.

The war mess, festering for many years, is now beginning to belch forth the most putrid odors. The Teapot Dome scandal is a clear steal; it affects the nation's pocketbook. The Veterans' Bureau graft does more. Besides millions of dollars robbed from the government, thousands upon thousands of wounded ex-soldiers suffer the lack and denial of the most elementary necessities. Unable to procure aid for themselves, they are left to the mercy of the net-work of officials appointed by the criminal Forbes.

Whereas the Teapot Dome scandal deprives thousands of sailors of proper food and clothing, the Forbes steal tears the bandages from sick and wounded men; robs them of medicines without which they are bundles of tingling, painful nerves. Hundreds die because of lack of proper attention; while hundreds more pray for death to free them from their invalid condition.

Forbes alone is not responsible. It is true the entire blame is being shifted to his shoulders but that is to hide the complete incompetency of the war department in its treatment of ex-soldiers.

The last war's victims are not all dead yet and the preparations for new wars goes on apace. Soon brightly colored sign boards and placards will advertise the wonderful summer training camps for citizen's military training. Graft does not interfere with armaments. In the United States they are necessary and unavoidable concomitants of rapid development in any governmental field. The problem that the militarist have to face for the coming years is to cover up the stinking mess so that new steals can be perpetrated and the army and navy built up for future war.

Canadian Railroad Workers Are Urged to Keep Eyes Open

By RICHARD A. SCHAEFTER.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MONTREAL, Feb. 27.—Canadian members of the United Brotherhood of maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shop Laborers will unquestionably be tricked into an unfavorable wage contract or in something still worse by their officers if they don't do some "watchful waiting."

Trouble arose when the railway companies rejected the decision of a board of conciliation granting a wage increase of two cents an hour for men receiving less than 40 cents an hour, while a general increase of five cents an hour originally has been demanded. A strike ballot then was taken and almost 90 per cent of the approximately 30,000 Canadian members of the brotherhood voted in favor of a walk-out. After the arrival here of Grand President F. H. Fjozdal the matter was taken out of the hands of the Canadian Central Committe and the Grand Lodge in Detroit, Mich., was "burdened with the responsibility of calling the strike."

Evidently that delay of the matter should give the "Board of Adjustment No. 1" then in session, time to consider the question. But the board did not give its decision yet. Instead of calling the strike, as was expected here in the ranks of the maintenance men, headquarters sent a letter to the railway association of Canada requesting further negotiations.

The board of adjustment's decision on the matter was supposed to be the last chance offered the railways to come to terms. Now comes another "last chance" and how many more will come along? It seems as if the bureaucrats in the brotherhood's headquarters are trying to kid the workers along until the railway companies are entrenched in such a position that it would be a long chance for the workers to try to come out on strike.

"Bad Man" of Movies Is Badly Beaten by U. S. Custom Guards

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 27.—Tom Mix, killer of bad men in the movies, went to Tiajuana, Mexico recently instead of patronizing home bootleggers and as a result he is just recovering from physical damages inflicted on him by two United States custom guards who greeted him when he returned to the land of prohibition.

According to the story Mix tells, he and two friends were returning from Tiajuana and when they crossed the border they were called into the custom house and Mix was severely beaten up.

"I am going to take this matter up with my congressman," said Tom Mix.

Syracuse Mayor Keeps Up Fight for Rabbit Ideal

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Syracuse has gone the limit to prevent the meeting of the New York State Birth Control Conference scheduled to open in that city next Wednesday and Thursday.

Fearful that milder means might prove unsuccessful, the Syracuse Common Council passed an ordinance reading: "Be it ordained that any persons, who shall congregate for the purpose of disseminating information upon the subject of birth control shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The protest of the Civil Liberties Union is to be supplemented by that of a delegation of Syracuse citizens who will visit Mayor Walreth in an effort to persuade him to veto the ordinance. It is shown, however, that the mayor is quite as hide-bound as the city councilors, and so it now seems probable that the conference will not be held.

Amalgamated Bank Sends Easter Dollars to Needy in Europe

The Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank, as a labor bank, is more after service to the public than after large profits. Fast and effective help to the European relatives of their customers and full satisfaction of their depositors and friends is more important to the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank than the largest dividends.

The Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank has proven it also in the important matter of transferring dollars to Europe and is therefore, recognized thruout the United States and Canada as THE BANK thru which dollars are to be sent and thru which dollars are paid out in the most efficient way in all European countries. Tens of thousands of people from thruout the country, and hundreds of banks send dollars to Europe thru the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank. In Europe it is also well known that the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank is the best bank for dollar payments. This is evidenced by the fact that thousands of people in the United States receive letters from their relatives in Europe to send money only thru the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank or thru those banks that use the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank's service.

Millions of dollars were sent thru the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank and every dollar and every penny was paid out. At a time when the conditions in Europe were acute, especially so in Russia, when people were willing to pay any amount in order to help their relatives thru the system that the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank has introduced for paying dollars to Europe and particularly in Russia, thru the connections with the Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank in Moscow, nevertheless, the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank remained true to the principle of a labor bank and has charged and is now charging absolutely the lowest rates.

In order to attend to the large volume of business that the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago is getting, the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank has established a large foreign exchange department engaging experienced people who know foreign languages. It is very important that bank employes whose duty it is to attend to foreign remittances should know thoroly the language of the country where the money is going to, otherwise remittances are often delayed for months and at times the money is not paid out at all. At the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank such an occurrence is impossible. In the Russian department, the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank employ people with a knowledge of Russian; in the Polish department, Polish, and in the German department, German, etc.

Easter is approaching. Many Americans will send relief to their relatives in Europe and we want to remind them to send only dollars, and that their relatives request them to send dollars thru the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago.

CAR PATRONS SUFFER WHILE SOLONS WRANGLE

Traction Barons Fight Over the Spoils

The term "rapid transit" when applied to the system of locomotion in vogue in the city of Chicago would cause an Egyptian sphynx to distort his face in an uncontrollable fit of laughter. It would make King Tut step out of his sarcophagus and burst his blood vessels with indignation. It is the joke of that part of the United States which is north of the Mason and Dixie line.

The necessity for a subway in Chicago has been conceded by everybody for years. Why is it not dug? Because those who now control the surface lines and elevated and the funny little arrangement known as the Tunnel cannot agree on a division of the spoils.

The politicians who run the city from the City Hall with the sanction of the moneyed interests are in a quandary. They cannot satisfy all the grafters, so the subways are not dug.

The owners of the antiquated elevated and surface lines want to sell out to the city at a big profit. After they have disposed of that much junk they may decide to dig subways and sell them out after a few more years.

Samuel Insull is the traction boss of this city. He could afford to give the elevated lines away for nothing on condition that he has a monopoly on suuplying them with power. Having a monopoly on electric power no matter who digs the subway he will get his.

The capitalist politicians who are now in control are not concerned with serving the interests of those who put them in office.

German Relief Meet Called in Hudson County, N. Y., Mar. 2

JERSEY CITY, Feb. 27.—Thirteen organizations of Hudson county at a preliminary meeting combined to call a conference for German relief which will be held Sunday afternoon, March 2nd., at 3 P. M., at the Socialist Educational Club, 256 Central Ave., Jersey City Heights, N. J.

The conference is called as part of the great New York conference which was held on Jan. 27, at the New York Labor Temple and at which it was decided to raise $100,000 within the next three months.

The call sent out to all labor organizations in Hudson county reads in part: "The International Workers Aid Committee has started large-scale relief for the benefit of the German workers and their families. To date they have opened 50 food kitchens in the chief industrial centers of Germany and are feeding 20,000 workers daily.

All workers organizations should participate to make the conference successful.

Party in Paterson Is to Hold Foreign-Born Conference March 5

PATERSON, N. J., Feb. 27.—A conference for the protection of the foreign-born will be held Wednesday, March 5th, at 7 Bridge street in Workers' Hall. The Workers Party will have its headquarters there and all branches of the Workers Party are asked to be present at the opening Sunday, March 2nd.

The young workers have agreed to take care of the prospective headquarters library. The Comrade Club, composed of high school students and all young people interested in radical activities, are also assisting in making the headquarters attractive.

Educators and Education

The National Education association is holding its sixty-second annual meeting in Chicago. Its open sessions are held in the Auditorium, but the real business is done in the dozens of more or less secret conferences in hotel parlors—at breakfast dinners and luncheons.

The National Education association, in line with the best traditions of American business, is engaged in selling education. It has its own definition of education, however, and in the speeches of the more prominent delegates it is obvious that only doctrines approved by the overlords of finance and industry are listed in the catalogues.

In the present gathering are found almost exclusively those instructors who are holding executive positions—principals and superintendents—and for slavish servility to American capitalist institutions it would be hard to find anoher collection of individuals to compare with it.

The public schools in the United States are today the centers of anti-labor propaganda; in every community the principals and superintendents are merely agents of the chamber of commerce and employers' associations.

Because of their supposed intellectual attainments they exercise a good deal of influence on the masses; they furnish the "impartial" camouflage for the dominant group and in all the rallies and drives for the dozens of bourgeois enterprises they take a leading part.

Those of the educators gathered here who have so far expressed themselves on the platoon system are in favor of it. The platoon system is an extension of the regimenting process that is making automatons of the children of the American workers and approval of this plan by the executives who are members of the national educational association stamps them part of the machinery of capitalist government.

Commercial education and manual training are the keynotes of the present conference. The children of the workers in the grade schools are to be turned into efficient cogs in capitalist industry; those who get as far as high school are to be made into clerks, stenographers, salesmen and advertising men.

Dr. Edwin Broome, superintendent of the Philadelphia schools, has already declared that much of the material used for mental discipline in the public schools should be "weeded out."

Children should not be taught to think, to pursue independent investigations, to cultivate a skeptical frame of mind that makes for discarding of old and useless things, but to obey and worship the dogmas of capitalist society.

To this level has sunk the public school system of the United States, the system that the workers of America many years ago brought into being against the wishes of the ruling class of that day.

From the kindergarten to the universities the youth of the land are taught to hate and despise all activities of the labor movement; either they become, if machine industry does not claim them, the babbitts of the business world or mental eunuchs who take up the task of prostituting knowledge.

The Beards, Nearings, Veblens, Deweys and Laskis, and the host of less well-known educators, driven from the public institutions of learning by the rulers, in ever increasing numbers bear witness to the fact that education in America consists of merely of impressing on the minds of pupils certain doctrines upon which American capitalism has placed its imprimatur.

The Rewards of Treason

A cloud full of potentialities for suffering and trouble hovers over the German workers today.

We have never for a moment had any doubts about the malign consequence in store for Germany's working class in the activities of the American banker-generals. Now the announcement about the experts' plan for the German railways should knock the bottom out of the lingering illusions for even the most hopeful Ebert "socialist" followers. General Dawes' commission is planning to turn the German railways over to the private capitalists, raise the fares, and reduce the number of workers employed. The British member of the expert enslavers of Germany's proletarian masses has decreed that an international capitalist lien must be placed on the German state railway system; that this system which, with its immensely valuable modern equipment and more than 32,000 miles of roadbed, is perhaps the most efficient in the world, "must be reorganized on a profit-making basis rather than as a military and industrial agent."

Little comment is necessary on what this plan will bring to the German workingmen. At this time, however, it is most appropriate to go beneath the surface of events a bit and find out the why and wherefore of this helplessness of the once mighty German working class. Calm, dispassionate probing leads the investigator to one outstanding factor responsible for the hopelessness of the erstwhile flower of the European proletariat. The German masses are today reaping the rewards of the treason perpetrated against the working class of the world by the social democratic leaders. Since the Ebert-Noske despoilers of international socialism assumed control of the rudder of state for the industrialists and financiers, even after events have belied every one of their pretenses. These Judases of the world revolution fought the proletarian dictatorship because they would have the world believe that they were dedicated to the cause of pure democracy. Now Chancellor Marx warns the Reichstag that unless it immediately stops concerning itself with the government he will dissolve it. The Social Democrats fought the establishment of a Soviet Republic because, they said, it would bring about the enslavement of Germany by foreign capitalists. Now, these same unholy pretenders are the very ones to invite the foreign capitalists, to facilitate the turning of Germany into a coolie colony of international capitalist imperialism.

Yes, these are the dismal rewards of treason. The lessons of these blackest betrayals of history are of incalculable import to the working class movement the world over. But this quintessential gall which the German working class is today compelled to drink will yet prove the hemlock to their misleaders. The terrible price now being paid by the world proletariat shall then not have been in vain.

The Taxation Muddle

The House of Representatives has, thru a union of the insurgents and democrats, passed the Garner tax proposal. In essence this measure provides for a 44 per cent tax on all incomes of $100,000 or over. There is every likelihood that President Coolidge, despite his blatant outbursts in behalf of the original Mellon scheme, will sign this bill.

Many may hail the defeat of the Mellon plan as a tremendous victory for the people. Nothing of the kind is true. The democratic plan, when finally adopted, will satisfy the big business interests because their taxes are reduced by it. It is true that the Mellon plan would benefit them a little more, but our captains of industry are experienced bargainers and under the circumstances, when the government is under so much suspicion, they will feel mighty well satisfied with the reduction of the surtax from 50 to 44 per cent.

What Congress should have done in ending the taxation burden is to remove all taxes from the poor and shift them completely over to the rich. The insurgent republicans should have fought much harder than they did to prevent the enactment by the House of this compromise measure of benefit to the biggest capitalists. How little the great mass of workers and dispossessed farmers will benefit from the Garner measure is evident from the fact that even in New York State, the wealthiest state in the union, more than three out of every four families have a family income of less than $2,500 a year. The individual income, of course, is considerably less. If these are the conditions in New York, then the situation is much worse in the other, the poorer states, of the country. Consequently, the democratic Garner tax bill brings no relief to the overwhelming majority of the people of this country.

The only tax plan that can be of any service to the working masses and relieve them of the present staggering burdens of taxation is that plan which will levy a 100 per cent inheritance tax, a 100 per cent excess tax and a 100 per cent surtax on all incomes above the income of the average workers and farmers.

Unmasking Tyranny

Colonel Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, one of the heroes of the Teapot Dome Oil Tragedy, who is now occupying his office by the grace of Coolidge and the tolerance of the masses, is engaged in denying the navy employes the most elementary constitutional rights supposed to be accorded to every citizen of the country.

The constitution guarantees the inviolability of the right of petition to every citizen. Let, Mr. Roosevelt, who was caught red-handed in the gigantic Sinclair oil steal, is arrogating to himself the power to make a scrap of paper out of the constitution by refusing the naval employes the right to petition publicly "that personnel classification and efficiency ratings and all other government personnel matters be placed under the supervisor of the Civil Service Commission."

Apparently Mr. Roosevelt feels that oil alone hasn't helped him. He is opposed to the much counted American civil service method for advancing and rating government employes. Perhaps Mr. Roosevelt feels that he must also do his bit in the roping of the civil service system which has been going on unnoticed and unpunished under the Harding-Coolidge administration. Very likely Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt finds it necessary to traffic in naval jobs as well as fraudulent oil concessions. We do not want to yield to suspicion, but we wonder.

This incident may appear unimportant in these days of political oil prospecting. In truth it is very significant. It shows that our employing class does not leave a stone unturned to keep this government as airtight as possible against rank and file employe expression, as fool-proof a dictatorship as can be attained.

This high-handed conduct of the oily Roosevelt unmasks the essential tyranny with which our whole government system seeks and lays threadbare all the false democratic claims made for our government by its defenders and apologists.

Great Work for Education Is Being Carried on by the Communist Party in Soviet Russia

By Henry Noel Brailsford, in "The Russian Workers' Republic," Harper & Bros., Publishers.

THE Russian Communist Party is ripening the whole Russian people for responsibility and power, by its great work for education. . .

To my mind the most inspiring thing in Russia is that the Social Revolution, instantly and instinctively, began to realize the idea of universal education, which the interests and prejudices of class have thwarted in the rest of Europe. Every fair-minded observer has given the Bolsheviks credit for their prompt efforts to send an illiterate people to school.

Workers Kids to Have Best.

Their ambition is much bolder. They intend that none of the comforts, none of the pleasures, none of the stimuli, which awaken the powers of a child born in Europe in a cultured middle-class home, shall be lacking to the children of the humblest Russian workers. Their belief is that by a great and self-sacrificing effort the entire generation which is coming to maturity in Russia can be raised to a high level of culture.

They will not at once attain their full ambition. They are hampered by poverty. They suffer from a dearth of teachers who share their outlook. Many a long year will pass before the primitive, isolated Russian village can absorb more than the bare rudiments of civilization. But this they have achieved. They have broken the barriers which class and poverty had raised against education.

I saw near Petrograd a big boarding school formerly reserved for the children of the nobility. Today about three in four of its inmates are the children of manual workers. They were, in their bearing and manners, as refined as the children whose parents belonged to the intelligenzia, as eager to study and as keen to enjoy the pleasures of art and knowledge to which an admirable staff of teachers introduced them. They were learning handicrafts as well as sciences and languages, and whether they exercise a trade or a profession, when they leave school, they will be cultivated men and women, capable of disciplined thought and aesthetic pleasure.

Improvised Laboratory.

The long Russian summer holiday was over before I left, and I saw three big schools at work in and near Petrograd. All were suffering from the lack of materials, especially paper, steel pens, pencils, and school books. But the skill and enthusiasm of the teachers went far to supply the lack. In one of the three the head master, whose chief interest was natural science, had got together a most creditable physical laboratory, and nearly all the apparatus had been recently made by the elder pupils themselves. Veteran carpenters' benches and lathes had somehow been commandeered, and even the girls were learning to use them. Bootmaking was also taught. The libraries, chiefly of Russian classics, were in great request, and in the evenings the older pupils conducted a sort of literary salon. One of these three schools had a rather ambitious theater, and occasionally the children performed plays of their own composition, usually dealing with some historical subject. Another had a thriving band, which played for me, really very well, with a lad of fourteen as conductor.

Teachers Without Books.

I heard some German lessons given, and the teachers had managed, almost without books, to make wonderful progress, with the aid chiefly of blackboard and drawings prepared by the children themselves. Hardly a word of Russian was used in the foreign-language lessons, and in one of these schools some of the elder children, obviously rather proud of their proficiency, started conversing with me in German as I walked about the corridors. Latin and Greek are virtually abolished. For the elder pupils there were lessons in political economy and psychology as well as history, literature, and science. The strain on the teachers must have been terrific, and only the best of them could succeed.

Radical Educational Methods.

Much of the discontent of the more conservative and less efficient teachers was obviously due to their inability to grasp and apply the radical new methods of education prescribed by Lunacharsky and Pokrovsky. The old routine which pumped knowledge out of textbooks into passive children was so much easier than the new methods of activity, self-initiative, and realism. Thus I found the elder pupils in some schools learning arithmetic by working over the actual statistics, percentage, and costings of a particular factory. That wants a better and keener teacher than the old book examples.

Employers Dictate to Teachers

teachers' positions. The Journal of the National Education Association for September, 1922, triumphantly quotes the superintendent of schools at Onaway, Michigan, as stating that "teachers' contracts in Onaway, Michigan, will in future require teachers to become members of state and national educational associations." And in the case of St. Joseph, Missouri, the blanks to be filled out by applicants for teaching positions contain the following two questions: "Are you a member of the N. E. A.? If not, will you be a member this year?"

Now the classroom teachers are the real educators in America. They do the actual work of teaching your children; they are the ones who know your children, they spend some 25 hours with them every week, and they are not seduced from the job of understanding children by prominence and applause, nor by high salaries, nor by any other lure. The classroom teachers are the ones we must depend on if education is to be improved. The classroom teachers represent democracy in the school world, and the test of democracy in the N. E. A. is what happens to this rank and file. So I begin my study of this great organization with its Department of Classroom Teachers.

Until a year or two ago the Department of Classroom Teachers of the N. E. A. was nothing but a name. The way it leaped into sudden life is an amusing story. The school superintendents of the N. E. A. decided that they would have an exclusive organization, and hold meetings uncontaminated by the presence of the school proletariat. At their midwinter convention of 1920 they reorganized themselves into an autonomous body, called the Department of Superintendence. After they had done this, the embarrassing discovery was made that they had violated the by-laws of the N. E. A.; but, of course, at the next convention of the N. E. A. special amendments were passed, so as to legalize what the superintendents had done. Being a superintendent in the N. E. A. is like being a millionaire in a police court.

Now to each of the N. E. A. conventions come the "Bolsheviks" of the Milwaukee Teachers' Association, headed by their president, Ethel Gardner; also the "Bolsheviks" of the Chicago Teachers' Federation, headed by Margaret Haley. These groups are fighting for the school proletariat, and they watch with practiced eyes the tricks and contrivances of their superiors. They pounced upon this brilliant scheme of the Department of Superintendence; why not reorganize the Classroom Teachers' Department of the N. E. A., and have it autonomous, like the Department of Superintendence? A beautiful scheme, you see! The Department of Superintendence had excluded from its membership everyone who was not a superintendent; now let the Department of Classroom Teachers exclude everyone who was not a classroom teacher!

Here was treason and rank rebellion; and actually, these teachers had the insolence to call a convention in Chicago, in February, 1922, at the same time as the mid-winter meeting of the Department of Superintendence. The gang was so indignant that in Milwaukee the board of education refused leave of absence to Miss Ethel Gardner, who was president of the Department of Classroom Teachers, so that she might attend the convention she had called. The gang moved heaven and earth to oust her from her job as a teacher; but it so happened that she had an honest principal, and when they asked him to report her as incompetent he replied: "I will not tell a damned lie."

The convention was held without Miss Gardner, and the teachers appointed a committee of Milwaukee and Chicago "Bolsheviks," which spent all the spring drawing up a constitution and having it made airtight by a competent attorney. At the 1922 convention of the N. E. A., held in Boston, they appeared with a printed draft of their scheme. They were going to re-elect Miss Ethel Gardner, the Milwaukee "Bolshevik," as their president; and it goes without saying that the gang did not intend to let that happen. The gang picked out a "tame" teacher, Miss Effie MacGregor, of Minneapolis, and decreed that she was to become president of the Department of Classroom Teachers—in spite of the classroom teachers!

This chapter is called "Dispensers of Prominence," and here you see what I mean. The classroom teachers had never heard of Miss Effie MacGregor; she had never attended a meeting of the Department of Classroom Teachers, nor was she a member of a classroom teachers' association. She had fought hard against the increase of their salaries; but now she was to be their president, and have the spending of their ten thousand dollars for a year! President Charl O. Williams, of the N. E. A., proceeded to place the lady on the main program of the N. E. A., introducing her as "the foremost classroom teacher in the United States." President Williams went on to explain the lady's credentials to that title—she had arranged a movie benefit at a theater, and raised funds to send eight delegates to the convention! Please understand, that is not a joke; that is the N. E. A. idea of "greatness."

Come back with me to Oakland, California, and recall the picture of Fred M. Hunter, superintendent and educational ward leader, with his school henchmen and his grafting contractors. Recall Miss Elizabeth Arlett, "who, while supposed to be teaching the school children of Oakland, was touring the United States, shortly before the 1920 convention, in the interest of Mr. Hunter's candidacy for president of the N. E. A. For that service and her subsequent activities, Miss Arlett was promoted to be principal of a high school in Oakland," etc. You will expect to find Miss Arlett at this 1922 convention, ready to carry out Mr. Hunter's orders for the smashing of the classroom teachers. You will be prepared to hear that the gang went into caucus in Miss Effie MacGregor's room, and that Miss Arlett took the initiative and made the principal speech, endorsing her and outlining the program.

The gang had engaged Symphony Hall for the business meeting of the Department of Classroom Teachers—an afternoon meeting, and there was to be a concert in the hall in the evening. The promise had been made that the hall would be vacated at five o'clock; but not a word was said to the teachers about this, and the gang proceeded to drag the meeting out with technical discussions over the details of the constitution. At six o'clock a slip of paper was sent up to the presiding officer, stating that the meeting had already kept the hall for an hour beyond the time agreed upon, and must vacate immediately!

The teachers had just got down to the work of electing officers; they wanted to finish this work in a hurry, for they knew exactly whom they wanted, and it wouldn't have taken five minutes. But the gang would not let that happen; a member of the board of trustees of the N. E. A. began a violent and noisy filibuster, and so prevented the election. The assembly twice rejected a motion to hold an adjourned meeting; they wanted to do their electing right there, but the gang held on and delayed matters, until finally the janitor threatened to turn out the lights, and thus forced the teachers from the hall.

So here was the Department of Classroom Teachers left without officers for a year! They did not know what to do; but the gang knew, you may be sure. They sprung the proposition at an assembly of the N. E. A. convention, at which very few of the classroom teachers were present; but at which four out of five of those present were superintendents or members of the supervising force. To this gathering the president of the N. E. A. announced that she "ordered" a meeting of the Classroom Teachers' Department, to be held as soon as this N. E. A. assembly had adjourned. Under the by-laws, the president of the N. E. A. was absolutely without authority to order any such meeting; but she ordered it, and the incoming president of the N. E. A. took charge—Mr. William B. Owen, president of the Chicago Normal School, "ward leader" of the gang in that city.

The meeting was held; that is to say, a number of spectators stayed over, and Mr. Owen called them to order as classroom teachers, but without making any effort to find out whether they really were classroom teachers or not. The climax of absurdity was reached when this meeting—it was held in a theater—was forced to vacate, and adjourned to the Boys' Trade School. Fewer than two hundred people came to this place, and no effort was made to ascertain who they were, or what right they had to vote in the affairs of the classroom teachers. By means of this assemblage, the gang proceeded to elect Miss Effie MacGregor to run the Department of Classroom Teachers for a year. And you may be sure that in the course of that year the gang got busy, and pulled its wires, and saw to it that at the next convention there was a good majority against Miss Ethel Gardner, the Milwaukee "Bolshevik!" The job was an easy one, because the convention was in Oakland, and we have been there and seen how Superintendent Hunter keeps his teachers under his thumb.

I think that to make the above story complete and perfect you will need to know something about the lady-president of the N. E. A. who put this job thru for the gang. You already have her name—Charl O. Williams: she was school superintendent of Shelby County, Tennessee, and immediately after this convention she got her reward—a permanent N. E. A. job, carrying not merely a salary of $7,500 a year, but the privilege of uplifting the teachers with Southern eloquence at one hundred dollars per lift. This lady ex-superintendent ex-president field secretary also represents her State of Tennessee on the national committee of the democratic party, where she sits in conference with the chiefs of Tammany Hall; so you see exactly where this rascality comes from. Keep the lady in mind, because a year later we shall find her selected by the N. E. A. to uplift the world conference of educators—and to soothe their cravings for peace with weazel words of war.

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

Dr. Norman Thomas found th labor leaders at the St. Louis C. P. P. A. Conference bubbling over wit Teapot Dome radicalation. Bu whenever a resolution to declare definitely for a Third Party o a Farmer Labor Party came up, th leaders grabbed it, looked it over, sniffed suspiciously at it, like a dog approaching a tempting piece o meat left in front of a kennel, an glanced at the gallery where Ruthenberg sat with a Machiavelian smile on his features, and the sternly voted down the resolution, no matter how good it was. This is disconcerting to the Doctor. No doubt the Workers Party should eliminate itself in the interest o harmony and allow the toothless Socialist warriors to mumble their dogmas at the reactionary labor fakers before joining them in a love feast.

* * * *

Dr. Thomas says we should stop suspecting each other, forget the past, stop criticizing the fakers and let the Teapot Dome do its damnedest. We should let the May 30 conference slide and wait and see what the labor fakers may do under the inspiration of July 4th. Nothing doing, Doctor.

Striking Chicago dress makers may have the need for working class political action literally beaten into their brains before the strike that started yesterday will be over. The police instead of functioning to preserve the peace act openly as assistants of the bosses. Behind the policeman with his club is the judge with his injunction and behind him is the mayor. The latter was placed in his position by the votes of the workers whose heads refused to think in their own interests. The sooner they can learn to elect a worker on a working class ticket the better for them and for their class.

When the ministers are not breaking up some happy home or giving the readers of yellow journalism their money's worth in the form of reading matter heavy with sex, they are throwing monkey wrenches into the business of exploiting female nudity which flourishes in the city of Chicago. The Rev. John W. Funston is morally excited over a burlesque show which rears its shameless head on Randolph street. He must have seen the show judging by the vivid account he gave of it. A Freudian might draw certain conclusions from the holy gentleman's detailed description of the leading lady's lack of clothing, that would not be complimentary to the reverend pastor. As it is we believe that some profession with a cleaner moral record than the clerical should assume the leadership of a movement like this.

Ramsay MacDonald is . remarkable man. He has succeeded in pleasing nearly all groups in the House of Commons. First he pleased the pacifists, next he pleased the militarists. He pleased the liberals and he pleased the Tories. So far, however, he has failed to please the radicals. His action in laying the keels of seven new warships prompted the Daily Herald labor paper to state that MacDonald was given the opportunity "to bring into play his exceptional genius for parliamentary leadership." By releasing Ghandi, the harmless Hindoo nationalist, he threw the pacifists a bone. This more than makes up for his seven new warships and his murder of 14 rebel Hindoos.

Talking of Ghandi. The British government made no mistake in releasing him. That soft headed political infant wrecked a promising nationalist movement in India by robbing it of its militarry. The British government called his bluff by clapping him in jail and challenging his "non-resistance" bun to do its worst. Ghandi stay in jail until the British thought well for them to turn him loose. And it is no coincidence that hi release occurs at a moment wher there is an awakening of the nationalist spirit in India and a reversion to the policy of physical force, the only policy England respects so much.

* * * *

What does Ghandi do on his release? He called on the Hindoos to do penance in sackcloth and ashe for their "crimes" against the British government. The deaths of th rebel Hindoos, declares this faker, were not due to the cruelty of th British government but to the sinfulness of the Hindoos in using violence. Does MacDonald deserve gratitude for releasing Ghandi? Yes, from the British imperialists whose cause he is better able to serve than the pompous Tories who never forget and never learn.

BIG DRESSMAKERS' STRIKE GAINS; EXPELLED MEMBERS AIDING; BOSS SHOOTS SELF

More strikers joined the big movement of Chicago dressmakers against sweatshop conditions on the second day of the struggle yesterday. Expelled left wingers gave active assistance, strike committee members welcoming their support.

Bosses who are trying to hold out against the fight for the shorter work week and sanitary shop conditions saw their forces thinned by the pickets who were recruiting new strikers at the time that the bosses wanted them to be punching the clock.

Bosses Use Cheap Thugs.

Scores of thugs are lounging about the entrances of the loft buildings, but they are curiously youthful and inefficient looking. The scab employers are scabby even in their selection of gangsters.

William Goldstein, an employer, member of the firm of Samuel Goldstein & Co. at 1384 Milwaukee ave., furnished the only casualty yesterday and is now at St. Elizabeth's hospital, with a slight flesh wound in the back of the upper leg. According to the best information from his own employes he shot himself while trying to draw a gun on strikers.

Tried to Shoot Workers.

The shooting took place at the opening hour when Goldstein, in a highly nervous condition, was checking up on some of his employes who failed to arrive. His excitement became frenzied as several men appeared at the door and called to the people inside to come out in mass. Workers began to leave their work places and Goldstein and his brother Samuel rushed yelling at the door. Goldstein's hand, say workers, went back to his hip pocket, and he was jerking at the butt of a gun when someone grabbed his wrist and in the scuffle the gun went off wounding him in the back of the thigh.

The utter lack of evidence against any strikers is shown by the failure of the police to make any arrests in the case, altho Samuel Goldstein has been making himself a nuisance at the W. Chicago avenue police station, by visit and telephone, hysterically demanding that arrests be made.

Strikers Demand Jury Trials.

Jury trials were demanded by the nine strikers arraigned in the Harrison street court yesterday morning and the four arraigned in the W. Chicago avenue court and all were bound over on $400 bail for appearance in probably two weeks.

Abraham Abroniwitz is the only one charged with anything more serious than disorderly conduct. He is charged with felonious assault by Jack Blum, of Blum & Kempler's, S. Market street, who is similarly charged by the striker. The others arraigned at Harrison street were Hyman Goldman, Sam Rose, Joseph Gilles, Charles Koff, Louis Isman, Harry Matten, Joseph Geller, David Klesman and Barney Barnatsky.

Attorney Ricker, of the firm of Nelson and Ricker, represented the unionists. The court room was besprinkled with more than 30 thugs whom the bosses planted there for the intimidating effect they might have.

In the West Chicago avenue court May Snyder, Joe Coklioa, Isador Kroan and William Siegal were arraigned on disorderly conduct charges preferred by members of the Alvin Dress Co. firm and were released on bail furnished by the union for jury trial later. They were represented by Oscar Nelson, attorney and union member.

6 Arrests on Milwaukee Ave.

Six more arrests were made in the Milwaukee avenue district yesterday on disorderly conduct charges. The strikers who were seized by police at the behest of the bosses were May Wilson, May Miller, J. W. Wilson, Sam Barker, Harry Rufer and Nathan Schwartz. They will be arraigned in the West Chicago avenue court this morning.

Enthusiastic Meetings.

John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, was the principal speaker at a strike rally at 180 W. Washington street yesterday and he was followed by Mrs. Sophia Rodriguez and Jay G. Brown. Bernard Schaffer and John McCrystal spoke at 20 W. Randolph street at meetings in two halls there.

At Schoenhofen's Hall an enthusiastic meeting was held with Mollie Alterman acting as chairman and Charles Will, of the Machinists' union, and Joe Pzck, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, speaking. Pzck spoke in Polish.

Will Sell Bonus Bonds.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 28.—Soldier bonus bonds aggregating $10,000,000 and bearing 4½ per cent interest, will be sold at the Chicago office of the state treasurer, Oscar Nelson, state treasurer, has announced. The sale will be held on March 20.

COOLIDGE IS PRAISED AS N. E. A. ENDS

Declaration For Platoon Plan Avoided This Year

With a resolution praising Calvin Coolidge for his "high regard for education," the department of superintendence of the National Education Association closed its sessions yesterday. William McAndrew, superintendent of the Chicago schools, was elected president of the body. Informal meetings will round out the week.

The convention did not go on record in behalf of the platoon school system. Fearing that too open a declaration for the industrialists' scheme of education would stimulate the teachers' union to greater activity in protest that issue was avoided. Propaganda was, however, effectively carried out among the principals and superintendents present thru the conference conducted by Dr. John J. Tigert, U. S. Commissioner of Education.

Critics of Dr. Tigert are charging him with breaking the law by exceeding his mandated powers in conducting the platoon conference on such an obviously partisan way. The law declares that the department of education shall avoid propaganda for special systems of education.

Willis Wirt, founder of the Gary or "platoon" idea at the city of Gary, Indiana, has been an active propagandist for the idea thruout the convention and is being supported for leadership in the next convention. Superintendent Cotter, of Milwaukee, who was defeated by McAndrew for the presidency, may find Wirt running against him at next year's election.

"Americanization" Urged.

"Our civilization is in danger of being undermined," says another resolution, "by the failure of our people to observe the laws of our country and the communities in which they live." The resolution goes on to demand that the schools "stress as never before the fundamental principles of American citizenship." The convention went on record against reduction in school appropriations, pointing out the alarming illiteracy situation and the need to Americanize 13,000,000 of foreign born in this country. Salaries of teachers must not be cut, it added.

Two Girl Strikers Arrested by Police from Crowe's Office

Police from State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe's office have taken it upon themselves to help the regular police break the strike of the ladies' garment workers. Two policemen attached to Crowe's staff arrested Freda Pencher and Marie Sigel when they followed and talked to a couple of girls who were coming from a scab shop to the elevated station at Clark and Lake Sts.

The activities of Crowe's police force is significant because Crowe has repeatedly said that "he will either break the unions or drive them to bankruptcy and either send union leaders to prison or the poor house."

The girls were taken to the Central police station where they were charged with disorderly conduct. They will be arraigned in South Clark St. court this morning.

MAC DONALD HITS FARRINGTON ON MEETING DELAY

Charges Effort to Keep Regime in Power

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 28.—The state convention of the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers of America has been postponed from March 4 to May 13 at the suggestion of State President Frank Farrington. The convention will be held in Peoria.

Decision to postpone the meeting was reached after a bitter fight in the executive board. Farrington said he had been ill and unable to prepare his report.

MacDonald States Views.

Duncan MacDonald, former secretary treasurer of the organization and one of Farrington's opponents, declared the meeting was postponed to permit Farrington to make his new appointments for the fiscal year on April 1.

MacDonald said the convention is certain to shear the appointive power from Farrington but by postponing the meeting until after April 1, the present state president will have his friends in office for another year.

Expect Dawes' Plan to Bleed Germany Will Be Ready Monday

PARIS, Feb. 28.—The report of the Dawes committee of experts will be drafted Monday and will be ready for submission to the reparations commission in another ten days, it was learned today.

The reparations commission will transmit the draft of the report, which will embody suggestions for payments by Germany to the allies and for stabilizing German's currency and budget to the various governments.

An international conference, participated in by heads of the various governments, is likely to follow.

Railroad Workers Plan Substitute for Esch-Cummins Law

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 28.—Declaring that the railroad labor board created under the Esch-Cummins bill is a failure, D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, today announced introduction in congress of a new bill to be known as the "railway labor act."

LUDENDORFF SENT FROM HEAVEN, IS ATTORNEY'S CLAIM

Also Called Germany's Greatest General

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MUNICH, Feb. 28.—General Ludendorff was "Germany's greatest general, sent from heaven, whom nobody could criticize," an indignant defense attorney declared at the trial of the world war commander and others for treason.

What irritated the defense was not the accusations against Ludendorff for participation in the beer cellar putsch that failed; it was a declaration by the prosecuting attorney that Ludendorff had little prestige among the northern reichswehr troops, which were to be enlisted in the revolt.

This attitude of pride was maintained by all the defendants as the trial proceeded today. Former Police President Poehner, one of the accused, said the beer cellar putschists planned to march on Berlin. The uprising of November, 1923, was a complete failure, however.

Central Illinois Public Service Company Made Big Profit Last Year

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 28.—Gross earnings of the Central Illinois Public Service Company for 1923 amounted to $8,190,353.89, an increase of $1,835,311.83 over 1922, it was revealed at the annual meeting of the stockholders here today. This increase includes merchandise sales.

During the same period the number of subscribers increased 18,296, to a total of 120,701.

DAUGHERTY WEARS BRAZEN FRONT IN CHICAGO WHILE G. O. P. LEADERS OIL SKIDS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Administration leaders will put Attorney General Daugherty on trial before some congressional tribunal without delay.

After he has had a hearing, President Coolidge will ask him to resign, on the advice of his closest political lieutenants.

From official sources, it was learned today that this is the President's present intention regarding the Attorney General who left Washington with dramatic suddenness yesterday, leaving behind him a defi to his enemies, in which he said:

"It is not my purpose even to consider tendering my resignation as Attorney General until after a fair hearing on charges preferred agaist me."

Whether Daugherty will be investigated by a senate committee under the Wheeler resolution, or called to the bar of the senate in impeachment proceedings is to be decided today.

"I'm no quitter," Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty told the Daily Worker when he arrived here today for a conference with federal officials conducting the grand jury investigation of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

Daugherty was greatly heartened by a few telegrams of confidence from all parts of the country.

A winner never quits; a quitter never wins," one telegram stated, and Daugherty showed it with pride.

"That's my position," he said. "I'm no quitter."

Daugherty arrived in Chicago at 9 a. m., and went at once to the Federal Building for conferences with his aides. He put up at the Union League Club, where he probably will remain until he leaves Chicago for Miami, Fla., to visit his invalid wife.

To See Strawn.

He will confer with Attorney Silas H. Strawn, who was picked by President Coolidge to investigate the Teapot Dome scandal and later dropped out of the affair because of certain financial connections.

A small army of photographers and newspapermen greeted the attorney-general on his arrival here. He posed for a picture with Julius Krim, special prosecutor for the government in the Veterans' Bureau case.

Daugherty showed impatience with the whirl of questions hurled at him by the newspaper men.

"I will issue a statement later," he said. "I am here on government business and therefore I cannot discuss it."

Likes the Publicity.

Daugherty appeared in good humor when the newspaper correspondents boarded the train at McKeesport last night. He received the correspondent cordially and jokingly referred to "the fuss and excitement" he was causing.

Daugherty manifested impatience and only on the urging of Julius Krim, special prosecutor of the government in the Veterans' Bureau case, did he consent to pose for the photographers.

"I suppose you want to get me while I'm still attorney-general," he laughingly commented.

When Daugherty's presence became known to other passengers on the train, they crowded into the club car where the attorney-general sat, smoking cigarettes and dictating telegrams to his secretary.

"I've been trying for some time to find out what these charges are," Daugherty said, "and nobody seems to know."

Daugherty intimated he might have another statement to make today, depending on the nature of his telegrams he got from Washington.

Repeats He's No Quitter.

He retired last night about 11 o'clock, and was awake this morning before seven. After breakfasting in his compartment, he received the correspondent and said he had "nothing to say" beyond the fact that he was no quitter.

Daugherty was accompanied by his brother, a secretary and Brigadier General Sawyer.

Before leaving his train Daugherty pointed out that his statement issued before he left Washington last night was the only public announcement he would make until after he disposed of the Veterans' Bureau case here.

"I will issue a statement indicating my position in this case as soon as I have read some telegrams I'm expecting from Washington," Daugherty said, referring to reports that he was about to resign from President Coolidge's cabinet.

After a hasty conference at the district attorney's office, Daugherty will take a train for Miami, Fla., where his wife is ill.

PALMER, "RED RAIDER", WILL BE SUMMONED

100 Per Cent "Pay-triot" Also Tainted With Oil

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney general in the Wilson cabinet, will be soummoned by the Senate Oil Committee to tell whether he helped E. B. McLean, Washington publisher, try to stifle a senate investigation of McLean's dealings with Albert B. Fall.

The committee today decided to subpoena Palmer, whose name appeared in telegrams exchanged between McLean and his employes, which were submitted to the committee. Palmer, in some of these telegrams, was reported to McLean as preparing to "work on" Senator Walsh to prevent McLean being questioned.

Call Palmer for Friday.

Former Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer will appear before the committee tomorrow morning, it was decided after conferences between Senators Dill, Walsh, Lenroot and Palmer.

Palmer will be asked by Dill, who got the committee to request his appearance, to explain his participation in the affairs of McLean and Fall as revealed in telegrams which the committee has.

Palmer had intended to leave for Florida tonight with his wife for a vacation. Dill wanted to postpone hearing Palmer until after McLean had testified, but in view of Palmer's desire to leave Washington he arranged with other members of the committee to put him on the stand the first thing tomorrow.

Senator Walsh disclosed to the committee this morning that Senator Oscar Underwood, presidential candidate, did mention McLean to him just after the senate committee had decided to send Walsh to Palm Beach to question McLean.

Would "Work On" Walsh.

In one of the telegrams before the committee, McLean was notified that Palmer said he would try to get Underwood to "work on" Walsh.

"I have had a telephone conversation with Senator Underwood this morning," Walsh said. "He said to me that at the request of Mr. Bennett, he had said something to me about whether we were going to ask

Belgian Cabinet's Fall Knocks French Franc to the Lows

PARIS, Feb. 28.—Record lows were registered by the French franc today.

Quotations outside the bourse showed the franc at 106 to the pound sterling and 24.50 to the dollar.

Downfall of the Belgian cabinet, which resigned yesterday, when the chamber refused to support the government on the question of ratification of the Franco-Belgian economic convention, was believed responsible. Premier Poincare's hand has been considerably weakened by the overthrow of Premier Theunis of Belgium.

MC ADOO AND SON APPEAR SOME MORE

Progressive's Presidential Hope Among Missing Link

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Missing links in the chain of evidence showing how efforts were made to stave off uncovering of the whole naval oil scandal will be sought by senate investigators.

These links consist of telegrams which have not thus far appeared among the messages submitted by telegraph companies in response to the committee's demand for all communications to E. B. McLean, Washington publisher, while he was at Palm Beach recently, to A. B. Fall, central figure in the scandal, and from McLean and Fall to others.

Palm Beach and New Orleans offices of the telegraph companies will be asked to search their files for messages which Senator Walsh, chief investigator of the committee, believes were sent, but which have not been laid before the committee.

Make More Wires Public.

Pending search for the missing messages, the committee today will make public more of the batch of 150 telegrams submitted under protest. Of these about 75 were found by the committee to be pertinent to the oil inquiry.

Thru the telegrams Walsh hopes to learn whether there was any connection between the visit to Fall at Wardman Park Hotel here of Senators Lenroot and Smoot, members of the investigating committee, and subsequent efforts to "hush" the inquiry.

The telegrams to be read today will disclose, committee members said, that McLean was informed by his employes here of further effort to have the committee refrain from putting him on the stand to tell of his $100,000 loan to Fall. McLean's story of that loan was the starting point of the whole sensational disclosure that has since stirred the country.

According to committee members, some of these telegrams will show that McLean's employes told him that A. Mitchell Palmer, former attorney-general, was going to ask Oscar Underwood, now a presidential candidate, to try to persuade Walsh not to call McLean.

Palmer late yesterday denied he ever tried to have any one "work on" Walsh, or that he ever approached Underwood in such a connection. Walsh said Underwood had never in any way suggested to him that McLean should not be called.

McAdoo Figures Some More.

The names of Francis H. McAdoo and William G. McAdoo, his father, Senator Willis, Ohio, Palmer and others already mentioned in the inquiry, figure in the telegrams to be made public today.

Additional subpoenas were issued last night but Walsh refused to say who for. A subpoena was issued yesterday for James C. Dryden, of Ellicott City, Md., president of the Mutual Oil Company, which was prevented from drilling in Teapot Dome when Fall sent marines to the reserves in 1922.

Those expected to be subpoenaed include Fred Starek, director of the War Finance Corporation; John Major, a McLean employe; E. C. Smithers, White House telegrapher, who also worked the McLean leased wire from Washington to Palm Beach; Col. E. W. Starling, of the White House secret service; William Duckstein and W. F. Wiley, local employes of McLean.

New York Roused by Teapot Issue to Protest Meetings

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—The party here is engaging in several large campaigns—notably that on the oil scandal and the protection of the foreign-born workers.

Arrangements are being made for a large mass meeting on the oil scandal. Conferences are being called for the protection of the foreign-born and to strengthen and build the Federated Farmer-Labor Party in our district.

In addition to these campaigns the regular Party work must continue, and permit me to call to your attention that during activities of this kind the strengthening of our Party is more possible than during periods of inactivity. In this connection I wish to call your attention to such meetings as the Trachtenberg lectures on the international Communist movement, March 4, at Royal Palace Hall, 142 Second Ave., and March 6, at Stuyvesant Casino, same address; our affair for the celebration of the Paris Commune, and various sectional membership drive meetings that are being arranged. It is meetings of this kind that help make our Party what it should be. One of these membership drives, at which the oil scandal is going to be played up, will be held at Royal Palace, Manhattan Ave. and Barrett St., Brooklyn. There will be speaking in several languages.

Impeach Coolidge

OUT of the welter of oil, bribery, theft, blackmail and brazen disregard of their own laws, by capitalists and their tools, out of the remnants of tarnished and shattered reputations that the Teapot Dome investigation leaves in its trail as the days pass, a few facts stand out with crystal clearness.

First, that President Coolidge is as deep in the mud as his cabinet officials are in the mire. He went the limit to protect the blatant and futile Denby and he is now using his high office to shield Attorney-General Daugherty, the guiltiest of the bandit crew that has its rendezvous in the White House.

• • • •

WALSH STICKS TO McADOO

Second, both the parties of American capitalism—democrat and republican—are sunk to their ears in oil; they are dominated and run primarily in the interest of oil companies, their leaders are henchmen of the oil interests and their vast ramifications in all other lines of capitalist enterprise. The Wilson regime and the Wilson attaches were dispensing favors to Doheny and other oil magnates. McAdoo represented Doheny in the Mexican oil negotiations and succeeded in getting recognition withheld by the Wilson administration.

Walsh, chairman of the Teapot Dome committee, has endorsed McAdoo for president despite his admitted connection with bribery of officials and theft of natural resources.

Third, the Teapot Dome committee is extending its secret sessions until a public hearing is the exception rather than the rule. It is evident that information of supreme importance is kept from the public press because the disclosures are no longer of a partisan nature but reveal wholesale corruption involving both democrats and republicans.

Fourth, there is much inspired expression for quashing the senate investigation and allowing the courts to handle the whole matter. No more effective way of smothering the scandal itself and covering up the guilty parties could be devised. Once in the courts without every fact brought out in a senate investigation the whole affair would drag along for months; until after election, at least, when it would be forgotten entirely.

The statements of senator after senator and other individuals prominent in public life, to the effect that American government is on trial are correct.

• • • •

AMERICAN GOVERNMENT ON TRIAL

American capitalist government and the two parties thru which capitalism functions ARE on trial. They are seen to be the same kind of instruments—tools used to loot the masses and protect the looters. Both are immersed in the same oily pool, both defend their own kind who are caught in the oily flood and both unite in saying that their acts have nothing to do with the inherent righteousness of the American form of government.

Both denounce the critics of American government in the same breath that they condone and excuse the robberies perpetrated with the aid of government.

• • • •

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE RESPONSIBLE

The Workers Party of America declares that the Teapot Dome investigation and scandal that has aroused the great masses of the workers and farmers of the United States will end in mere partisan bickering between democrats and republicans with its real lesson unlearned if certain definite things are not demanded by the workers and farmers and those demands enforced.

The Workers Party of America believes that President Coolidge has shown himself cognisant of all the crookedness and wholesale thievery that was on foot when he was a cabinet member.

It believes that he has left no doubt in the mind of anyone that he has tried to shield and defend men like Denby and Daugherty who later admitted their guilt.

It believes that the conduct of President Coolidge in this connection comes under the head of "high crimes and misdemeanors" and is basis for impeachment.

It demands that the necessary steps to impeach him be taken immediately.

It believes that the connection of both democrats and republicans on the Teapot Dome committee with admitted grafters and oil attorneys is so well-established that no sane person can believe that they will do their duty in the premises.

It therefore demands that a new committee be appointed immediately.

It demands that every session of the committee be open to the press and public and that all evidence be considered public property.

• • • •

INVESTIGATION MUST GO ON

As chairman of the new committee it suggests the name of Frank P. Walsh whose ability and courage were determined as chairman of the Industrial Relations Committee in 1912-15.

It demands that no court proceedings be allowed to take precedence of the committee hearings; that criminal trials must come out of the evidence before the investigating body.

The Workers Party of America urges all organizations of workers and farmers to make these demands upon their senators and representatives in order that no guilty person may escape and no innocent person be smeared with oil for ulterior purposes.

Desperate efforts are being made to halt further investigation and these efforts will succeed—because both capitalist parties stand to lose from now on—unless there is a mass demand that the politicians dare not refuse.

St. Louis Workers Plan Action Against 'Foreign Born' Laws

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 28.—The Davis laws against foreign-born workers have aroused such protest in St. Louis that a big united front conference will be held next Sunday at 2 p. m. at the Hotel Jefferson. Labor of the extreme right and the extreme left will be represented at the conference.

A series of united front meetings, with T. R. Sullivan speaking, is being held in the following towns on the following dates: Coello, Ill., today; Christopher, Ill., March 1; Johnston City, March 2.

Sullivan spoke at Collinsville, Feb. 27.

Traction Trust Too Strong for Bus Rule in Ohio's Rubber City

AKRON, O., Feb. 28.—The rubber city today gave up its plan of rubber tire transportation.

Street cars, thrown out February 1st, as a result of a franchise squabble, resumed service as rapidly as ice and snow, packed down by heavy buses, could be removed from the streets.

City-wide motorization, dream of mayor D. C. Rybolt, as a means of boosting Akron's basic industry, rubber, has failed. Rybolt hoped the plan would "take" in other cities.

The city council entered into a 15-months agreement with the local traction company. The temporary franchise provides for a five cent fare plus a one cent transfer charge.

UNDERWOOD NOW DEFINITELY DRAWN INTO OIL SCANDAL

Presidential Candidate from Alabama Smeared

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Another presidential candidate, Senator Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama, was definitely involved today in the Senate's inquiry into the oil scandal.

Underwood's name was first brought in when the Senate Committee found a telegram to E. B. McLean, Washington publisher, from one of his employes, here, stating that A. Mitchell Palmer, former attorney-general, was going to ask Underwood to "work on" Senator Walsh, leading investigator of the committee, to get him to refrain from questioning McLean about a $100,000 loan to Fall.

Walsh at first denied that Underwood had ever mentioned McLean to him but this morning revealed a conversation he said he had forgotten but which Underwood reminded him of. Underwood in that conversation asked Walsh whether McLean would be called. Walsh said the committee had authorized him to go to Palm Beach to question McLean. Underwood was named again in a telegram to McLean from an employe on the Washington Post, McLean's paper, saying that Senators Curtis and Lenroot had advised that Underwood be seen in an effort to have Walsh called off. In this telegram it was added, however, that the effort thru Underwood was not considered of any use.

Production of this evidence thus definitely putting Underwood's name among those who were to be approached in an effort to halt the oil investigation at the very time it was on the eve of the disclosures which later opened up the whole scandal, came just after the committe had decided to question Palmer about his part in what some committee members feel was a definite attempt to stifle the whole inquiry.

Republicans Split Three Ways on Tax Rates on Incomes

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Passage of the tax bill by the house with the democratic income tax rates was virtually assured today as a three way split appeared in republican ranks.

Efforts by republican leaders to get a compromise with the progressives as final action on the bill approaches were given a setback when a movement was started among supporters of the Mellon plan to vote against all but the original treasury bill.

While republican Leader Longworth said he did not yet know the full strength of the movement, it was said to be formidable enough to insure the defeat of Longworth's compromise even if some of the progressives joined with the administration forces.

Longworth's plan for a flat 25 per cent cut all along the line will be presented to the house today. As drafted by Representative Mills, of New York, it provides for a 37½ per cent maximum surtax, a two per cent normal tax on incomes up to $4,000 and six per cent above $4,000.

Jailers in N. Y. State Get Eight-hour Day— A Cut from Twelve

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—Keepers and wardens employed by the state department of correction of New York have been granted the eight-hour working day. The keepers and wardens have for years been compelled to work from 12 to 16 hours daily. Provision was made in the 1924 budget for the employment of additional men and women so that the eight-hour day could be put into effect.

Miss Strong Speaks Tonight.

Anna Louise Strong, author of "Two Years of Russia's New Life" will speak at a 6 o'clock dinner at the Y. M. C. A., this evening.

Miss Strong, lately returned from Russia, took the first foreign relief to the Volga, recovered in a Russian hospital from typhus, and made a careful investigation of conditions in Russia. Few other Americans have traveled so widely in revolutionary Russia.

Oil Catches "Red Raider"

Mr. McLean to appear and that I said it had already been decided that I would go to Palm Beach to see him."

Walsh then stated that "since Senator Underwood says this conversation took place, I assume it did, but I did not recall it."

The "Mr. Bennett" referred to was not identified by Walsh. A man named Bennet is an editorial writer on McLean's Washington Post.

Palmer Sees Committee Members.

The first few telegrams read by Walsh, showed how Palmer had seen members of the committee in behalf of McLean.

One dated Janary 3 from John Major, personal Washington agent of McLean, said Palmer had notified Lenroot that McLean was too ill to come north from Palm Beach to tell the committee about his $100,000 loan to Fall. Lenroot informed Palmer that Walsh was going south to see McLean.

An undated telegram to McLean stated:

"Willis saw party this morning. Willis said party was in friendly mood. Harry out of city. Have appointment with Eyed; he expects something. Will also see party I returned with.

"(Signed) 'Hohns.'"

The "Willis" in this telegram was not further identified but committee members said it was Senator Willis of Ohio.

Telegram Sent to McLean.

Following is a quotation from a telegram sent to McLean by Ira Bennett of the Washington Post:

"Lenroot and I saw Curtis and he advises us to see Underwood. Curtis promised to see Underwood. He said Underwood promised to see Walsh but stated he did not think it would do any good."

Senator Curtis, Kansas, republican, is whip of the senate.

Another from Bennet said:

"Walsh is looking for an excuse to make trouble."

A telegram from "Johns" to McLean said: "Willis said Arty in friendly mood intimated nothing further be requested from your end."

A telegram from McLean to Major December 26 was read:

"See Lambert and tell him to see Mitchell Palmer. I have heard I am to be called before the committee. I have no information which would be of any conceivable use. Keep all my wires in your possession."

Walsh read a telegram in which McLean advised Palmer he had loaned Fall $100,000 and "knew nothing even remotely' that could be connected with the oil inquiry.

This telegram was given to the committee at that time by Palmer.

Didn't Want Falls Invited.

McLean to Major, December 26:

"Do the Falls expect to stay with me? Don't invite them, want your opinion."

McLean to Major December 26:

"On account of Palmer acting for other parties, must be very careful. Can absolutely rely upon McAdoo."

"Johns" to McLean January 23:

"Willis is in full possession of matter after hot battle of wits with Lambert and Major. The duck is leaving 12:25 a. m. My advice is not to acquaint latter with new code system. Mary Quigley listened in on telephone conversation between Duck and his wife and Duck said 'at last I've got them where I want them.'"

"No Rocking of Boat."

From Bennett to McLean January 29:

"Saw principal. Delivered message. He says greatly appreciates there will be no rocking of boat and no resignations. He expects reaction from unwarranted political attacks."

"The champion" to "Wiley" January 26:

"Just talked with apricot and believe he has situation well in hand. Advises you not to talk about peaches and apples. Suggest don't worry and just put thing out of your mind. Just sit tight."

McLean to Major dated December 27:

"Please wire Francis McAdoo, care Miller and Otis law firm, New York, Palmer's telephone number. Please explain to Palmer, McAdoo or his father have been my personal attorney for seven years and I requested McAdoo to call him over long distance telephone."

"The champion" referred to is believed to be Christopher Dunphy, former South Atlantic golf champion, who was in charge of McLean's private golf course. Dunphy's name has been mentioned in previous messages.

This finished reading of the telegrams and Karl Schuyler, Denver attorney, was called to the stand.

Schuyler acted as attorney for J. Leo Stack, Denver oil man, and said he was formerly connected with the Pioneer Oil company and Mid-west Refining company as director.

Schuyler in Million Dollar Deal.

Schuyler acted for Stack in the deal whereby Stack and Fred G. Benfils, editor of the Denver Post, obtained promise of $1,000,000 from H. F. Sinclair for certain alleged claims to Teapot Dome.

Schuyler read a statement to the committee in which he charged that the Pioneer company had wrongfully sold out alleged claims to Sinclair for $1,000,000.

These claims were held invalid by the interior department but despite this Sinclair agreed to pay that amount to have the Pioneer drop the claim.

DUNNE, ARONBERG AND BROWDER ON T. U. E. L. PROGRAM

Monthly Meeting Best of Series

"Pretending democracy and a deep interest in the welfare of the rank and file, the officialdom of the United Mine Workers had to expose themselves as using the bosses' methods at the miners' convention," was the statement of William F. Dunne at the Trade Union Educational Union monthly meeting at Northwest Hall—the most successful held in months.

"This exposure of the Lewis machine," he continued, "was forced by the splendid showing of the militants. Inexperienced in the first days of the convention, when the Lewis machine jammed thru most of the important measures, the militarists gathered in strength, coming out of the convention ten times stronger than when they went in.

"That the machine of Lewis does not represent the membership, their wishes or policies," he continued, "was visible by the fact that they had to call in the police and the payroll brigade to save themselves."

He predicted that at the next convention of the United Mine Workers, "the machine will have the time of its life—as it will at the coming Illinois convention."

Phil Aronberg, a delegate from the National Needle Trades Conference, preceded Dunne with a report on the progress of the progressives in the needle industry. "In Philadelphia, Cleveland and now in Chicago, the organizations in this industry are forced," he reported, "to depend almost entirely on the militants, some of whom were even expelled members of their unions."

"The first convention of this conference held a year ago," he said, "considered only policies to be laid down. At the second there was no doubt that these were correct. The only discussion was on the problems confronting them."

Earl Browder, editor of the Labor Herald, concluded with an outline of the labor situation in Great Britain.

"The loss of over two millions in membership in two years was due to a policy of inaction on the part of the leadership now in control of the government," he said. "These policies have brought on the dock and railroad strikes which were won despite the leadership. The textile and mine workers threaten to rock the country with coming strikes and there is promise of a new line-up of labor in Great Britain—with growing power of the militants."

TEXAS MOB IS ROBBED OF ITS VICTIM; 3 HURT

Soldiers Are Called to Scatter Rioters

LUFKIN, Texas, Feb. 28.—A mob storming the jail here in an attempt to remove a Negro prisoner was dispersed by national guard troops today. The soldiers, arriving from Nacogdoches, forced the rioters to flee after three of their number had been wounded.

The prisoner was arrested in connection with the murder of Andy Sulzer in a holdup Tuesday night. Police Chief E. G. Rice said no further trouble was anticipated.

Booker McMillan, a prisoner, was arrested last night after a 24-hour chase by a sheriff's posse.

Soon after he was placed in jail, a crowd gathered and attempted to force an entrance. Sheriff's forces and local police beat them back. Three members of the crowd wounded were William Wells and John Hudgins, suffering from face and scalp injuries, and Bud Davis, shot in the shoulder.

Fight Night Baking.

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—Following on an attempt by the bread baking trade employes in New South Wales to reintroduce night baking of bread the Operative Bakers' union has declared a strike of all members. The only bakeries working are those which are engaged in day baking.

The bakers on strike have started several co-operative bakeries of their own and are getting big support from the consumers. Other unions are supporting the bakers in their fight against night baking.

SOLONS ESCAPING DELUGE OF OIL RAZZ COLLEAGUES

Heflin, Dill, Jazz up Staid Chamber

By JAY LOVESTONE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 28.—Senator Heflin of Alabama today in performing what is now called his "Daily Daugherty" and his "daily dozen" takes a couple of falls (not Falls) out of the Republican Administration and Party.

Mr. Heflin bitterly denounced Coolidge, Doheny, whom he branded as the new leader of the republican party, Daugherty and the entire republican national committee. The Senator from Alabama was especially sarcastic as he delivered his regular spread-eagle speech against the Administration. The Senator from Alabama charged that Mr. Doheny now assuming the role of the leader of the republican party is doing a lot of talking about the prosperity the republican party has brought the country. "We are not surprised at this talk by Doheny about prosperity," said Heflin. "He got the greatest oil reserve for a song. He paid only one cabinet officer for it. Perhaps others were also paid for it. We have no way of telling what transpires between crooks," the Senator went on to say.

Demands Committee Investigate.

At this point Senator Dill of Washington asked Heflin for the names of the four cabinet members, beside Daugherty, whom Mr. Doheny mentioned as having met at the Metropolitan Club at Washington. Heflin replied that he would very much like to have the committee investigate this question and tell the names to the public.

Heflin made it his business to show how Doheny was prosperous clipping coupons and cleaning up on his big oil interests. "This didn't mean that the rest of the country was prosperous," declared Mr. Heflin.

Many Jobless In New England.

The republican side was fairly empty and the democratic side well filled. Those republican leaders, like Lodge and Smoot, who were present appeared to be very dejected, tame, and without any fight in them.

As the democratic barrage was being fired, Senator Walsh of Massachusetts rose to tell the senate that he had just received a telegram from Fall River to the effect that the severe unemployment had brought about a practically complete shutting down of the textile mills of the town. The Senator pointed out that in all this talk of prosperity today work was being suspended and unemployment was increasing.

Farm Bank Failures Colossal.

Here Senator Dill of Washington interjected and stated that the bank failures in the Northwest had been so numerous that the Comptroller of the Currency did not want to make the list public for fear that it would destroy the confidence of the country in the remaining banks.

Government Corrupt.

Heflin continued to flay the Administration. He said that the country was in great distress. "The people are in distress. When anyone makes up his mind to go crooked, he goes plumb into the republican party. We have reached the time in this country when our government rests upon money, booze, and campaign funds.

"Everytime we turn a table now we find a republican official crooked. I am in favor of keeping on turning the table."

Heflin charged Coolidge with being responsible for Doheny's continuing to pump daily 4,000 barrels and Sinclair 3,000 barrels every day from the stolen oil reserves. "If a common man would do anything like that, a marshall would be sent right after him," said the Alabama Senator.

The guilt of not instructing the oil prosecutors Pomerene and Strawn to order Doheny and Sinclair to discontinue pumping this oil was fastened upon President Coolidge by Heflin.

Philadelphia Youth Organize Branch and Conduct Study Class

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 28.—At a meeting held here tonight in the headquarters of the Workers Party, 521 York avenue, an English branch of the Young Workers League was formed with several members.

The young workers of Philadelphia are very active. A class in the "A B C of Communism" is held every Thursday evening at 339 South 5th street.

After Lenin's Funeral

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER.

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

MOSCOW, Feb. 27.—When Lenin died, Tikhon, the counter-revolutionary leader of the Russian church, who has recanted and been set free, sent condolences to the government from the monastery to which he has retired.

• • •

Orders from abroad are pouring in for movies of Lenin's funeral. Less than a week after the funeral in the Red square, pictures were shown in Moscow and Petrograd of the entire funeral—bringing the body from Gorki, viewing the body in the Dom Soyuzov, the ceremony in the hall, the funeral procession, and the five-minute ceremony on the Red square. They were shown in the provinces a few days later.

• • •

The committee for children, central committee, Russian Communist party, has issued bronze seals with Lenin's bust to be used as letter seals. The proceeds from the sales will be used on behalf of the homeless children.

• • •

The question of what kind of memorials are to be erected to Lenin will be discussed in a series of meetings in the Socialist section of the Russian Academy of Art. The first speaker is the artist G. B. Yakulov, who will expound the idea that the historic events of our times demand not sculptural but architectural treatment.

BANKERS' FRIEND, WEEKS, OPPOSES FREE PHILIPPINES

$70,000,000 in Bonds Owned in U. S.

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28th. — Seventy million dollars of Philippine government bonds, which have 29 years still to run, are held by American banks.

That was the chief definite reason urged by Secretary of War Weeks, at a hearing before the House Committee on insular affairs, against giving immediate independence to the islands.

Weeks, the bond broker, now the cabinet officer, talked pompously of the "obligation" of the United States to the Philippines, and of the need for prudent consideration of any change in relations with the Filipino people. They were very near to Japan and China, and anyhow the present demand for independence was "not expressive of the best interests and wishes and mature consideration" of the Filipinos.

Wants Pound of Flesh.

Weeks said the United States should hold the islands until full guaranty of payment of these bonds, and some $41,500,000 of other securities, was made. He and General McIntyre, head of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, admitted that the United States had no legal claim based on these debts, but they thought there was a "moral" claim which would justify continued American occupation. Weeks felt that if "for a definite period" American rule should be guaranteed, American capital would continue to flow into the islands and develop the resources there.

Representative Schaefer of Wisconsin asked, pointedly, whether Weeks did not mean that American forces should hold the islands for the next 29 years. Weeks made no direct reply.

Filipino Demands Freedom.

Speaker Manuel Rojas of the island legislature replied to the broker-secretary, saying that the bad financial conditions of three years ago in the islands were due to world depression in trade, and had now disappeared. The government is in a sound condition. It asks no financial help from America.

"We are a people who have fought several wars for our freedom," he remarked. "For three years we waged a hopeless struggle with the United States to win our independence. We have given deliberate and mature consideration to this issue. We are not in doubt. We want to stand free."

One-Fourth of Female Factory Employes Get Less than $12 Weekly

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—This is likely to prove the crucial week for the 48-hour week and minimum wage bills. On Tuesday, the 26th, a hearing was held before the joint senate and assembly committee which was attended by representatives of all districts of the state. These based their arguments for the necessity of the bills on the fact that women workers of the state are being underpaid and overworked—more than half of those employed in factories and mercantile establishments receiving less than $15.75 per week, and a fourth of them less than $12. The most optimistic of all the many surveys that have been made place the average cost of living at $16.00.

Use of Lumber on Louisiana Infants Legal, Says Court

(By The Federated Press)

SHREVEPORT, La., Feb. 28.—Louisiana, one of the most backward states in the union in education, still clings to the old fashioned paddle to punish children. Miss Myra Woodward, principal of a local school was charged in the dist[illegible] court with using a wooden pa[illegible] to punish Willie Tamplin, a 6 year old school boy. The disobedience of the child consisted in playing in the school yard after hours. Trying to escape the punishment, the boy was injured by falling down a flight of steps.

Judge E. P. Mills discharged the teacher on the grounds that the state of Louisiana recognized the use of a wooden paddle to punish children.

Montreal Labor in Demand for Say on School Commission

MONTREAL, Feb. 28.—Labor representation on the provincial commission to study the educational problem of the province of Quebec is demanded by the Montreal Trades and Labor council. As the children of workmen form by far the greater part of the attendants of public schools in the province, free textbooks, the nationalization of schools, free tuition, and compulsory education are urged in the resolution. These demands forwarded to the provincial government are in accordance with those laid down in last year's trade union conference in Vancouver, B. C.

Another Attempt Made to Deport Mexican Radical

(By The Federated Press)

SAN QUENTIN, Calif., Feb. 28.—An attempt is being made to revive deportation proceedings against Ramon Sanchez, a Mexican criminal syndicalism prisoner here. A previous attempt in 1922 was averted. Meanwhile Sanchez' health has been affected by incarceration in the dungeon in various protest strikes.

As the terms of the earlier criminal syndicalism victims approach completion, the state government is making strenuous efforts to have the few foreign-born among them deported by the federal authorities. So far, as in the cases of Jack Gavell and James Olson, and the earlier action against Sanchez, the authorities have been unsuccessful in their attempts.

Gurley Flynn Speaks at Membership Drive of New York Y. W. L.

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—The Young Workers League of New York will begin a drive for new members with a mass meeting at Webster Hall, 119 E. 11th St., Sunday afternoon, March 2. In addidtion to a list of prominent speakers headed by Elizabeth Gurley Flynn there will be a fine musical program. The Freiheit Singing Society, and the Lithuanian Mandolin Orchestra will be the headliners.

The Young Workers League here has recently increased its influence greatly by taking up new activities and doing a great deal of hard work. The League aims to bring within its fold every militant young worker during its membership drive.

Farmer-Labor Party of West Va. Plans Convention Mar. 13

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., Feb. 28—The Farmer-Labor Party of West Virginia will hold a convention here beginning March 13, to organize for the coming political campaign. A call has been sent out asking local labor unions and working class political parties to send delegates. This convention, indications are, will be the biggest ever held in West Virginia. Preparations are being made to accomodate hundreds of delegates.

Oil Scandal Blocks Other Agents of Big Biz in Washington

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Government hydro-electric power plants will be constructed at the Yuma irrigation project in Arizona, and on the Gem project in Idaho, at a cost of $250,000 and $450,000 respectively, due to the fight made by Senator Ashurst and Senator Borah in the Senate against private power companies' spokesmen in that body, in debate on the Interior Department appropriations bill. Fear of another scandal proved too strong for the corporation bloc to organize their usual resistance.

Another Bank Hits the Trail to the Tall Financial Timbers

ANTELOPE, Mont., Feb. 28.—The Citizens' State bank, the last of Antelope's financial institutions, has closed its doors to go into receivership. Farmers who had deposited money from the sale of their 1923 crops and local business men are losers. Sheridan county had $22,000 on deposit in county funds which it has been unable to draw since 1921. The county deposit is covered by surety bonds.

Greek Workers Give Dance in New York Wednesday, Mar. 5th

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—The radical workers of New York will be entertained by the Greek branch of the Workers Party, at a big dance and entertainment, Wednesday evening, March 5th, Central Opera House, 205 E. 67th St.

Avert Stage Strike.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 28.—The threatened strike of the stage craft unions was averted by a settlement which provides for increases to go into effect Sept. 1. Musicians will get a raise of $3.50 a week, carpenters and assistant carpenters $5 a week, miscellaneous help, 50 cents a day.

This is a compromise settlement, carpenters having asked for a raise of $10 instead of $5, and assistant carpenters of $15 instead of $5.

HOLD YOUR NOSE, THE WAR FRAUD SCANDALS MAY COME IN BUNCH

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—The American people must not be given too much light on these war fraud cases, all at once. It might hurt them—or somebody.

Senator King of Utah, rising in his place on Feb. 19, moved to rescind the order of the previous day under which Attorney General Daugherty's report on the war fraud litigation was to have been printed as a public document.

"My attention has been called," he said, "to some matters connected with the report which, in my judgment, indicate that perhaps that order was improvidently issued."

Inasmuch as the report from Daugherty had been demanded at King's suggestion, his willingness to turn the material over to the senate judiciary committee for its carefully scrutiny was welcomed by Senator Willis, spokesman for Daugherty, and the senate agreed to that course.

Past Legion Head Says War Shouters Are Now Anti-Bonus

(By The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 28.—Alvin M. Owsley, past national commander, American legion, addressing a bonus mass meeting here, predicted victory for the soldier bonus bill The measure will pass the house by a 6 to 1 vote, Owsley thinks.

"The men who are fighting the bonus bill now are the ones who were shouting the loudest for the men to go out and fight during the war," the speaker asserted. He pointed out that the United States is the only country engaged in the world war that has not granted its soldiers a bonus.

Owsley charged that large employers have coerced their employes into flooding Washington with anti-bonus propaganda. In numerous cases, the speaker said, employes have been given the choice of writing their congressmen in opposition to the bonus bill or being fired.

Blood Tests Wanted by St. Louis Cooks to Restore Confidence

(By The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 28.—Legislation compelling cooks to submit to blood tests and physical examinations every 60 days is being advocated by union cooks of this city. "Conditions in some of our eating places are deplorable," says Jack Reed, business agent of the union. "Many of those handling food for public consumption have communicable diseases of the worst sort, and we believe the public would more readily patronize restaurants which announced that the health of its food handlers was under state or city supervision."

Cooks and Pastry Cooks' local No. 26 is recovering from an open shop drive, 1920, which made heavy inroads on the union's membership. The union, with more than 700 members, was almost destroyed. As a result of an organization campaign, the local has been recruited to nearly 300 members.

New York Bills Favored by Workers Go to the Assembly

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—During the past week the Upper House of New York State Legislature passed the following bills favored by organized labor:

Restoring direct primary nomination, initiation and referendum at U. S. senators and state and district judges; providing for popular amendment of State Constitution by petition, initiation and referendum, at following elections providing for an executive budget of annual state expenditure; requiring publication of campaign receipts and expenses before, instead of after, elections; providing for payment of state service bonds to resident veterans of the World War at rate of $10 for each month served. All these measures have now gone to the Assembly for final action.

Mexican Labor Is Suspicious of Ramsay McDonald Government

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO, CITY, Feb. 28.—Labor circles here are beginning to express doubts as to the genuine proletarian character of the new British government because recognition is being withheld from Mexico on various pretexts. Reports coming from Great Britain are to the effect that that country will not recognize Mexico until "claims of British citizens" are satisfied.

As these citizens are the exploiters of Mexico and their claims are not unlike those of French and British citizens against Russia, the workers here cannot see why this country should not be recognized first and the claims discussed afterward. Nor do they feel it the mission of a labor government to protect "its" finance imperialist exploiting groups.

Go Thru an Air Hole.

DUBUQUE, Ia., Feb. 28.—Three men were drowned and a fourth narrowly escaped the same fate when an automobile they were driving across the frozen Mississippi river plunged into an air-hole last night.

SPLIT IN MORON CAMP RESULTS IN NEW KLAN ORDER

New Tribe Selects Kansas City for Home

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 28.—The Knights of the Mystic Klan today joined the list of rival societies of the Ku Klux Klan, growing out of internal differences in the hooded order.

The new secret organization was launched here last night at a conference of 200 delegates from thirteen states. The meeting, originally called by E. Y. Clarke, former imperial wizard of the Klan, to "cure or kill" the "invisible empire," passed resolutions condemning William Joseph Simmons, former leader of one faction who recently made "peace" with Imperial Wizard Evans.

The Klan was labeled an "autocratic organization whose object was to overthrow free government."

The delegates elected John R. Jones as chairman of a tempororay board of control and selected Kansas City as national headquarters.

"Castles" of the Mystic Klan were voted in Milwaukee, Durham, N. C.; Russell, Kentucky; Eldorado, Kansas; Tulsa, Oklahoma; Kansas City and Atlanta.

Get Own Medicine.

WAUKESHA, Wis., Feb. 28.—Under the guard of policemen and volunteers a score of Ku Klux Klansmen were spirited from a hotel here early today, following the mobbing of a Klan meeting here last night.

Furniture and windows on the lower floor of the hotel were wrecked in a spirited fight between several hundred persons opposed to the Klan and members of the Klan. Most of the klansmen escaped, the rest taking refuge behind barricaded doors on the second floor of the hotel.

Klan leaders from Milwaukee arrived by automoible early today and took the besieged klansmen out of town while police guarded against further attacks.

Howled at Klansmen.

Several persons were slightly injured.

The meeting was called for the purpose of organizing a local unit of the Klan. Several citizens opposed to the Klan attended the meeting, and they howled and jeered at the speakers.

The lights were turned out and a crowd in the street rushed the doors. A free-for-all fight followed in the darkness. Police aided by volunteers entered the fray and restored order after a half hour of fighting.

Prof. Passes Buck for College Evils to Pupils' Parents

Large numbers of college students are drunkards, gamblers and illiterate, Albert Parker Fitch, former professor of history at Amherst college, declared in a speech to the National Education Association convention here.

"They are dull because they won't study," he said. "They think they are sent to college to learn to make money or prepare for matrimony.

"They read frothy stories, are strong on card games, gossip, and athletic contests. Religion means nothing to them. They are a product of our modern society."

These students swear like "pirates" because their vocabularies are limited due to lack of study, Fitch declared. The fault lies with their parents, he said.

"If parents aren't quite so sure about prohibition how can you expect their children to be?"

Jesus of Nazareth Is Burning Issue in California State

(By The Federated Press)

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Feb. 28.—The prosecution has appealed to the state supreme court the criminal syndicalism cases of William Flanagan and Albert Stangeland, on which the appellate court recently reversed decision. The latter ruled that it was necessary that Flanagan and Stangeland should have realized "the illegal nature of the I. W. W." at the time they joined it. The appeal court also stated that conviction was unjust in so far as it was based on anti-religious beliefs or statements (this charge arising from some of the I. W. W. songs, quoted in court).

The petition for appeal to the supreme court takes issue with these findings, claiming in essence that disbelief in the divinity of Christ is a sign of "criminal tendencies." Thus does the fundamentalist controversy enter the realm of California politics.

House Will Debate Ford's Plan to Gobble Muscle Shoals

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Representative Madden, chairman of the house appropriations committee, announced in the house today that agreement had been reached to make the Muscle Shoals bill accepting the offer of Henry Ford for the project a special order to be taken up for consideration immediately after the tax bill.

It was expected the tax bill will be disposed of Friday or Saturday of this week.

THE POWER COLUMN

How to Make the Daily Worker Grow

Choose Your Method and MAKE It Work

THERE are so many different ways by which THE DAILY WORKER can be increased that we hesitate to print all of them that come to our mind and all of them that DAILY WORKER agents and boosters send in, for fear that some comrades will be confused by the multitude of opportunities and not stick to any of them long enough to make it work.

Of the dozens of special methods which DAILY WORKER agents have used with success, all of them have one thing in common:—to make them successful, persistency and energy was required. Basically everywhere the problem of securing new readers for THE DAILY WORKER is the same:

1.—It is necessary to make THE DAILY WORKER known.

2.—It is necessary to make THE DAILY WORKER attractive to the workers.

3.—It is necessary to stick to the job of selling, to overcome petty obstacles and "turn-downs" by sticking to the job.

Previously, in The Power Column, we have suggested a number of ways by which THE DAILY WORKER can best be advertised. In our opinion the best and most constant method of advertisement is by "word of mouth".

One of the first tasks of DAILY WORKER branch agents is to get the members of his branch and the workers in his locality to talking about THE DAILY WORKER. "TALK IT UP" is a slogan which must be in continuous use.

Talk about THE DAILY WORKER, talk about it in general, talk about special features of it in particular, certain articles or editorials, certain policies which it advocates.

When in a meeting of workers, get the floor to tell about THE DAILY WORKER, the great new labor paper which is attracting thousands to it. When in a group of workers, turn the conversation to the matter of the press and tell about THE DAILY WORKER which has been issued to save the working-class from the scourge of the boss-kept press. When talking to a friend or shop mate or a member of your union, tell him about THE DAILY WORKER. Always carry a few copies in your pocket so that you back up your statements by showing the paper. Make THE DAILY WORKER a permanent and constant topic of conversation. It's the biggest thing in the American labor movement.

By advertising THE DAILY WORKER is in itself making it attractive to thinking workers. Everyone of them knows that the capitalist press is poison. With many it is necessary only to show THE DAILY WORKER in order to secure a subscription. With others it sometimes needs a little amplification, a little argument and the sale is made.

But of all the things necessary for the successful work of THE DAILY WORKER booster it is sticking on the job which is the most important. With the knowledge that THE DAILY WORKER is the best daily newspaper in America it is necessary only to work hard enough and to keep at it to achieve success. Choose your method of work and then keep at it until it succeeds.

10,000 NEW SUBSCRIBERS BY JUNE 15. HOW MANY ARE YOU GOING TO GET?

Watch for the Announcement of the Sub Campaign.

* * * *

Canton, Ohio.

The Power Column: I am getting THE DAILY WORKER every day and have been passing it along to each and every worker in the steel plant. I have even had a copy posted on one of the bulletin boards in the plant.

It is something the working man has needed for years to put him in touch with what is going on all over the world. The boys all seem to enjoy it and I have ten new subscribers I'll send you on pay day.

I have made it plain to the boys that I would be glad to send in to you any news they might have.

Yours very truly,
JOHN P. O'BRIEN, Chairman,
International Steel Workers of the World.

* * * *

The Power Column: One way I get subs is to canvass in the evening when the men are home from work. I tell them all about the paper. Some of them try to put me off but I tell them they can pay me on payday.

In order to be able to get them to subscribe to some working class paper, I take a list of the foreign language papers with me with their subscription prices. If any worker tells me he can't read English then I tell them about the worker's paper which is published in their own language. Then they can't put me off; I either sell THE DAILY WORKER or one of the others.

I think I have some good advice to give to other DAILY WORKER agents: Some evening go to visit your neighbor. Don't say anything about our paper right away. They will start themselves. This is what most of them say to me: "Gee I wish I had something to read. What do you do these long evenings?" Then is your chance. Tell them about THE DAILY WORKER and before you leave you will have a new sub. Try this and see how it works. If you can't get them the first time try them again and you will surely succeed.

One party told me that he had a good job and didn't like to lose it just now. You see he would sooner sell himself for a job than to the working class. Pity this kind that are still so dumb. Some of them call me a red but I laugh at them and tell them that red is a nice color.

Comradely yours,
MRS. MIKE GERGITCH, Marianna, Pa.

Dear Comrades: Better send me a couple more sales books. If you wish my branch to cover Austin Station I have a couple of reliable comrades to help me out. I am literature agent for my branch; so for commissions due me I give literature to those subscribing. What do you think of that? It ought to help me clean my shelves.

Yours for success,
E. WICKSTROM, Oak Park, Ill.

What have you to say to your fellow DAILY WORKER boosters? Say it thru The Power Column.

PHILA. PAINTERS WILL TAKE PART IN MAY 30 MEET

Say Teapot Shows Old Parties Rotten

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 28. — Painters' Local No. 1083, of Philadelphia, after a heated debate, vigorously condemned the Teapot Dome steal and endorsed the St. Paul Conference by adopting the following resolution:

The senate investigation of the Teapot Dome oil leases show that the government of the United States under both republican and democratic administrations serves the capitalists as an instrument for looting the nation. Senators, cabinet officers have been shown to be the paid men of big capitalist oil interests and even presidents are not immune from their influence. Fall, Denby, McAdoo, Daugherty, Lane, Roosevelt; these are the names which the workers and farmers of this country have been asked to honor, but now they are all covered with the slime of corruption and graft.

Government, Workers' Enemy.

The Teapot Dome exposures only prove again on a larger scale what has been proven in this country hundreds of times; that the government of the United States serves the interests of a privileged class and is the enemy of the workers and farmers who produce the wealth of the country.

It proves again that not one among the high and mighty of the old parties is immune from the corruption, grafting and looting thru which the capitalists take for themselves the wealth of the nation. It proves again that the existing system of industry and government is part of one system of special privilege and exploitation thru which the workers and farmers are robbed of what they produce.

There is only one answer to Teapot Dome and the whole system of Teapot Domes which is capitalism—the organization of a Farmer-Labor Party and the struggle for a workers' and farmers' government. Only a workers' and farmers' government will end the looting of the nation by the capitalists. A great; mass Farmer-Labor Party must carry on the struggle to establish that workers' and farmers' government.

Endorse May 30th Convention.

Whereas a convention has been called for May 30th at St. Paul by the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, The Federated Farmer-Labor Party, The Farmer Labor Party of Washington, Montana and South Dakota and other organizations, for the nomination of a farmer-labor candidate for president and the adoption of a national platform and this convention gives the opportunity to create the mass farmer-labor party which will carry on the fight for a Workers and Farmers Government.

Be it therefore resolved, that we indorse the May 30 convention and pledge ourselves to send delegates to this convention, and Be it further resolved, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the labor press and to the representatives in congress and the senate from this territory.

Workers Party Mass Meeting.

A huge "Teapot Dome" mass meeting arranged by the Workers Party, Philadelphia local, will be held Friday evening, Feb. 29, at the Machinists' Temple, 1239 Spring Garden Street. William Weinstone of New York, S. Sklaroff of Philadelphia, R. Baker of New York, of the Machinists Union, and A. Jakira, district organizer of the Workers Party, will speak.

Wall Street Sorry Ramsay Wouldn't Break Dock Strike

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—The more excitable heads in Wall Street are breathing amusing sighs of relief at the apparent moderation of this dangerous radical, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald. Indeed, they are in their excess of relief, verbally and thru the columns of their press patting the Scotch labor leader on the back.

"He is quite giving the lie to those who announced that the labor ministry would bring a series of disasters," says one observer. And another writer makes this typical observation: "An almost comic touch is furnished by the spectacle of the labor premier passing a bill to build warships by the aid of the Conservatives against the protests of his party, giving the latter, meanwhile, a sharp lecture on the real way to secure disarmament."

However, the fact that the dock workers' strike "apparently ended in a victory for labor" has cooled the emotions of a good many. Wall Street, that very small part of it which occasionally reads history, rather expected MacDonald to pull a Briand, so to speak.

POLITICALS ARE GETTING THE DAILY WORKER

It Goes Into Fifteen Different Prisons

The DAILY WORKER is being sent to fifteen different prisons in this country and to more than twenty different political prisoners thru the generosity of the readers of the DAILY WORKER.

This means that scores of political prisoners are being informed of what the working class movement all over the world is doing. The political prisoners are appreciative of the kindness of the readers of the DAILY WORKER who are having the paper sent to them. Every prisoner to whom the paper has been sent has written in thanking us and the people who enabled him to get the paper.

The letters, which cannot be quoted because of prison rules, tell in the simple language of sincere men what it means to be remembered by the people on the outside. One prisoner who has given a contribution to DAILY WORKER sends in $3 for a subscription for another prisoner who is serving a life term.

The arrangement by which readers of the DAILY WORKER send their paper to the political prisoners is this: The reader send $3 to the business office and asks that the DAILY WORKER be sent to a political prisoner for a year. We see to it that the political prisoner gets the paper. The person sending the sub can either specify that the paper be sent to a particular prisoner or let us use our judgment about entering the sub. If you do not name a particular prisoner we will send the paper to a political who is in a prison where the "DAILY" is not now going. In that way more prisoners are reached by the DAILY WORKER because several persons can read the same paper.

Send us $3 and we will do the rest. Don't forget the political prisoners. Act at once.

Aliens Coming in Thru Loop Holes in Immigration Law

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—The present immigration law which has inflicted so much unnecessary hardship on innocent persons does not, despite the rigid literal interpretation given it by the officials who enforce it, really restrict.

Immigration Commissioner Curran says it has been shot thru with "loop holes" by federal court decisions, and that steamship companies are urging aliens to take advantage of various precedents recently set up and come to America.

Curran cites the case of Rabbi Gottlieb. The rabbi when barred because he was in excess of quota protested that he was exempt from the working of the law because it specifically exempted ministers. He claimed exemption also for his wife, arguing that the quota law supplements only and does not supplant the previous immigration law which permitted the entry of the wives of ministers, etc. He won his case.

An Armenian, who had been admitted, went back to Europe after a brief stay here and brought back his wife. She was in excess of quota, but the Armenian pointed to the precedent of the rabbi's wife, and won his case, too.

These precedents were welcomed particularly in Italy, and Curran declares that many Italians come here and are admitted, then return to Italy and return with their wives and children and demand that they be admitted altho they are in excess of quota. And then, recently eight nuns, barred because in excess of quota, were admitted as teachers.

The Italian quota was exhausted long since but in the last two weeks steamers have brought more than 2,000 Italian immigrants and most of these, Curran says, successfully claimed exemption from the workings of the quota law.

Militarists Threaten to Murder Mother of Tokio Officers' Victim

TOKIO, Japan, Feb. 28.—Following the murder of the socialist, Osugi Sakae, his wife, Ito Noe, and their nephew, Tachibana Soichi, who were strangled to death by militarists several days after the recent earthquake, the grief-stricken mother of the murdered child has been inundated with letters from the supporters of the militarists, threatening vicious acts of recrimination should she institute civil proceedings.

Among other gently persuasive missives was one which said that should a civil action be commenced, she and the remainder of her family "would be exterminated."

The announcement made that Captain Amakasu, who confessd to strangling Osugi and his wife, had been sentenced to three years in jail, has been followed by another announcement stating that Amakasu has been pardoned and acquitted. The first announcement was made public to throw dust in the eyes of the people—the second was made in military circles only.

The military caste thus stands revealed in all its brutal and arrogant autocracy. If there be any who still retain the slightest hope of justice for the workers from such people, in face of their protection of self-accused murderers, theirs must indeed be the "faith sublime."

Kamenev Discusses Big Problems Before Russian Communists

NOTE:—Today the DAILY WORKER begins the publication of the speech by Chairman Kamenev, of the Moscow Soviet, on the problems confronting the Russian Communist Party. This discussion has been referred to as the third greatest discussion within the Russian Communist Party since the Bolshevik Revolution, in November, 1917. The speech of Kamenev will be followed by the views of other prominent Russian Communists. Kamenev spoke to the Moscow Communists as follows:

KAMENEV SPEAKS.

COMRADES! I shall deal with the most important points only, and with the results of the discussion which is going on at the present time in all the districts.

If we examine into all the objections, doubts, and indications, which we have all heard raised at the districts meetings, we must candidly admit that the cardinal question yielded as the result and summing up of all these discussions is as follows: yes, it is true that the Workers' Democracy has been proclaimed by the central; it is true that the fundamental guarantees for the carrying out of the workers' democracy are contained in the resolution passed by the Central; but is the present Central worthy of confidence?

Can we really believe that the policy indicated by the resolution has actually been firmly determined upon by the Central, and that the present Central will carry out this policy?

I have formulated, in these words, the whole of the doubts and objections which we have been hearing from those who appear as opponents against the Central.

This is the form in which I put the question to myself, and I think that it will have to be put to the whole Moscow organization in this form. We are faced by one of two things: Either these resolutions may be safely entrusted to the Central for their execution; or: we are in possession of a piece of paper, representing a policy which it is for the Party to see carried out, for it is not issued by the Central on its own initiative, only but under pressure; we are in possession of a piece of paper, but not of a conviction that the Central will actually realize its contents.

Mutual Confidence Necessary.

This is the cardinal question confronting your meeting, and demanding a clear and unequivocal answer. The change of policy which we intend carrying out with you cannot be performed unless there is mutual confidence between us.

Therefore, I regard it as incumbent on me to explain how the Central came to formulate in its resolution the idea and the principles which are contained in it. This came about under the following influence: opinions have frequently been expressed at meetings, to the effect that the Central acted under pressure of the opposition within the Party; that some definite document exists in which all this voluntary action is dictated; that the Central has, however, taken no notice of this, etc. Is there any foundation for all these assertions?

In the first place I deem it necessary to draw a dividing line between this question and all the unfounded rumors and gossip which have gathered around them.

At one district meeting, a written declaration actually obliged me to tell a comrade straight out that such declarations, coming from our own midst, are nothing more nor less than a reflection of that kind of idle chatter amongst us which has already become a political weapon against our Party in the hands of our enemies.

For there is not one amongst us who can have the slightest doubt—and for us old Bolsheviki, who have already passed thru a hard school, it is a perfectly illuminating fact—but that at the moment when the bourgeoisie is robbed of the press and of the possibility of open attack upon us, at this moment such petty bourgeoisie tittle tattles as has contrived to percolate into our ranks will stop at nothing, will disintegrate us more and more, will undermine the authority of our central institutions, and form a political weapon against us.

At present there is a danger that those members of our Party who are insufficiently schooled, insufficiently firm in principle, may be deceived by this gossip.

Let us, therefore, set it aside along with all the idle rumors and assertions which cannot be proved by documents; it should form no part of our discussion on actualities. Let us occupy ourselves solely with that which any one of us can prove.

Dangers to Party.

What were the origins of this question in the Central? The first and fundamental event compelling the Central to accord attention to the unsound conditions obtaining within our Party was something outside of the Party itself, in the working class.

In July and August, extremely alarming phenomena showed themselves among the working class, which could not be passed over by the central institutions. We underwent a period of strikes in Kharkov and Sormovo. The direct causes of these strikes, the actual reasons for their outbreak, varied in the different cases.

We, as the Party apparatus, as the state apparatus, were partly to blame. But this only applies to the immediate cause. The general conditions causing the movement forced us to direct our attention to the situation within our Party itself. We had to ask ourselves if it were possible to imagine a situation in which the Party organization is unable to foresee an approaching wave of dissatisfaction among the masses; that such a case could be possible as that at Zindel's, where a movement arose in August, where the representative of the nucleus and the manager admitted that the movement was entirely unexpected for the nucleus, and this comrade declared that: "We had no idea of the movement. The Yatchayka (nucleus) lost its head when it began; it lost its direction." Was this the fault of this yatchayka itself, or must it not rather be laid to the account of the unsound symptoms observable within our organization?

We should, indeed, be blind or short-sighted should we maintain that the happenings in Moscow, in Kharkov, in Sormovo, and other places, are but passing episodes not requiring our attention, and having no bearing on the inner development and inner life of our Party.

At the same time, phenomena became noticeable within our Party itself, phenomena equally symptomatic, and speedily demanding our whole attention.

This was the rise of the counter-revolutionary "workers' group," which represented a real danger, and whose symptomatic and essential character did not consist in its existence as a counter-revolutionary organization, but in the circumstance that one of these organizations—the workers' group—possessed connections among the working class, and began to have effect, in combination with the various attendant rumors, upon a certain section of our Party, if only upon a weak and inferior section.

Malady Must Be Cured.

These two fundamental phenomena, which appeared quite independently of any events within the Central, of any differences of opinion and resultant discussion among those belonging to the Central, faced us with a question quite outside of all this: The Party is attacked by a disease which has to be cured.

And further analysis and examination of this question showed us that there are many phenomena in the life of the working class to which the Party has adapted itself too slowly, and to which the Party has devoted too little attention. In the first place Comrade Lenin drew attention two years ago to the fact that our proletariat was becoming declassed and decomposed.

We must, however, now grasp the fact (already partially demonstrable by statistical data) that this declassing process in the proletariat, the fundamental process of the inner life of our Party from 1919 till 1920 and 1921, has ceased, and that we are now experiencing the reversed process—the process of consolidation, of improvement, of return of the honest native proletariat to the city, of revival in the inner life of the working class, and of improvement in its material position.

And upon this basis, the basis of the consolidation of the working class, of the comparative improvement of its material position, we find an awakening in the inner ideological, cultural, and political life of the working class, a growth of demands put upon life, a rise of cultural level, and an increase of the political demands put upon us, the Communists.

Thus the Party is faced by the task of not being behind-hand, of adapting its inner life with all speed, if it is to be equal to meeting these fresh tasks imposed by the higher standards and advanced consolidation of the working class. Should the Central and other Party organizations respond to these facts by closing their eyes, or by maintaining that everything is in perfect order, there is no doubt but that they would be the greatest criminals; their assumption of an official and authoritative satisfactory state of affairs might plunge the Party into the abyss.

The Dangers of the N. E. P.

But in actual fact nothing of the kind has happened, and the structure and traditions of our Party render it impossible for it to happen. The above facts simply became the objective motives for the movement, which became apparent in all our organizations, beginning with the Central, and based on the endeavor to enhance political activity within our Party itself, and to raise it to the required level.

To this another circumstance must be added, one which becomes increasingly prominent, and to which we must devote much more attention in the future than in the past, for it concerns us more and more. We are living under the conditions of the New Economic Policy. I shall not deal with the new economic policy at this meeting, but I am aware that energetic attacks are being made upon it and upon the public economic policy pursued by the Central, and I am convinced that we shall presently have to thrash out this matter at a similar meeting to this, and come to a decision as to who is right—the Central which pursues a definite economic line, or the assailants attacking this policy from the districts.

At the present moment I shall merely touch upon the question of the influence exercised by the NEP, at our own level, upon the question as to whether we are able to boast that the fighting unity, the psychological and political peculiarities possessed by our Party during the civil war a few years ago, still remain with us.

If we do not deliberately close our eyes, and try to pretend that everything is in order; if we admit that we are bound to regard our own experience with a critical eye; then we must come to the following conclusions: Of course not. And for the very sufficient reason that our Party consists of three parts of the proletariat, the peasants, and the employes—the intelligenzia, and that it is impossible to imagine that these three special groups are not subject to the corresponding influences brought to bear upon them from directions outside of our Party.

Psychology of Party Groups.

Thus the proletarian wing of our Party, under constant pressure from the masses in the works and factories, possesses an entirely different pshychological conception of things than, for instance, the intellectual wing, consisting of employes, which latter wing is again living in quite another atmosphere to that of the peasant wing of the Party, which has a mentality of its own.

Without going further into details, we can see clearly that this NEP is bound to have a different effect on the different wings of our Party, especially on the first wing, that wing which we have sent along with you far into the camp of enemy in the NEP.

Those of our Party who have thus been sent into the camp of the enemy must receive our full support in every respect, but we must not forget that we have placed them in a position in which they cannot shut themselves off from the atmosphere so different to that breathed by our Party.

If we take a workman, a Communist from the ranks of the intelligenzia, and appoint him director of a bank, president of a trade exchange, or give him a leading and responsible position, or place him at the head of a syndicate, we must admit to ourselves that we are sending our comrade to a very dangerous position, for we are not sending him out to fight hand to hand with the bourgeoisie, but to make agreements with it, to sign contracts with it, to carry on commerce, etc.

I repeat, that we should be blind were we to forget here Marxism, or to forget that the division which we have sent forward to occupy this post is much more liable than any other division—much more than the workman at his bench—to degeneration as Communists, and to succumb to the NEP. And we should be acting criminally with regard to these comrades if we did not adopt measures for neutralizing this influence.

Thirty Per Cent of the Price of Coal Goes Into the Pockets of Coal Dealers in Profits

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor.)

Profits absorbed about one-third of the price charged by the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company for anthracite coal produced during 1923, according to the annual report of the company. The report shows a total revenue of $27,098,022 while expenses amounted to only $18,540,690.

President S. D. Warriner of the company, who was spokesman of the operators in the wage negotiations, could have allowed his 8,407 employes at least $300 apiece in additional wages during the year without cutting profits to common stockholders below a 6 per cent level.

Actual profits remaining to stockholders after paying bond interest and making excessive deductions for depreciation, depletion and other reserves amounted to approximately $12 on each $100 invested. Out of this the regular 8 per cent dividends were paid and there remained $1,134,035 to be added to the undivided surplus profits which guarantee dividends during years when miners are denied an opportunity to work full time.

Revenues	$27,098,022
Expenses	18,540,690
Gross profits	8,557,332
Reserves, including depletion	2,229,625
General expenses, taxes and interest	2,854,200
Profit for common stock	3,473,507

There were 4,206,961 tons of coal mined from the company's property during the year. The receipts of the company, therefore, figure $6.74 a ton while the expenses figured only $4.61 a ton. This means that the company was charging $2.13 more a ton than the actual cost of producing the coal. After excessive deductions for depreciation, depletion and other reserves the profit remaining amounted to $1.50 a ton.

During the four years since 1920 the average profit remaining for stockholders after deductions for interest, taxes and reserves has amounted to 85 cents a ton produced, which compares with 64 cents a ton during the years 1912 to 1914. The company is now charging for depletion at the rate of 9 cents a ton altho it admitted in 1912 that a charge of 5 cents a ton would pay for all its coal land in 20 years. Deductions for other reserves are even more unwarranted, the total amounting in 1923 to 63 cents a ton. Such depletion and depreciation items are today regularly used by corporations controlling natural resources to hide away excessive profits for division later as cash bonuses or as stock dividends.

Annual Profits of 60 Per Cent.

If you want to make easy money on a small investment the game is evidently to get on the inside in the railroad equipment business. Profits made by the Chicago Railway Equipment Co. during 1923 were so large that the company was evidently ashamed to show them in its report. At least the Chicago Journal of Commerce says: "While the report shows an apparently studied avoidance of actual earnings it declares that 1923 earnings were the largest in the history of the company." The directors recommended raising the annual dividends to a 12 per cent rate and remarked that the handsome balance in undivided profits was a guarantee of the payment of dividends for 1924.

From another source, however, come actual figures showing that net profits for 1923 amounted to $1,097,321, equivalent after payment of preferred dividends to $14.80 on each share of common stock. But as the par value on each share is only $25 this means an annual profit of nearly 60 per cent. Evidently this corporation also got its snout into the trough of the railroad $1,000,000,000 rehabilitation campaign.

HINDU REBELS DENIED ASYLUM BY THE FRENCH

Action Due to Pressure of British

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MADRAS, India, Feb. 28.—Acting under British pressure, French authorities have expelled from Pondicherry, Indian nationalists who sought refuge as political exiles on French soil. Thus the right of political asylum, traditionally respected in France, is violated by her colonial officials. During twenty years, Indian nationalists have found protection in the French settlements of Pondicherry and Chandernagere. Even during the war, when all constitutional rights were set aside, Indian refugees were not expelled from the French settlements.

No reason has been given for this expulsion. Since the victims cannot go to any other country without crossing British territory, expulsion means practically their extradition, which is a direct contravention of all codes and usages of International Law. The expelled refugees will try to reach France, there to claim the right of refuge which belongs to them. Will the French Government and public vindicate this right?

Cleveland Finns Organize Council for Foreign-Born

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Feb., 27.—The local Finnish branch of the Workers Party decided in its last regular meeting to call a massmeeting among the Finns here, irrespective of political views, in order to form a council for the protection of foreign-born workers.

The aim of this council will be a fight, the laws against registration and fingerprinting of those foreign-born workers who have not taken citizen papers in the United States of America. The Finnish branch, therefore will combine with other local organizations, for the formation of above named council, which will carry on an aggressive campaign against the proposed laws.

The undersigned also wishes to say that all Finns in this locality should be subscribers of The Daily Worker. We can become subscribers by just letting our literature agent Com. Matt Peltonen take our names and addresses when Matt comes around, of course he wants a little money, too, for the sub, but that is so little that everybody can give without any excuse.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS
CONDUCTED - BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

The Difference Between Child Labor and Youth Labor.

By HARRY GANNES

THERE IS much confusion in the minds of many workers between child labor and youth labor. The regular party politicians, especially those active in some attempt to squelch the child labor protest, completely becloud the entire issue of the exploitation of the children and the youth.

Sam Gompers, the National Child Labor Committee, the United States Department of Labor, and every other agency carrying on some form of anti-child labor agitation, make it clear that the exploitation of the youth over 14 years of age with some form of regulations, and over 16 unlimitedly, is proper.

Ordinarily child labor is meant the exploiting of children under 14 years of age. The United States census classes all those 15 and under in its child labor figures of over 1,500,000. This, incidentally, does not take count of children under 6, tho investigations by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor itself, have brought to light the fact that thousands upon thousands of children 4, 5, and 6, and in one instance 2, work, some of them very long hours. A conservative figure of the number of children of all ages up to 15 employed and exploited in some form or other in the United States is 2,500,000. This does not include the part-time, home working children, a great portion of the children engaged in street occupations is uncounted, and the thousands who illegally give higher ages in order to get working certificates are not taken into account. Then 1923 showed a 38 per cent increase of child workers in the industrial centers.

So much for the bare phases of child labor.

As workers, we are naturally against the exploitation of all children up to the age of 16, and exhort all the forces of labor with an end to the immediate stoppage of the employment of children in any manner whatsoever. That is our goal. But that alone does not solve the problem. The fight against child labor is part of the all-inclusive general struggle of the workers for higher wages, lower hours, better standards of work, and ultimately the destruction of capitalism.

Now to the confused "youth labor." There is no hue and cry against exploitation of the youth on the part of the politicians, philanthropists and labor fakers. It is all right, so far as they are concerned, to make profits out of the hides of the kids over 14.

What are the facts? The exploitation of the youth 14 and over (up to the age of 18) is more brutal than the sweating of the adult workers. Boys or girls 15, 16, 17 and sometimes 18, are not physically developed; they are undergoing a critical period of growth; and it is just about this type of young worker that the bosses are able to use to great advantage in the modern industrial machine. Follows wage-slavery of the worst kind. Speed up, long hours, bad sanitary conditions, and on top of it all less wages than the older worker gets, which in time cuts down the standard of living of the entire working class. The more young fellows taken from school at 14 or 16, the less jobs for the already growing mass of unemployed.

It is a vicious circle. Unemployment forces the father to take his young children from school and to put them to work; more children on the labor market, makes it harder for the older workers to get jobs.

Then there is the problem of apprentices. The bosses are taking into their own hands the matter of educating the future skilled workers at a death-price to the trade unions and the unions still cling to the policy of excluding the youth from the unions, thereby encouraging the youth to look to the bosses for training.

The youth of 14 or over should do some form of educative work, but all work for an employer under capitalism is exploitation and has no other object. No young fellow between 14 and 16 should work more than four hours a day, and between 16 and 21 more than six hours a day. The entire system of education, if the best good is to result to the workers, must be reorganized on the work school basis. But that cannot be completely realized under capitalism.

The aim should be to strengthen the economic organizations of the workers by taking in the youth, cutting down youth labor, eradicating child labor, and control of apprentice education by the trade unions without any restrictions or barriers to the young who now want to join the unions.

This would be the beginning of the solution of the child and youth labor problem.

Massachusetts Labor Against Legislation Hitting Foreign Born

MAYNARD, Mass., Feb. 28.—The workers of Maynard have gone on record as being against laws which discriminate against foreign-born workers.

At a recent mass meeting they adopted a resolution condemning all such laws now being considered and pointed out that the foreign-born workers are the poorest paid, worst treated and most neglected group in America. The resolution follows:

WHEREAS, the workers in the basic industries where the chief wealth of the country is produced, are largely foreign born; and

WHEREAS, these workers, altho producing the products that make possible the running of industry and interchange of products, are subjected to the most miserable conditions and low wages, and

WHEREAS, there are already introduced in Congress vicious laws intended to brand aliens as criminals, by registering, fingerprinting and photographing them, thus bringing to these shores the detestable, autocratic methods in use in Kaiserist Germany and Czarist Russia, and

WHEREAS, the Government officials have openly and brazenly endorsed such measures, which aim to punish any attempt of the suffering foreign-born to engage in strikes or other working class activity; therefore be it

RESOLVED, that we, the workers of Maynard, in mass meeting assembled, protest vigorously against the proposed laws aimed at foreign-born, and be it further

RESOLVED, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the officials of Maynard, to the State Governor of Massachusetts, the Maynard representatives in the State legislature, the Congressman for Maynard, the State Senators in Washington, to the local press and to the DAILY WORKER.

Hardy Annual Bill for State Insurance Arouses Some Interest

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—A bill establishing a state monopoly in workmen's compensation insurance introduced in the New York state legislature this year as it has been every session regularly for years, has for the first time aroused some interest.

Replying to the criticism of P. T. Sherman, former head, state labor department and now a representative of insurance companies, in which the bill was described as a dangerous political experiment as well as bad economics, Frederick L. Hackenburg, sponsor of the measure in the lower house, asserts that the change from a competitive to a centralized system for insuring working men or women would be as beneficial to the community as the parcel post has been.

"I believe," he said, "that state monopoly in this matter is coming—maybe not this year, maybe not in the next, but certainly it is not far off. It am sure that it will be eventually just as cheap as insurance by competing private companies, more efficient, and a great deal fairer to the workers." The bill, he said, has the support of organized labor. Sherman's main argument is the curious one that the bill would put too great a sum—$200,000,000—in the hands of the state.

Syndicalist Case Dismissed.

EUREKA, Calif., Feb. 28.—After 66 hours the jury trying nine I. W. W. members here for criminal syndicalism failed to agree and was dismissed. The men have been in jail ever since last October. The trial was characterized by a huge mass meeting in Eureka which demanded the repeal of the criminal syndicalism law. It is doubtful if the men will be brought to trial again.

PENNSYLVANIA MINERS PREPARE FOR CONVENTION

Demand Ending of All Corrupt Practices

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 27.—That the miners of District 5, United Mine Workers of America, Western Pennsylvania, particularly the progressive elements, remain undaunted by the reverses met at the hands of the Lewis machine in the Indianapolis convention, is evidenced by the resolutions that are being adopted by the local unions in that district. Not only are resolutions asking for constitutional changes being adopted, but others, that demand removal of appointees and elected officers on the charge of illegal representation at the recent International convention.

This is not by any means a new departure on the part of the officials of the miners union to pack conventions and ballot boxes at elections, on the contrary it has been practised for years, but it seemed so impossible that thousands of miners refused to believe that the men, who were supposed to be leading them to better things, would stoop to these corruptible depths to retain their control of the union. However, those who did know kept up the fight against this and other illegal means to attain their selfish ends, and are now able to present the irrefutable facts.

The resolutions ask removals of the executive officials of District 5 for illegal representation and voting in some instances and in others for the use of their power to create the possibility and for their tolerance of these illegal, unconstitutional acts.

One of the men cited in the resolutions as representing a non-existant local union, known as Mickey Noonan, was provided with credentials and went to the convention in spite of the fact that he was known to be working in a scab mine at the time, and is yet as far as is known while the others are officials and relatives. An effort was made at the Indianapolis convention to present this evidence when a delegate named Toohey tried to introduce a motion to challenge the validity of the roll-call vote, but Lewis knowing no doubt, what was intended, refused to grant the privilege of the floor to this young boy who was attending his first convention.

Lewis cannot and will not tolerate such things from experienced veterans, let alone submit to the audacity and temerity of a young upstart, as he would brazenly put it. One thing is sure and that is that the Pittsburgh radicals thrive on fight and they are determined to keep on until victory crowns their efforts.

Following are the resolutions adopted by Local Union 593:

Resolution Number One.

WHEREAS, It is a well known fact that William Patton, Vice-President of District No. 5, United Mine Workers of America, that he voted at the International Convention, sky blue local union No. 4233, located at Godfrey, Pa.; there is no local union there and hasn't been for several years.

THEREFORE, Be it resolved, that Local Union No. 593 calls for the impeachment of William Patton, Vice-President of District No. 5.

(Signed): PRESIDENT.
SECRETARY.

Resolution Number Two.

WHEREAS, It is a well known fact that John O'Leary, provisional Secretary-Treasurer of District No. 4, stated in the International Convention that he employed a non-union man by the name of Francis Feeney, and paid him $200.00 a month salary, in violation of the Constitution of the U. M. W. of A.,

THEREFORE, be it resolved, that the above named person John O'Leary be impeached and the office of International Board member be declared vacant.

(Signed): PRESIDENT.
SECRETARY.

Resolution Number Three.

WHEREAS, It has come to our notice thru charges made in the International Convention that International Organizer, William Feeney of District No. 5, U. M. W. of A. has employed his son as secretary of provisional District No. 4, and

WHEREAS, William Feeney's son did not belong to the U. M. W. of A. when he was put on this job.

THEREFORE, Be it resolved, that Local Union No. 593 of District No. 5 demands that William Feeney's son be dismissed from the pay roll on constitutional grounds, and be it further

RESOLVED, that we demand an itemised account of all moneys received and expended from the beginning of the 1922 strike up to the last audit.

(Signed): PRESIDENT.
SECRETARY.

Resolution Number Four.

WHEREAS, it has been clearly and truthfully stated and demonstrated that the district officials, President Fagan and Secretary Hargest have used their power and tolerated the voting of local unions which they know are not entitled to vote and by reason of these votes the Rank and File of the paying members of the United Mine Workers are denied their right to conduct their own affairs, and

WHEREAS, the following two local unions, No. 3521 located at Natrona, Allegheny county, represented by Michael Noonan from Walkers Mills, and Local Union No. 3149 located at Brackenridge, Allegheny county, Delegate Thomas Dobbins from Harmarville, did vote at the National Convention with the full knowledge of President Fagan and Secretary Hargest that they were not entitled to vote.

THEREFORE, Be it resolved, that this Local Union No. 593 demands the impeachment of President Fagan and Secretary Hargest at the coming convention of the District for violating the District and National Constitution of the U. M. W. of A.

(Signed): PRESIDENT.
SECRETARY.

Today's Installment of "A Week"

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)
The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Last issue brings the startling news that Serezha Surikov, a chekist had been buried alive by counter-revolutionists, far out on the Steppes. Klimin and Stalmakhov talk of their friend who was too sensitive and tender hearted for the stern work of the revolution. In this issue Klimin reads a farewell letter from Surikov, written before his capture by the enemy.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

CHAPTER VII.

"DEAR COMRADE KLIMIN,

"I am now at the station of N——sk. Glebov has gone off for a cart, it's four hours already since he went. It's a little station, and I am entirely alone. I've looked over the old, even pre-war, advertisements and notices which do not harmonize with life today, admired a marvelous poster on the subject of the improvement of transport, and then made my way into the room of the Railway Cheka, and, at the sight of pen and ink, the desire came to me to tell you openly the ideas which wander now in my head and the experiences which are troubling my soul. Why you, Comrade Klimin, you will probably understand. Remember how in the Politdep of the N—— Division, you, an old member of the Party, Divisional Chief, tolerantly talked for hours with me when I was a non-party, self-confident lad, whose head was crammed with every sort of intellectual absurdity. You listened patiently to my stupid opinions, neatly cut the ground from under them, and pushed me towards Marxism, and patiently told me the alphabet of socialism and the class struggle. I joined the Party later, in the regiment, but actually it was your lessons that made me a Communist. And when you went to the Cheka, as soon as the front was liquidated, I went to you to work. And under your leadership I became a true Communist and revolutionary. You, for me, were the ideal of a Communist. It's for that reason I am writing not to my mother or to other comrades who know and care for me, but to you in particular, my Chief, into whose room in working hours I must not go without sending my name in first.

"You will get this letter only in case I am killed. And I have very little doubt that they will kill me. And that is a good thing, because I have nothing more to do in life, I am not a man but only the shell of a man, and my soul is entirely empty. So at least let me die with advantage for Communism.

What Do You Think of "A Week"

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have already published three installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its characters, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We will publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

"But, so that you shall understand me, I will tell you everything in order.

"You remember how last year, after the discovery of a plot thruout the whole district, we drove out to shoot five White Guards.

"It was a frosty Winter's night. With a witches' moon with a ring round it. Our lorry went fast over the glittering high-road which had been worn smooth by the sledges. Lezhavin was with us. He was nervous, as it was the first time he had been at an execution, and he behaved with unnatural cheerfulness and talked now with you, now with me. You, as always, gave him business-like succinct replies, but in your replies there was an intonation scarcely to be felt, 'Boy, don't pretend; you are not yourself.' I replied to him in single words. I did not want to talk. I was too tired after the day, and was resting in the silence of the blue, slightly frosty night. . . . Now and then I looked into the body of the lorry, and saw 'them,' saw the watchful faces of the lads (soldiers), remembered whither we were going. It became unpleasant. But after all it was not the first shooting in which I had taken part.

"We drove to the Monastery Wood, that crowd of enchanted trees, covered with hoarfrost, like the dreams of a freezing man before death. In some places the trees were thinner, and we could see mysterious blue glades.

"We walked by a narrow track to one of these glades. There was an old abandoned quarry there, full of snow in winter-time, but seeming, none the less, a deep, dark blue pit.

"On the way there all were silent.

"They behaved well and awaited death quietly. I somehow did not ask myelf the question, of what they were thinking for the last time, these people who no longer seemed to have any part in anything. I had already accepted everything in advance, when I asked you to let me come and work in the Cheka. I knew beforehand all that would be; revolting moments when one was aiming into a defenceless bunch of people. But all that would be over so quickly, and after the resounding volley, that makes the birch trees nearby shed their snowy dust, five human bodies would fall deep, deep, into the darkness of the quarry, and we should drive home again and listen once more to the magical Winter silence.

"But something happened that I had not expected. . . . You said to them in a low voice:

"'Undress, citizens!'

"They looked at each other. One took off his short fur coat. The others followed his example.

"'No. Undress altogether,' you said, and added, as if for our information, 'We shall shoot them naked.'

"The lads were grimly silent, and in their silence one felt that they agreed with you, and understood you, and were ready to shoot naked people. It was very quiet; only, far off, we could hear the loud noise of our lorry.

"They began to protest. You remember their protests? One of them said that one ought to make a man's death easy for him; and another that this was mockery, and the old Black Hundred schoolmaster tall, with sloping shoulders and a long grey beard, suddenly began crying, bitterly, like a child, and thru his tears he said that it was 'not right' to do so, and that he had influenza. I knew that he had served the Secret Police, had betrayed his pupils, and been given a decoration for doing so, I knew how profound was his hatred for us, and all the same my own body began to shake with slight tremors, just as if I were being made to undress. . . . And then, too, the quavering voice of Lezhavin said to you:

"'Comrade Klimin, there's no need to do that. There's no need to tease them. What for?' And there were tears in his voice.

"One of the lads cursed him angrily. You said:

"'But what's the point of their clothes being destroyed? In their linen and clothes some one may be dressed who is useful to the Republic. In a minute they will not need the clothes,' and you added in a low whisper, turning to Lezhavin:

"'Don't disorganize things. Go to the motor and wait for us.'

"Then they understood that there was no way out. They sat down on tree stumps, pulled off their boots and trousers, got out of their underclothes. The bodies of those who were in the transparent shadow of the trees seemed greenish yellow, like bodies seen thru the transparent water of a lake. The moonlight made the bodies of the others bluish white. . . . Ah, how silent, how incomprehensible it all was, as if in a terrible, never to be repeated dream, in some sort of frozen nightmare.

"I had often walked in that place in the summer. I knew well the old pine with the divided trunk by which we were standing. I knew each branch of it. I recognized the big axe-cuts on the lower part of the trunk.

"I had loved that pine tree, but it seemed to me strangely alien and hostile. A mother is alien and hostile like that in those terrible moments when you see her in a nightmare, aloof, pitiless, quietly indifferent to you, to your outstretched hands, to your prayers for help. The sight of those people undressing in the forest brought suddenly before my eyes a picture of people bathing on the bank of a lake on a hot sunny day. It was a strange association, but I felt that my ideas were getting confused, and it was well that the resounding volley broke the spell at a blow.

"You remember me before that shooting? I took part with enthusiasm in all the work of the Cheka, and was proud of taking part in it. I light-heartedly signed my conclusions on the protocols of evidence and without the slightest tremor myself carried out death sentences. And all that because I knew for certain, yes and I know it still, that this was a bloody road, but the only road out of the horror that ruled over the lives of people in this world. I was sorry for people, and suffered from their sufferings, but knew that only thru the death of the enemies of the Revolution was possible the road to Communism. Wherefore I was so merciless. I had re-embodied my great pity as a great hatred. And I think that that is what every Communist does.

"The time will come, and I hope it will come soon, when this great human pity will make the life of man on earth most beautiful. Then the suffering of one near to him will wound a man painfully. People will treat with extreme care another's organism, that beautiful human body, built like yours or mine, which like them suffers and is hurt. It will be so. But, just now, that pitifulness must be turned into hate. And, up to that shooting, I was able to do that.

"But now, it is just as if the blood of those naked White Guards has splashed my soul. They stick in my memory, undressing in the light of the moon, their trembling naked bodies, the rattle of the shots and their groans. . . . Those terrible groans that sounded from the quarry! The groans of a body beside itself, dying! You may call this softness but, you know, when they took their clothes off, I suddenly very, very clearly imagined that it was I who was undressing, that it was my body that the frost was laying hold of, that the bullets were threading thru my own bones and muscles, that it was I who was groaning with terrible rending groans.

"I was no longer able to write death sentences. . . . You cross-examine, you look yourself into those living eyes, see those hands, follow the play of wrinkles over the face, never for a moment forget that you are enemies, but all the same you think, surely not my hand will send this organism to death?

"The boundary of hatred, for me, is crossed. . . . But I do not want to leave the Cheka, because I think the work of a Chekist the most revolutionary, and the most necessary at the present time.

"So let death come rather . . . . And, when I suffer before death . . . I shall certainly be thinking of the fact that have myself hurt and shot.

"But perhaps this is indeed weakness! Perhaps in the work that lies before me, I shall harden myself, and again be stoical and firm. Let this mission be my ordeal.

"For the Communist, every day is a test and an ordeal, as in all of us the attraction of the past is strong.

"As for us, the young Communists, there is no question about it. Few have even their heads out, for the majority of the old world surges over their heads, darkens sight and hearing and muddles their brains. Wherefore one has always to watch oneself. Has not one left the right road? Is one not mixing things up? Is one not becoming Philistine? And I do not want to become a tearful, Tolstoyan intellectual. . . . So let there be an ordeal of physical suffering, of hard nervous work, perhaps of death. From that work I shall either return reborn and strengthened, or not return at all.

"But I shall know that if I, growing weak, have dropped out of the ranks, men such as you, the root and trunk of the Party, remain, and that the struggle will go on, and that Communism will be thruout the world.

"Live and work well.

"S. SURIKOV."

Farmer Members Lose Control of Farm Loan Board

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Senate hearings on the protest against confirming four nominees to the Farm Loan Board have disclosed that Judge Charles W. Lobdell, former commissioner of the Board, and now its fiscal agent at $25,000 a year, is virtually in control of this billion dollar farm banking system, while the farmer members have been tricked out of their power to dominate its policy.

Charges of irregularities in the action of the Board have been made by R. L. Coker, formerly renewing appraiser for the Board. He is a nephew of the late President Harding, but that fact did not save him from dismissal when he objected to the Lobdell program.

Coker testified that the lowering of the interest rate to farmers had been blocked, in the farm loan system, by a raise of $200,000 in salaries and by concentration of power in the hands of the Board, which has denied to member associations of borrowers the essential facts required to protect their interests.

Telegrams from President Gates of the Federation of National Farm Loan Associations confirm this view; he declared to the committee that the Board has become completely autocratic, and that the profits, instead of being returned to the farmers annually as contemplated by the law of 1917, have been unduly held up; also, that politicians have been loaded upon the system.

The joker whereby co-operative control was repealed, was hidden in the Agricultural Credits Act of March, 1923, which established 12 intermediate banks. Since that change, salaries of presidents and other officcers of the twelve land banks have been raised about 50 per cent, and Lobdell's job and salary have been created. Lobdell makes contracts with a syndicate of eastern bankers for the exclusive handling of $250,000,000 of bonds annually, under conditions of contract that remain secret.

Japanese Stoolpigeons Keep Close Watch on Radicals Since Quake

(By The Federated Press)

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Feb. 28.—Since the earthquake every working class advocate in Japan has been under the closest surveillance by the police and military; a clear indication that the authorities are anticipating an outburst of popular indignation against the government and the military caste.

Labor leaders have had the greatest difficulty in restraining their followers, but a popular outburst at the present time would be the signal for a wholesale massacre of the masses. Every vantage point is occupied by the police and military with machine guns at their immediate disposal.

At the present time the working people of Japan are suffering untold agonies, and it is impossible to say just how long they can be held in check, for they are evincing a keen desire to turn on their oppressors.

In fact, the Japanese militarists are sitting on a seething volcano of discontent, besides which, once it bursts, the horrors of the earthquake will appear insignificant.

In Japan there are today two sections of the public only—those who support the militarists, and those who demand justice for a suffering populace. The line of cleavage between the opposing factions is clear and acute.

I. W. W. ELECTS TOM DOYLE AND J. P. THOMPSON

Old Fashioned G. E. B. Ceases to Exist

Tom Doyle and James P. Thompson are the two chief executives of the Industrial Workers of the World for the ensuing term, having just been elected secretary-treasurer and assistant secretary at a referendum.

Doyle was secretary of the Agricultural Workers' Industrial Union during the 1922 season when the migratory harvest workers had their best union year since the war.

Thompson Got 20 Years.

Thompson is a veteran organizer and speaker of many years standing, taking a prominent part in the Lawrence strike and lumber and copper struggles of the organization. Durthe war Judge Landis rewarded him with a 20-year term from which the amnesty act freed him last December.

Both Thompson and Doyle are fresh from California where they have been fighting the syndicalism act that has sent a hundred of their fellow members to San Quentin and Folsom penitentiaries. The latest victim is Tom Connors, Doyle's personal friend and the chairman of his organization committee when he was executive of the agricultural workers.

The office of assistant secretary to which Thompson has been elected was created at this election.

Old-Fashioned G. E. B. Ceases.

An important change in organization administration was put thru at the same time. The old-fashioned General Executive Board or "G. E. B." with its members elected by the members at large will no longer exist. The new general administration will be composed of the chairman of the organization committees of the several industrial unions. Joe Fisher is elected General Organizer, a new post.

COMMUNIST-CHILDREN'S-COLUMN

THE LITTLE GREY DOG.

By Herminia Zur Muhlen.

(Synopsis: Benjamin, a little colored slave who lived on a southern plantation in the days of slavery, had lost his mother and now his rich cruel master had lost his father to another slave owner in a game of cards. This left little Benjamin all alone in the world with his only friend, a little grey dog that he had saved from drowning.)

• • • •

BENJAMIN went home crying, afraid of the dark, holding the little dog, his only friend, tight in his arms. And now something strange happened. When Benjamin, sobbing, started to tell the little dog of his sorrow, the dog began to bark very softly. But it was not an ordinary bark, but speech, and Benjamin understood very well the words, "Don't cry, little friend, I will take care of you and guard you. And some day we will go to search for your parents."

Benjamin was so astonished at this, that he stopped crying. "What!" cried he, surprised, "you can speak, like a human being?"

The dog shook his shaggy head. "Yes, when the rich people act like wild beasts against the poor people, we animals must help them. When a human being is very unhappy and forsaken, he understands our language and knows that we wish him well. I have not forgotten, little Benjamin, that you saved my life. I want to thank you. Lie down on the straw, sleep, I will watch over you."

A little comforted, the little boy obeyed, and the dog sat down near him, guarding him all night, licking Benjamin's hand.

Then came hard times for little Benjamin. The stout lady who was his neighbor took him to her hut, but she was not good to him. She forced him to carry water from the river in a heavy bottle, and made him do all kinds of hard work. And the worst was yet to come. One day the rich man passed by the huts of the Negroes and saw Benjamin. "A strong boy," he said. "He can work in the fields already."

At evening, tired, he would crawl into the hut, bury his head in the hide of the grey dog, cry, and draw comfort from his only friend.

One evening, his back all bloody and his face swollen, Benjamin came home. The overseer had been in a bad temper, had beaten the little boy with a whip and hit him in the face with his fist.

"I want to die," cried Benjamin, while the dog softly and gently licked his wounds. "I can't stand it any longer. My parents are gone, I am entirely deserted, every one is unkind to me. Dog, dear, dog, what shall I do?"

"Run away," replied the dog.

"Where to? They will catch me and beat me again."

The dog laid his head on his lap, thinking hard.

"We must go north," said he at last. "There people are better than they are here. They do not want the Negroes to be slaves. We must run away there."

"I don't know the way," complained Benjamin.

"I will lead you. Morning and night, when everybody is asleep, we will go."

And so it happened. The moon was a small white sickle in the sky, the great trees tossed weird black shadows on the earth, all was deathly quiet, only once in a while the leaves rustled sleepily. Benjamin and the dog ran softly on their tiptoes, out of the hut, and went toward the great river. All night they wandered along the side of the river, and when morning came the dog looked for a safe hiding place, for the short legs of little Benjamin had not carried him very far, and there was still the danger that the servants of the rich man might trace him and capture him.

While the dog was running restlessly back and forth to find a safe place, Benjamin sat on the bank of the river, letting his tired, burning feet hang in the water. Suddenly he was terribly frightened and drew his feet back hastily. A large pointed head thrust itself thru the water, a gigantic mouth opened, showing two rows of dreadful teeth, and a deep voice growled, "A fine morsel, just right for breakfast!"

Benjamin screamed aloud and the dog came running quickly to him. Tho he was himself a little frightened, he whispered to Benjamin, "That is an alligator. Step back and let me speak to him."

The little boy obeyed and the dog addressed himself with cajoling courtesy to the alligator, saying, "Excuse us for having come to your kingdom, mighty lord of the river, but we are fleeing from evil people and know that you with your power will be good enough to defend us."

The alligator felt flattered, drew his gigantic mouth into a friendly grin, and replied politely, "You are a clever animal. I am truly more mighty than people, and," he agreed thotfully, "neither are we as bad as they. But this creature that sat with his feet hanging in the water is also a human being. Then why is he running away from his brothers?" And the shiny, greenish eyes of the alligator looked distrustfully at the dog.

"You surely know, wise and mighty animal, that the rich people are merciless to the poor, as tho they were the wildest beasts. That is because there is no more greedy animal than this man. He is never satisfied, he always wants more: food and drink and houses, but above all gold. That makes him so mean. My little friend is a poor child who must work for a rich man. He was torn away from his parents, and beaten until the blood flowed. I advised him to run away. And now we beg that you help us, for any moment the servants of the rich man may appear and capture my little friend."

The alligator shook his pointed head thoughtfully and said: "People are peculiar creatures. No alligator would torment a little alligator, neither do we know the difference between rich and poor, and still it is said that we are evil animals."

Micawbers of the C. P. P. A.

"Labor," published in Washington, D. C., is the official organ of the "sixteen standard railway unions" and the mouthpiece of the Conference for Progressive Political Action.

Its issue of the February 23rd is conclusive evidence of the pitiable vacillation of the railway union officialdom in the present crisis.

On the first page is a feature story of the Chicago conference which attempted to renovate McAdoo, containing the resolution of confidence signed by 17 railway union officials and the names of the unions they represent. From the standpoint of the political forces in the C. P. P. A. it is an impressive list.

In the editorial column is a blackface boxed editorial reprinted from the "Washington News" eulogizing LaFollettee but deprecating attempts to make him appear as a third party candidate. "LaFollette's state," says this editorial, "under his 20 years of leadership, is more solidly Republican than Pennsylvania or Vermont."

In "Lonergan's Column," a feature contributed by Edward Keating, manager of "Labor," is another eulogy of LaFollette accompanied by an expression of doubt as to what he will do—stay with the republican party or split.

The official organ of the C. P. P. A. as this analysis shows is merely drifting with the tide, buffetted by the political waves as is the organization for which it speaks.

The spokesmen of the so-called progressive wing of the American labor movement are torn between their allegiance to McAdoo and LaFollette. They are exercising no initiative whatever as a labor group but are willing to follow either LaFollette or McAdoo as candidates of the capitalist parties rather than abandon a policy of class collaboration that is not confined to the political field but runs straight thru the American labor movement.

In no other great capitalist nation does this situation exist—in no other country are the officials of the labor movement waiting breathlessly for middle class politicians in capitalist parties to frame the policies of the unions.

So reactionary is the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor that the Committee for Progressive Political Action has been termed its most progressive outpost; this progressivism goes no farther than the expression of the discontent of the middle-classes and if LaFollette does not get the republican nomination and does not split we will witness the spectacle of the majority of the officials of the unions affiliated with the C. P. P. A. striving with might and main to herd the workers into the democrat party provided McAdoo receives the nomination.

They want LaFollette first as a republican candidate; second as a third party candidate. If neither event should develop they are for McAdoo as the democrat nominee.

We are willing to go no farther than this with predictions at present but if McAdoo and LaFollette do not get nominations and LaFollete does not bolt we will not be surprised to see the C. P. P. A. split between the two capitalist parties but united in hurling anathemas at the class Farmer-Labor party that will be in the field inevitably under those conditions.

Just at present, however, the Conference for Progressive Political Action waits Micawber-like for something to turn up.

On the Altar of Profits

An item that is never found in the annual reports of corporations giving the profits and dividends for the year is the item dealing with the loss of limb and life suffered by the workingmen in the very process of grinding out these profits, these big dividends for the bosses. A perusal of the annual statements of the big industrial organizations affords the examiner a survey of the value of common and preferred stock, but not a single word about the price paid by the workers in enhancing these values for the employing class. This is the sad state of affairs with every industry operated on the capitalist basis of the highest profits for the owners and the lowest wages and worst possible working conditions for the employes.

The American coal diggers are the pacemakers in mining efficiency. Our miners are e most efficient in the world. The American iner is almost three times as productive as nearest competitor in mining efficiency, the ish coal digger. But the American miner ers far more than his British comrade in price he pays for his efficiency, netting the erators terrific profits and swollen dividends. ast year, for instance, nearly four of our ers were killed for every million tons of al they mined. In 1923 no less than 2,452 iners were killed digging coal and dividends r their employers. Yet, the coal barons never reckon the loss of life or the injury suffered by the miner working for them when they draw up their annual financial statements of profit and loss of their property. The life of the miner doesn't matter an iota to the profit-hungry capitalist. It's only the dollar—the congealed sweat and blood of the miners coined into fabulous dividends—that counts.

According to the Bureau of Mines only 320 of this heavy casualty list are accounted for by unspecified causes. All the other losses of lives were due to such causes as falls of roof and coal, haulage accidents, gas and dust explosions, etc. These can all be controlled to a large extent by the installation of improved safety devices and by providing better working conditions. But such steps our coal magnates are not in any too great hurry to take. Such steps might cut profits and reduce dividends. Such measures would be considered folly in the ethical code of Big Business.

Alongside of the almighty dollar of the capitalist, the life, the security of the worker shrinks into nothingness. The thousands of lives lost by the miners year in and year out, these thousands of sacrifices on the altar of profits, should imbue the working class with a burning passion to wipe out the devastating, hell-breeding system of capitalism.

Quitter and Grafter

That William Gibbs McAdoo is as gentle a grafter as ever stepped out of the pages of an O. Henry novel, no person with normally equipped mind will doubt for a moment after reading the facts concerning his acceptance of the Doheny quarter million dollar retainer on the strength of his connection with Woodrow Wilson, and his large fees from the notorious swindler Morse in return for services rendered.

In addition to the generally accepted conviction that McAdoo hands are soiled with graft, there now comes the additional charge that Wilson's son-in-law is a coward and a quitter in that he went back on his client when the latter was in the greatest jeopardy of his entire piratical career.

Mr. McAdoo, "the political hero" of the hysterical Wilsonians and reactionary labor officials, who gathered in the Crystal Room of the Great Northern Hotel to clear his reputation of the crude oil with which it was tarnished, never quit the employment of Doheny until he concluded that such employment threatened to destroy his political career.

McAdoo knew that he was employed by Doheny to ravish the mineral wealth of Mexico, not because of legal ability, but solely because he could walk into the White House while Wilson was president and over the coffee urge his father-in-law to threaten Obregon with war unless the demands of McAdoo's client were complied with.

He stuck to the Doheny dough bag until it was discovered that "the peerless leader of progressive democracy" was in danger of becoming unavailable for the presidency. Then he quit.

Doheny is a pirate, a purchaser of cabinets, a robber of public property. McAdoo was his accomplice, but McAdoo along with being a grafter is a quitter.

An Instructive Coincidence

If it is true that every cloud has its silver lining, then the corollary, that every silver lining has its cloud must also be true. There is a humorous phase of the Teapot affair that is worthy of comment, even if it is only for the joke value in the incident.

Coolidge's handpicked bipartisan oil prosecutors, Messrs, Lowe, Duck, Pomerene and Bank Attorney Roberts, have at last been put on the job to plumb the wells and get some results for the "people" in the Doheny-Sinclair holdup. And alas! These expensive lawyers have gotten unto themselves a suite of offices in the new Transportation building right next door to the local headquarters of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Splendid environment, indeed! We do not ask our readers to grow oversuspicious and conclude forthwith that there is to be close co-operation between the government's representatives and the Rockefeller interests. Perhaps these "servants of the people" couldn't help themselves. If they had rented the next least suitable office they might have landed in the same building with the Washington branch of the Mexican Petroleum Company, which is a subsidiary of the Doheny Pan-American Petroleum Corporation—the lessee of the Elk Hills Naval Reserve in California. Or if Messrs. Pomerene and Roberts had taken refuge across the way from this building they would have fallen into the headquarters of the many Washington watchmen of Mr. Doheny, the San Francisco lawyer, George McNab or, in the environs of Levi B. Cooke, Mr. Fall's special legal representative in Washington.

All of this may or may not be a case of very strange coincidence. The reader has his freedom of choice. Yet, we submit that this somewhat humorous side of the oil tragedy affords at least a case of instructive coincidence. The plight of the poor prosecutors shows in a humorous way, of course, the grip that oil has on Washington. The champions of the "public" cannot even do their legal plowing in an atmosphere which is not saturated with oil. Again we say that the fact that the housing problem for our oil prosecutors has resolved itself into a choice between rubbing elbows with Standard Oil or being neighbors of Doheny oil is a coincidence even more instructive than strange.

Let us not be too cynical. All power to oil!

Attorney-General Daugherty has received some telegrams expressing confidence in his administration, he told Chicago newspapermen. Contrary to general belief.

Denby Joined One Too Many

By STANLEY BOONE
(Staff Writer of the Federated Press)

THE story of Edwin Denby of Detroit, defunct former secretary of the navy, is the story of a "joiner" who joined one club too many.

Denby in Detroit has been lawyer and banker, thru profits in those occupations, a director in three automobile manufacturing companies—the Hupp, the Federal, and the former Denby Truck. As the father, the late Charles Denby, sometime U. S. minister to China, had a cigar named after him, so the son named a truck after himself. The cigar outlasted the truck.

But it has been thru his sophomoric sociability and the reputation of his father, a prominent Indiana politician, that Edwin Denby for a brief ill-starred period was able to put his feet under the secretary's table in the navy building.

Edwin Denby weighed in excess of 250 pounds when he entered the cabinet. How much he gained in that position is not known.

His sophomoric sociability has had its expression chiefly in joining. Denby is one of the few men in the country who belongs to every club there is.

He has formal or fraternal connections with all the veterans' organizations formed since the Spanish-American war, in which he was a gunner. He has Masonic connections of the most binding nature and belongs to a few clubs in which a degree of exclusiveness is maintained by the size of the initiation fee. Besides these, he belongs to two genuinely snobbish organizations. He is also a member of the proud Sons of the American Revolution.

But perhaps he is at his joiniest when gathering with the alumni, that group which every town has, composed of all the educated men who just can't forget college days. Denby is the old grad, the football player (for he was a 'varsity guard at the University of Michigan), the orator at campus pep meetings, the perpetual sophomore who would die either for his country or his college colors. He may have wept because he did not have two lives to give—one to his country and one to his Alma Mater.

Musical comedies, back in the days of the college and merry widows, et al, had their Denbys. They can still be seen in the pictorial advertisements of dealers in clothes for men.

Well, by proficiency of this kind, which amounted to being seen more often than anyone else at class reunions and similar rah-rah occasions, Denby forged ahead in the world. He could not be forgotten because he always answered rollcall and he was always unmistakably visible because of his enormous bulk. It was inevitable that he be nominated for something. Once nominated he shook more hands than his rival in his district and so was elected to the state house of representatives, amid great cheers from former classmates and fellow club members. He made so many friends in Lansing that he was sent to Washington, where he was a congressman for two terms. It was after the second term, and in connection with the ridiculous Payne-Aldrich tariff that he rose at a moment of collegiate ardor and gave three rousing cheers for Joe Cannon for president. It was heroic but fatal. The Joe Cannon team was defeated and Denby's public life was ended until in a similar mood in 1917 he enlisted as a private in the U. S. Marine Corps. He was still the rip-roaring underclassman painting his class numerals on the corner stone of the law building.

As a private marine, overweight thru stomach and double chin, he got the job of making pep speeches at the Parris Island training camp. He had been gunner in the Spanish-American war and he went back into fighting togs as he has gone back to football mass meetings in the college town of his youth year after year. It was "Yea, team!" at Parris Island. And he may have had something to do with nicknaming the boys of the Marine Corps the "Devil Dogs." It was a dare-devil name that a sophomore in a class rush would be proud of being called.

Denby undoubtedly belongs to a number of clubs he has forgotten all about. But he will tell you he is a member in good stanidng of the Detroit club, Detroit Athletic club, Country club, Yondatege club, University club, Huron Mountain club, Lawyers club, American legion, United Spanish War Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Sons of the American Revolution, Rotary club, Detroit Zoological Society, Board of Commerce, and the Masonic order. He is president of the Zoological society, vice president of the Rotary club, and was president of the Board of Commerce in 1917 when he booted and spurred himself down the street to recruiting headquarters. That was the best publicity stunt by a politician in 1917.

But he joined one club too many. It was in Washington, where he joined the Teapot Dome Improvement society.

From Prince to Pauper

By SCOTT NEARING
(Staff Correspondent Federated Press)

FROM prince to pauper in a decade sums up the last ten years in the economic life of Germany. In 1913 the German people were the most prosperous on the continent of Europe. Today Mr. Hoover estimates that 20 millions of them (nearly a third of the entire population) are on the verge of starvation.

The Germany of 1913 was a country of abundant coal, iron and other essential resources; a country of high agricultural efficiency; a country of busy factories, active railroads, crowded market places; a country that added 30 millions to its population in 40 years. Full of optimism; inspired by the will to power; determined to spread trade and culture across the world; believing in themselves as the super-race, the German folk stood on the pinnacle of prosperity and achievement.

Ten years have passed. The prosperous Germany of 1913 is reduced to beggary. For all except the rich, the standard of living has been forced down far below the pre-war level of the unskilled worker.

Science was one of the most prominent features of pre-war German life, but, today, with books almost beyond price; with apparatus so costly that even the best endowed institutions cannot afford to renew failing equipment; with the practical cessation of the importation of foreign publications, the German scientific world finds itself isolated, and the scientists themselves can barely keep body and soul together on their meagre salaries. They cannot afford to buy a magazine, to take a street car, to get their shoes re-soled, to get their teeth filled. They are fortunate if, after standing for hours in line, before a bakeshop, they receive half a loaf of bread.

There are more than 60 millions of people living in Germany—trained, efficient, willing to work, but with the mark selling at .000,000,000,024 (24 billionths) of a cent, the whole financial structure of Germany is shot to pieces. Meanwhile, only the jungle-struggle for food and warmth remains of the nation that, ten short years ago, was the proudest financial empire of Europe.

No further demonstration should be necessary to convince, even those who see public events but dimly, that the present economic system is the least stable of any of its immediate predecessors. Slavery is lost in antiquity, feudalism lasted thru centuries, but capitalism, which is the child of yesterday, withers at the first breath of calamity.

Did the economic system in Germany die of old age? Not for a moment. It was stabbed to death in a brawl between bankers and business men from all of the leading Christian countries.

There is only one rule that is known to masters of modern life: The weakest to the wall! Not only in their dealings with their weaker fellows—in India, in Korea, in the Congo, in Haiti, in the Philippines—do modern empires follow the law of the jungle, but in their dealings with each other they take an eye for and eye and a tooth for a tooth, and take them first!

What is going on in Germany! The disintegration of the present economic system along the lines that have been predicted by scores of writers, from Marx to Lenin. War is a part of the capitalist-imperialist game. The people of the United States are playing the game today. Tomorrow their bill will fall due.

Mexican Revolution Had Big Habit of Being Successful Until Obregon Broke the Spell

By BERTRAND D. WOLFE
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 28.—Will this be the last revolution in Mexico? That is the question that everybody is asking now that the present rebellion seems to be drawing to a close. Obregon says this is the last one.

One who knows the forces that make for revolution in Mexico would hesitate to answer in that way, but this is probably the death blow to any attempt on the part of the land owning party here, unaided and even hindered by foreign finance capitalists, to overthrow the semi-progressive, socialistically tinged regime that has finally emerged from the revolutions of 1910 to 1920.

Two new elements are to be reckoned with. American finance capital, which has financed so many Latin-American and Mexican revolutions, has been bribed for the time being at a tremendous price of about a billion pesos, the recognition of the debt and the interest thereon. Even the oil interests have been quieted in part by concessions as to the non-retroactivity of Article 27 of the Mexican constitution. In plain words, thefts of oil lands made from the Mexican people before the adoption of the constitution of 1917 are to be recognized as accomplished facts. For the moment that keeps the oily folk quiet.

Consequently, the present counter-revolution, barring aid it received from minor European capitalist interests, was a home brewed affair. Even at that, home brew has had a marvellous kick here in the past. When there has been no interference on the part of foreign capital, the struggle here has always been a sordid one between the political ins and the political outs, fought out in comic opera style without real battles They were always short, relatively bloodless and uniformly successful. The professional military class made and unmade presidents from its own numbers. The army in the field elevated a general to power. Here's the manner of it:

Revolutions to Order.

A division general "dis-recognizes" the central authority in the name of any tomfool slogan that comes into his head. All the other generals telegraph their loyalty to the central government and ask for more arms, ammunition and money. At the same time they telegraph to the new leader asking him, "What's in it for me?" All such revolutions always succeed so they're only too eager to jump, and stop only long enough to get another shipment of cash from the central government and haggle as to price. They don't worry about social philosophy. Even the Obregon revolution, for all its liberal leadership, was the same story. Guadalupe Sanchez, one of Carranza's best friends and a whole-hearted reactionary, made the decisive jump that ended the Carranza regime. It is this same Sanchez that raised the standard of reactionary revolt in Vera Cruz for de la Huerta in December of 1923.

"All such revolutions always succeed"—but this time it didn't. Generals Sanchez, Estrada, Maycotte, Aguilar, Coss, Dieguez and Castro all jumped. But the revolution did not succeed. One reason was the benevolent neutrality of American capital mentioned above. (Heaven shield any country from having to pay the price that was paid for that benevolence!) The other new element was the first signs of the entrance of the Mexican workers into the army and the military field.

Obregon's Mistakes.

Obregon, tho undoubtedly the biggest Mexican statesman since the reactionary Diaz, has made many mistakes. One of them was the sending of Guadalupe Sanchez to Vera Cruz and the commissioning of that only too willing gentleman to disarm some of the more militant peasantry of the most militant state of Vera Cruz, Sanchez would have had a much harder time were it not for that fact. Obregon did not understand the necessity of smashing the reactionary state machinery and military machinery of former regimes. He did not entirely see the need of reconstituting the army on the basis of an armed peasantry and proletariat. But he partially saw these things, and kept some popular units intact by giving them land.

Thus the Cedillo brothers had an agricultural community for their former revolutionary troops in San Luis Potosi so that important state remained in federal hands and kept the northern railroads. In Morelos the Zapatistas were settled and satisfied. In Yucatan the Mayas were kept content. Moreover, some of the least reliable elements of the army were demobilized. The military academy was opened to workers and peasants, and I am personally acquainted with laborite, agrarian and Communist elements in training as officers. When the rebellion broke out, some workers' regiments were formed and armed and many more regiments of peasants.

The professional army remained. But Obregon gave preference to his famous Yaqui Indians over other troops—his personal division that had "raised him on their shields," hitherto an oppressed group. And Obregon subsidized and fostered labor movements and aided a healthier peasant movement.

So for once, a military coup d'etat, aided tho it was by every big landholder in the country with men, money and horses, and by the church and foreign petty capitalists in the country, did not succeed. This creates a precedent, gives new confidence to popular elements, damages the professional military and has resulted in the revolutionizing, in part at least, of various state governments and the setting up of auxiliary non-professional popular armed forces. But the latter must now go back to work and leave to a professional army the work of ending the guerilla warfare.

The crying need is a permanent system of part time military training of the workers and peasants. Will Obregon have the revolutionary courage to trust the armed power of the state to their hands? Will his successor, General Calles? Will those bankers who hold the mortgages on Mexico permit it?

Fight the Bonus System.

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—Following on an attempt by the state railway commissioners in New South Wales to introduce the bonus system in the government owned railway and tramway workshops, the various unions whose members are affected, are organizing to prevent the introduction of the system.

The unions concerned in the protest are the engineers, coachmakers, blacksmiths, electrical trades, boilermakers, iron workers' assistants, moulders, and sheet metal workers. Promises were made by the government on many occasions that the employes would not be compelled to accept the system.

The number of human beings who have come to their ends by having vaccines and serums injected into their systems would fill a large graveyard, according to Dr. Royal S. Copeland, senator from New York. Farmers succeeded in having laws passed protecting their cattle from serum and vaccine fanatics but human beings are not considered so valuable with the result that they are easy prey for every quack and unscrupulous manufacturer of fake remedies. Contaminated serums cause lockjaw and other fatal maladies, declares Dr. Copeland. Under capitalism profit making is the prime motive of manufacturers, not concern for the welfare of society. But we are told this is the great incentive to success.

A British general, to-wit, Reginald Francis Legge, won a medal for distinguished service in the world war. His wife also thought he was a hero for a while. But the tinsel wore off and she declared war on him, hostilities ending in the divorce court. The lady examined her husband. The husband examined the wife. Each admitted indiscretions. The general was guilty of misconduct, so was Mrs. Legge. The general secured a divorce. The wife alone was guilty in the eyes of the law. The double standard of morality dies slowly.

DINNER PAIL EPICS

By BILL LLOYD

In England now the labor crew has sure got many things to do, at home and far across the sea, a-bossing of his majesty. For there the king's so beat for fair, the premier sez: "You sign right there."

The premier writes the king's harangue and then his nibs goes with a gang to parliament, puts on his crown, and then broadcasts the speech around.. Their majesties coo like sum doves; the premier wears the boxing gloves.

I see MacDonald went to eat at Buckingham. Which is sum feat. He used King George's salad fork and kidded with the Duke of York. Queen Mary is a nice old maid, who looks like she might be afraid of folks who come from digging ditches to court all togged out in knee britches. Her fears, I bet, rose to the pitch where her red flannels made her itch.

Aristocrats will all have fears about MacDonald's new made peers. I bet they shed a briny weep to think that titles now is cheap. They ain't the only ones to fret. The cost of peer's robes must be met. And coronets sure must be had, or else the king would be right mad. If peers in caps should ring the bell the hired girls might go and tell them that the king had gone to buy a peck of spuds or fish to fry. New peers might get a awful slight if they wore duds that weren't quite right. Labor's prepared to show its might, but being peers costs like a fright.

It's queer that labor likes that bunk; it otta send the king to junk. For now that labor's come to rule, the king might go to a trade school. They say that labor has its day, and turn about is sure fair play. MacDonald does the ruler's trick; the king might take to laying brick.

LASH BOSSES FOR REFUSING ARBITRATION

Striking Dressmakers Prepare For Hard Struggle

Statements of the Employers' Association that the demands of the union, if accepted by the dress manufacturers, would ruin their business were vigorously denied by the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union which is on strike.

The statement of the union says that they offered to submit to arbitration all their demands, but that the employers association refused to consider the proposition.

Bosses' Case Unjust.

"Our suggestion was that a board of three disinterested citizens be named and that both sides present their case before them and that the decision of the arbitrators should be binding and final. If the employers association had a just case they would not have refused the offer made by the union," the statement said.

"The trouble with the garment industry is that there is too much profiteering. Most of the manufacturers, in Chicago especially, are not interested in keeping their factories continuously at work. Instead of basing their profits on the quantity of work produced each year, they base it on each piece of work. Instead of producing three dresses and making profit on each dress they would rather produce one dress and make the same profit from it.

Demand Regular Work.

"The workers on the other hand are interested in continuous employment for two reasons! First, continuous employment will give them a larger income per year and second, continuous employment will bring about a condition where the profit of the employer will be based on quantity production and that will reduce the cost of dresses. Garments will then be cheaper, the public will buy more and that will give more employment."

The statement of the employers association threatens to fight the union to a finish. To which the union replys: "Threatening to fight to a finish will not solve the problem. Where one fight ends another begins. We are well prepared to fight and will fight but we are prepared to talk."

Split Among Employers.

Signs of a break in the ranks of employers came yesterday in the third day of the big strike against sweatshop conditions in the dressmaking industry.

Several individual employers indicated to union officials that they wanted a settlement. Competition in the trade makes a shut down of their plants at this busy season most serious. They are considering a break with the bitter-end group of employers.

Hundreds of strikers from nonunion shops have affiliated with the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union in the last two days and some of them are among the most active pickets.

Picketing Going Strong.

Vigorous picketing is being carried out by shop squads all along the Loop, Northwest and West Side districts. The strikers are preparing for a long battle, if necessary. Strike headquarters in every district reported that more shops were being pulled out on strike. More and more workers are going out on the picket duty that will win or lose the strike. South Market St., yesterday morning was lined with strikers. Police and

SAYS TENANTS MUST ORGANIZE TO LOWER RENTS

Negroes Suffer Most, Says League Head

"Landlords of Chicago will raise their tenants as much as they can because to fight rent increases tenants must go to court and make a costly legal fight. The laws which protect tenants are few and can only be invoked thru the courts," said T. G. Vance, president of the Tenants' League of Chicago.

Landlords on the South side where Negroes live have "run wild" he said. They are demanding rent increases of from 50 to 200 per cent. The thousands of Negroes who have come from the south are being forced to rent homes in the Negro districts. Three and four and often more families are being forced to live in one flat.

On the edge of the colored districts apartments are being rented to Negroes for twice as much as the rents which were being charged whites. Vance said that in one apartment house on Calument Ave. flats which had been renting for $45 were being rented to Negroes for $120. At 42nd and State Sts. in one apartment building Negroes are being charged $85 for flats for which white families pay $47. At the present time white and colored people are living in the same building and paying different rents for the same sized flats.

On the north west side six and seven room apartments which rented for $85 are being raised to $200. The Tenants League sees no hope for the workers whose rent is increased by the landlords except organization. They point out that the courts can do little for the tenant whose rent is raised. The court might be able to have the raise slightly reduced but it could not continue the old rates. The remedy lies elsewhere. "United action is the only way the tenants can fight the landlords," Vance said.

BORAH DAUGHERTY'S SUCCESSOR IS BELIEF IN CAPITOL CIRCLES

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—Senator William E. Borah, Idaho, is to succeed Harry M. Daugherty as attorney general, when the latter is eliminated from President Coolidge's cabinet, according to gossip in usually well informed circles today.

Borah has taken a leading part in urging President Coolidge to ask for Daugherty's resignation. He said today nobody had ever suggested to him that he would be given Daugherty's post.

The report that Mr. Coolidge would offer the post to Borah created much interest, as Borah has been talked of lately in connection with presidential politics.

Borah is known as one of the best lawyers in the senate.

In a letter to Dr. John G. Murray, Baltimore, Bishop of Maryland, the Bishop delivered a scathing attack on Christian ortodoxism and challenged "any bishop in the house" to say that he believes implicitly in the miracles related in the bible.

FIGHT ON OVER DAUGHERTY INVESTIGATION

THE Senate today plunged into a fight over the form of the Wheeler resolution for an investigation of Attorney General Daugherty's administration of the Department of Justice.

LEGAL ETHICS IS PALMER'S NEW ALIBI

Worked With Daugherty to Save McLean

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—Piecing together, patch on patch, a disjointed story of sordid intrigue, the object of which was to cover up the truth about the naval oil scandal, the Senate oil committee today delved into a new batch of telegrams.

These messages, sent by various persons, some previously not named in the inquiry and from many different places, went to Albert B. Fall and E. B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, who was Fall's host at Palm Beach.

A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney-general in the Wilson cabinet, was called to the witness stand to explain mention of his name in the telegrams already discovered.

Palmer worked as McLean's attorney—he says he did so simply as a favor to an old friend—in negotiations with senators and others, with the object of keeping McLean off the witness stand.

It was during these negotiations that McLean, thru Palmer, gave the

Mopping Up the Week's Deluge of Oil

BOTH democrat and republican parties have suffered severe casualities by reason of the continued revelations of the bi-partisan nature of the Teapot Dome scandal during the past week.

A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney-general under Wilson, is now known to have been retained by McLean to keep him from being subpoenaed. In telegrams read by the committee Palmer is referred to as the "law partner of Colonel Zevely," attorney for both Fall and Sinclair. Zevely paid Fall the $25,000 in Liberty Bonds.

Palmer's job was to influence Senator Walsh to "go easy" with McLean or not call him at all. Thru Palmer was submitted the false statement that McLean, not Doheny had paid Fall $100,000.

William G. McAdoo and his son Francis are shown by telegrams signed by McLean to have been his confidential advisers for seven years. McAdoo, senior, appears also as the recipient of a huge fee from the Republic Iron and Steel Company for representing it before one or more government departments.

Senators Lenroot and Smoot, republicans, have confessed that they consulted with all three days before the exposure they knew was coming and that they concealed this fact from the investigating committee of which they were members.

Bringing the president himself straight into the scandal that has the nation on tiptoe is the discovery by the committee from the perusal of secret telegrams that E. W. Smithers, White House courier and confidential agent of the president, was turned over to McLean to handle the leased wire installed to keep him, McLean, in touch with developments and evade discovery.

Attorney-General Daugherty, in a statement given to Chicago newspapermen, threatens with exposure officials high in the administration unless he receives their support.

The American people are thus presented with the spectacle of the chief law-enforcing officer of the nation using his knowledge of official corruption to blackmail opponents and protect himself from the result of his own shady connection with the Dohenys and Sinclairs.

The fight in the senate now is over the personnel of the committee called for in the Wheeler resolution providing for the investigation of the attorney-general's department. It is evident that Daugherty is staking everything on the assurance of the senators he has whipped into line that a handpicked committee will be appointed.

U. S. SOLDIERS DECEIVED BY FRENCH MAIDS

Patriots Misunderstood Their Intentions

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, Feb. 29.—How American soldiers who went to save France from the invading hordes of the Kaiser were seduced into committing rape and other infractions of military discipline, by French girls who were ignorant of the customs prevailing in America is painfully brought out here before a military board of inquiry set up to review the cases of the soldier prisoners in this Federal bastille.

That the bark of a rape charge is sometimes worse than its bite is the frank statement made by one official. As for the charge known "assault with intent to rape" that is usually the great joke of the season. This is how it happens we are informed by the publicity department of the united organizations that are putting up a fight to secure the release of the military prisoners:

"A soldier will meet a French girl. The latter with the purest of motives and ignorant of the moral code prevailing in Amurica will accompany him to break the monotony of his life and out of gratitude for his service to France will go a long way in the direction of making up for any discomforts his patriotism has brought him.

"The soldier being experienced in the wordly ways of American women who act in this benevolent fashion mistakes the French maid's intentions. However after the girl unlimbers a vicious hatpin the soldier desists, realizing that the girl is respectable or in other words that he was mistaken in his guess.

"The girl brings a charge for attempted rape, and yet the soldier is innocent of the charge his attempted intimacy being the result of ignorance or mistaken identity; ignorance of the difference in customs between France and America and a woeful lack of judgement in his method of approach. Instead of the soldier being found guilty of attempted rape in a case like this the girl should be placed in the dock for leading the warrior into the path of sin, by unwittingly acting like an American prostitute in her preliminary canter."

The official's words appear to carry the color of truth judging from the experience of one William Secore. His military record was excellent, he has a wife and two children and had a little bank account. But he fell immediately after the armistice.

It is quite painful. He met Mme. Louise L'Ercott in a public park. He was unprotected and the bold female asked him to go for a walk. He did. She led him to a quiet place. He made the mistake which the official referred to. He thought she was what she declared she was not. A struggle ensued ending in a defeat for the soldier. Secore on his own testimony attempted a strategic retreat but it would appear that all avenues of escape were blocked. A witness was in the vicinity. The injured maiden cried. Secore was arrested charged with attempted rape. Louise admitted she was physically unharmed but morally wounded. A court martial sentenced Secore to life imprisonment, but on the pleading of his wife it was whittled down to twenty years. Outside of that he is allright. No charge of radicalism was ever made against him.

Such cases as his often draw tears from grizzled officers, now engaged in salvaging wounded patriots in Leavenworth prison.

Republicans Have Their Daugherty; But Democrats Have Their Palmer

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—The republicans have their Daugherty, but the democrats have their Palmer.

The sheaf of telegrams and the records of telephone messages into which the Teapot Dome committee is delving show conclusively that the oil interests, in their raid upon the government reserves, and in their subsequent efforts to cover up their trail, have secured the services in a pseudo-legal capacity of every political leader in both parties who could be induced to use his influence for them.

Oil List Grows Steadily.

The list of those who were amendable to the oil interests is growing steadily.

William G. McAdoo and his son, Francis, have been Edward McLean's personal advisers for a period covering the time when McAdoo was in the Wilson cabinet, it is disclosed now.

McLean in turn was the close personal friend of President Harding, altho there are many in Washington now who use a much uglier term. It is known that important matters of government policy are discussed on McLean's luxurious houseboat during President Harding's habitual week-end visits. It was to McLean that Fall hurried when the storm broke.

A. Mitchell Palmer, whose wholesale raids in 1919 have been exposed as wholly subversive and illegal in a recent book by ex-assistant secretary of labor Post, is shown by telegrams before the Teapot Dome committee to be the law partner of J. W. Zevely, confidential attorney for Harry W. Sinclair. His most recent job, it is proved, has been to keep Edward McLean from the witness stand by pressure upon leading democrat politicians including Senator Walsh, chairman of the senate committee.

Senator Underwood, McAdoo's rival for the democrat nomination, is shown as having tried, at the instance of McLean, to secure the insertion of a leter in the committee records falsely stating that McLean had loaned Fall the $100,000 the latter received from Sinclair. The insertion of the letter was to have ended all attempts to get McLean on the witness stand.

The installation of a leased wire from Washington to Palm Beach by McLean the day before Senator Walsh interviewed him and the appointment of E. W. Smithers, a confidential employe of the White House to handle the messages, is taken as linking Coolidge with the oil scandal in the most definite manner.

It is held that the desperate efforts by Fall and McLean to thwart investigation could not have been made without his knowledge and tho appointment of Smithers as confidential go-between tends to show his co-operation.

"Where will this thing stop?" is the question on the lips of official Washington today as the committee continues its perusal of telegraphic records of which only about one-third have been read.

Daugherty Aids Try to Pick Probers and also failed to act in the oil scandal.

Fight On Personnel.

A fight on the committee named by Wheeler in his resolution to conduct the inquiry was probable. Republican leaders in the senate opposed the naming of the committee as a violation of all senate procedure, which usually leaves the naming of committees to the president of the senate. Wheeler named a committee headed by Senator Brookhart, Iowa. Senator Willis, Ohio, Daugherty's spokesman in the senate, will move to eliminate this provision. Daugherty's friends don't want Brookhart on the committee.

Daugherty Retains Counsel.

Carrying out his promise to fight, Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty has selected two attorneys to defend him against attacks by senators who seek to oust him from office.

A half hour after Daugherty left on a train for Florida to join his wife, the district attorney's office made public a telegram from Daugherty to Senator Willis, Ohio. The telegram said in part:

"Having attended to the government business which brought me here, I am leaving for Florida, as intended and required. I have retained Hon. George E. Chamberlain and Hon. Paul Howland, who represented me in similar attack a year ago in the House, inspired by the same influences who opposed me openly and secretly, and on practically the same charges, with substantially the same object in view, to represent me."

Chamberlain was formerly United States Senator from Oregon and Howland is a Cleveland atorney.

Daugherty asked Willis to advise the senate that he had not opposed the resolution for an inestigation of his office. The Attorney General said he would return to Washington as soon as possible.

During his stay here yesterday Daugherty appeared for a few moments before the Federal Grand Jury investigating charges of graft in the United States Veterans' Bureau under the jurisdiction of Col. Charles R. Forbes.

Legal Ethics, Palmer's New Alibi

committee a statement that he loaned Fall $100,000. This statement McLean later repudiated when Senator Walsh, Montana, insisted on questioning him in Palm Beach in January.

Palmer In Bad.

The telegrams which have been read by the committee tell of Palmer's activities only sketchily and he was called to appear today to explain details of the work he did in McLean's behalf.

A dozen or more agents and employes of McLean are to be subpoenaed next. The telegrams were either sent by them or involved their names. They will be required to tell exactly what was done to keep McLean from the witness stand.

The motive behind this line of inquiry by the committee is to ascertain the truth or falsity of the second McLean statement that he gave checks for $100,000 to Fall but that Fall returned them and they were destroyed.

Testimony of bankers is that McLean did not have $100,000 in the bank at the time he said these checks were written.

The committee is convinced that McLean knows more than he has yet told about the entire affair. McLean himself is to take the stand Saturday.

Ethically Correct, Says Palmer.

A. Mitchell Palmer, attorney-general in the Wilson cabinet, has denied before the Senate Oil Committee that he had tried to impede the oil scandal inquiry by any unethical means.

Palmer declared the work he did for Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post was entirely in accord with legal ethics.

Palmer was called because his name appeared frequently in telegrams between McLean and his employes here, in connection with efforts to prevent the committee calling McLean as a witness.

Senator Dill, Washington, Democrat, examined Palmer.

"Were you McLean's friend or attorney?"

"I've been an acquaintance but I acted as his counsel."

"Just how were you employed by him?"

"Mr. Major came to see me."

"Do you know what date?"

"I think the 26th or 27th of December."

Palmer produced a telegram which he said authorized his employment by McLean.

It advised Major to tell Palmer that the only thing that would connect McLean to the inquiry was the loan of $100,000 to Fall in 1921.

"I told him I could see no reason why Fall should not answer the committee's questions."

Advised McLean Say Nothing.

"In a telegram from Major to McLean on December 26, Mr. Major says 'Palmer and associates told me to tell you not to communicate with the committee,'" Dill broke in.

"No—" began Palmer, but Dill interrupted.

"But you yourself sent a telegram on Dec. 29 to McLean advising him against saying anything?"

"Oh, that referred to issuing a public statement—not to testifying before the committee. Zevely and I never saw Major together. I've told you all I did with Mr. Zevely."

"I want to find out how much truth Major is telling in these telegrams," said Dill. "Major says you would continue to look out for the interests of the man at Wardman Park."

"I don't know what Mr. Major meant by that," said Palmer.

"You were not going to look after Fall's interests?"

"Certainly not."

"Do you know Mr. Ira Bennett of the Washington Post?"

"Yes."

"Do you know Mr. Crocker of New York?"

"I know Frank Crocker, a lawyer in New York."

The telegram was given to the committee by Palmer on December 26th.

Major Saw Palmer.

"Was this the first notice that you were to be his attorney?"

"Well, I think that Major came to see me and said McLean wanted to retain me. He showed me the telegram either that day or the next day."

"Is Mr. Zevely (attorney for Harry Sinclair) your law partner as one of these telegrams said?"

"No."

"Have you ever represented Sinclair."

"No. The only thing I can think of that might have given Major that impression is that the first time I ever heard of this case was in a conversation with Mr. Zevely. He is an old personal friend of mine and called to see me at home on December 21.

"Zevely then sketched to me the proceedings of this investigation. He told me Sinclair had been asked some questions he had refused to answer and that the committee compelled him to answer. He said Fall was in the city and was going to be called to testify and that Fall had a question in his mind as to whether he could be compelled to testify.

"I told him my recollection of the rule was that the committee could compel a witness to testify on matters under its jurisdiction.

One of the questions agitating Congress is that of recognition of Soviet Russia. In view of the Teapot upheaval it is very improbable that Congress will consider Borah's resolution for Russian recognition.

Busy With Oil.

It is even believed by many that the hearings before the sub-committee on foreign relations will not be resumed. Senators Lenroot and Pittman, member of the committee before which the hearings were conducted, are also members of the Committee on Public Lands. This is the committee now investigating the Doheny and Sinclair oil leases. In view of oil being the drawing card in Washington's matinee affairs, these senators are unable to attend the Russian hearings. Senator Pepper, another member, feels that his party, now in dire straits, sorely needs him on the floor of the Senate as long as oil is being poured out of the boiling Teapot.

Senator Borah likewise doesn't want to miss out on the scandal game in the Senate. Besides, it is stated that Borah feels that the Department of State has made out such a poor case that all he needs to do is to deliver a speech to expose the weakness of the case against Soviet recognition as made by the State Department.

Many progressive senators and congressmen, democratic and republican alike, do not take this viewpoint said to be held by Borah. They disapprove very strongly of giving up the hearings and letting the Russian question take a back seat. One of them told the writer: "Borah means well, but it's not good strategy. I have gone thru the proceedings of the subcommittee on Russia and agree with Borah that Hughes has made a very poor case. Yet, the press has given his effusions publicity. The public has been presented with what appears to the uninformed a formidable array of documentary evidence. There is no use blinking the fact that most of our people are still uninformed and misinformed about the Soviet Republic. One speech by Borah, no matter how powerful and effective, can't do as much to disabuse the American public as the overwhelming evidence that can easily be brought to the committee to shatter everyone of Hughes' claims and pretensions."

Nothing From Coolidge.

Another prominent figure in Congress said that in his opinion there is very little chance of bringing to bear any successful political pressure on the administration for Russian recognition. In his opinion economic pressure, due to the depression that will soon set in even in the Eastern manufacturing centers, translated into a need for new markets, will drive America to recognize the Soviets much sooner than most people expect.

Nevertheless this solon was opposed to plowing down the campaign for recognition. He felt confident that at the first sign of the present oil tide being stemmed, the friends of Russian relations would again press their case.

WORCESTER UNION LABOR CONDEMNS DAVIS ALIEN BILLS

W. P. Plans Council for Foreign Born

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WORCESTER, Mass., Feb. 29.—The Worcester Central Labor Union showed its interest in the alien worker, by adopting unanimously a resolution of protest against the bills now in Congress which are aimed to stifle any opposition on the part of alien workers to the onslaughts of the haughty imperialist crowd that runs America today. The adopted resolution is as follows:

"Whereas: The Davis immigration bills, condemned by the A. F. of L. Convention at Portland, Oregon, one for selective immigration on a contract basis, which means nothing more than a strike breaking agency conducted openly by government officials with deportation for immigrants refusing to act in this capacity; the other, registering, finger-printing and photographing of the alien workers which will have the effect, thru fear of deportation, of keeping these workers in an unorganized condition and at the mercy of hostile interests, and thereby lowering the standard of living of all workers; therefore be it

"Resolved: That the Central Labor Union of Worcester, Mass., go on record as being unalterably opposed to such legislation and that the secretary convey this sentiment to the Congressmen from this district and to both Senators from Massachusetts.

"Submitted by Lodge 694, International Association of Machinists, T. F. Conroy, secretary and Lodge 339, International Association of Machinists, D. R. Donovan, secretary.

In Worcester at the present time, there is a conference to protest against the immigration restriction bills, in which many Jewish societies are represented. As yet no council has been organized for the protection of the foreign born, but the Swedish and Finnish members of the Workers Party have had a meeting on this question, and at the next meeting of the City Central Committee of the Workers Party, a mass meeting will be arranged for on the question of protection of the foreign born.

Lash Garment Bosses for Refusing to Talk Strike Settlement

the sluggers of the bosses failed to intimidate the workers.

Only one arrest was made during the morning, Caroline Hine, a striker, was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct. Taken to South Clark Street court she was released on bond. She demanded a jury trial and will appear in court again in two or three weeks.

Yellow Sluggers.

On the West and Northwest Side the pickets were undisturbed. No arrests were made in either district. The type of sluggers and rough necks the bosses have hired are anxious to avoid trouble. Many have police records and are afraid of the cross-examination of defense lawyers in case they were dragged into court and others are just yellow.

Jury Trials For Strikers.

The six strikers who were arrested Thursday in the Milwaukee Ave., district and who appeared in the West Chicago Ave., police court yesterday morning, all demanded jury trials and were released on bonds. They were, May Wilson, May Miller, J. W. Wilson, Sam Barker, Harry Rufer and Nathan Schwartz.

Fredia Pencher and Marie Sigel, the two strikers who were arrested Thursday evening, by police attached to States Attorney Crowe's office were arrainged in South Clark St., court and demanded jury trials. They were released on bonds.

"Arbitrator" Ignores Labor.

Meyer Perlstein, vice president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union, said yesterday that the union had not been approached by Benjamin Marshman representing Secretary of Labor Davis who was authorized by Davis to try to settle the strike by arbitration. Marshman had issued a statement that he had approached the employers with a proposal to arbitrate the strike that they had refused to consider the matter.

Perlstein said that if a proposal was made to submit the union demands to arbitration the union would consider it. "The bosses want to fight and we will show them that war is expensive. If they want to learn that it costs more to hire detectives and sluggers than it does to consider the demands of the union we will continue to fight and help them learn," Perlstein said.

Some Bosses Want Peace.

Some of the employers have begun negotiations with the union looking to the return of their workers to the shops under the conditions demanded by the union. Perlstein and representatives of the union were busy all day yesterday at the Hotel Morrison, talking with individual employers about settlements.

Five Pickets Arrested.

Five girl pickets were arrested in the loop district late yesterday afternoon. They were taken to the S. Clark St. police station where they were booked on charges of being disorderly. They were bailed out and will appear in the S. Clark St. police court this morning. They were Viola Thoess, May Brousch, May Gardle, Phyllis Gissosic and Jennie Lieberman.

Change Troops at Herrin.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 29.—Company C of Springfield, One Hundred Thirtieth Infantry, will be sent to Herrin tomorrow morning to relieve Company I of Salem, which has been on guard duty in the trouble zone of Williamson County for the last three weeks. The ordering of the Springfield troops to Herrin was issued last night by Adjutant General Carlos Black. The troops will entrain early tomorrow morning and will remain in Herrin indefinitely, Black said.

Butcher Semenoff in Japan.

TOKIO, Feb. 29.—General Gregorie Semenoff, Cossack butcher, has arrived in Tokio and is living at the home of Colonel Mogamaieff, chief representative of the anit-soviet faction of Russians in Japan. The general's friends talk optimistically of his again pitting his efforts against the Soviets but the general himself is keeping mum.

QUINCY, Ill., Feb. 29.—Several persons were killed and a number injured when an explosion occurred at the plant of the Weise Paper Mill here today.

TEACHERS' UNION SECRETARY HITS PLATOON SYSTEM

"Factorization," Says F. J. Stecker

"The American Federation of Teachers is alive to the danger of the platoon system of education," said F. J. Stecker, International Secretary of the Teachers' Union, to a reporter of the DAILY WORKER.

"The word "factorization" expresses the nature of the Gary system," said Mr. Stecker, and the platoon system, he explained, is just the Gary system varnished over.

As for the convention of the department of superintendence of the National Education Association which has just closed its sessions in Chicago Mr. Stecker said that he preferred to wait until he had printed copies of the proceedings before he commented on the particular action taken.

"Ears to the Ground."

When his attention was called to the fact that the convention had failed to go definitely on record in behalf of the platoon idea he laughed and said:

"The superintendents have their ears to the ground."

Stecker was much interested in the fact that the DAILY WORKER is running day by day those chapters of Upton Sinclair's latest book on Education, the "Goslings," which deal with the N. E. A.

"Goslings," Union Propaganda.

The "Goslings" is part of the propaganda of the American Federation of Teachers with which it is bombarding the minds of the classroom teachers. Many copies of the book are being sold thru the union office. The "Goosestep" was similarly pushed by the union.

Ask Secretary of Education.

The move towards centralizing of educational control in the hands of the federal government received another shove when the assembled principals and superintendents of the N. E. A passed a resolution urging the passage of the Sterling-Reed bill, providing for a Secretary of Education in the president's cabinet and for a federal sudsidy of $100,000,000 to be apportioned out among the state school systems.

Should such a reactionary as Dr. Tigert, present U. S. Commissioner of Education, be selected for the more important post of Secretary of Education, Big Business would have a still tighter grip on the school system than it has today.

The women deans, who were exposed as spies against radicals in a recent issue of the DAILY WORKER, received the commendation of J. E. Armstrong, principal of the Englewood High School, in a speech before the spies' convention. Armstrong lauded their efforts to shield the girl from dangerous contacts and to safeguard their morals from "frivolous conduct" towards boys.

U. S. Exports Increase.

NEW YORK, Feb. 29.—Figures compiled and just made public by the U. S. Steel Corporation show that during 1923 American foreign trade totalled $26,500,000 each working day and that of this $13,880,000 was the value of the exports, and $12,600,000 the value of the imports. Two-thirds of the exports were manufactured goods—more than half of the imports were raw materials. And department of commerce reports for January show the preponderance of the exports increased—$229,000,000 being the value of the month's imports as against $394,000,000 the exports.

Australia Pays for War.

MELBOURNE, Australia. — According to the Australian federal treasurer 46 per cent of the total federal revenue of Australia is devoted to paying interest on war debt, war pensions, and other war services.

How heavily this burden rests upon the people of Australia will be seen by the fact that the revenue at present allocated for these purposes is one-third greater than the total revenue received by the federal government in the pre-war year.

German Editors Complain.

BERLIN, Feb. 29.—Even the conservative editors of Germany are dissatisfied with the present suppression of newspapers by the military, whenever some commanding general does not like a certain sheet. The German Press Association has recently passed resolutions protesting against tihs suppression and the infringement of the rights of free speech.

Syndicalist Case Dismissed.

EUREKA, Cal., Feb. 29.—After 66 hours the jury trying nine I. W. W. members here for criminal syndicalism failed to agree and was dismissed. The men have been in jail ever since last October. The trial was characterized by a huge mass meeting in Eureka which demanded the repeal of the criminal syndicalism law. It is doubtful if the men will be brought to trial again.

Oppose Buffalo Labor Journal.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Feb. 29.—The Buffalo Labor Journal is no longer the official organ of the Buffalo Central Labor council. Charging that the paper had violated its agreement and contract, the council has notified all advertisers that legal steps are being taken to prevent the paper from deriving continued benefit of the withdrawn labor indorsement.

THE FIRST TIME IN HISTORY
Two Years of Russia's New Life
by Anna Louise Strong
With an Introduction by LEON TROTSKY

HERE, at last, is the book on the Russia of today, the world power just recognized by England with Italy, France and other countries about to follow.

It is so crammed with new and vital information based on wide investigation that when it was still incomplete, Senator La Follette on a visit to Russia, hired a special stenographer to make a copy of it. It does not seem a betrayal of confidence to mention that the book so impressed one of America's most distinguished economists and educators that he, himself, handed a set of the proofs to the State Department of the United States government for their consideration for their future attitude toward Russia.

WIDE DISRUPTION IN B. T. C. WING OF FEDERATION

Dual Bodies in Three Big Cities

Extensive disruption and dualism in the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor is revealed by the recent statement of officials of the department dealing with the Chicago situation growing out of the Landis award and other similar conditions in other large cities.

There are two building trades councils in Chicago, one composed of unions which accepted the Landis award, the other of the unions that fought it and are still fighting it. The Landis award council has become a sort of a mutual admiration society of bosses and wage-earners a glorified company union.

Neither of the two councils are recognized by the building trades department altho both are composed of American Federation of Labor unions.

In Cleveland there are two building trades councils as a result of the jurisdictional dispute between the carpenters and sheetmetal workers over the handling of metal trim.

One of the Cleveland councils is recognized by the deptartment, that which accepted the decision of the National Board of Jurisdictional Awards and gave most of the metal trim work to the sheet metal workers.

In St. Louis the building trades council is out of the department following its refusal to unseat a local of structural iron workers which was at odds with its international union.

In New York there is much friction between the building trades council formerly headed by Robert Brindell, now serving a term in Sing Sing, and the recognized council affiliated with the building trades department.

A conference of the officials of the American Federation of Labor building trades department and four officers of Chicago unions has been called for March 17. If a satisfactory settlement of the dispute is secured a new attempt will be made to eliminate the dualism in New York and Cleveland.

The St. Louis council will be re-organized, it is said.

U. S. Hydro-Electric Plants Ordered in Arizona and Idaho

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 29.—Government hydro-electric power plants will be constructed at the Yuma irrigation project in Arizona, and on the Gem project in Idaho, at a cost of $250,000 and $450,000 respectively due to the fight made by Senator Ashurst and Senator Borah in the senate against private power companies' spokesmen in that body, in debate on the interior department appropriations bill. Fear of another scandal proves too strong for the corporation bloc to organize their usual resistance.

Opposition to Filipino Independence Is Lead By Secretary of War

By JAY LOVESTONE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—Secretary of War Weeks today appeared in person. accompanied by General McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, before the House Committee conducting hearings on the various resolutions for Philippine independence.

The Secretary of War declared that precipitate action must be avoided in this matter. The question is whether the United States can withdraw and justify itself and its conscience before the world.

"The United States is entitled to a good name and reputation in its action in the Philippines," said Mr. Weeks. The Secretary went on to talk of the great freedom the Filipinos were enjoying under the American flag. "We cannot lightly relieve ourselves of our obligation to the Filipino people and of our international reputation and credit."

Mr. Weeks laid great emphasis on the proximity of Manila to the British, Japanese, French and Chinese interests and ports.

Big American Investments.

The total American investments in the Islands can be divided along the following lines, said the Secretary of War: $70,000,000 in government bonds held in this country and tax exempt from all Federal, State and municipal laws. (2) about $25,000,000 in railroad interests; (3) about one and a half million dollars in telegraph and telephone interests and (4) about fifteen million dollars on other interests. There is invested extensively British, Chinese, and Spanish capital in the Philippines. The problem of immediate independence is so vitally interlocked with the material welfare of the whole Filipino people that the question arises, said the Secretary of War, "whether sufficient, mature consideration has been given to the matter by the Filipino nation." He said further: "The present demand for complete, immediate independence is not expressive of the best interests and the wishes of the Filipino people."

There can be no greater temptation to the nearby overcrowded people than the present situation under which there exist vast tracts of uncultivated lands. "It is my opinion that the greatest need of the Filipino people today is capital to develop their natural resources."

Wants Support For Wood.

The Secretary of War made a strong plea for the development of a "disposition on the part of the Filipino leaders to obey the law and cooperate with the Governor General Wood." He contended repeatedly that the Philippines would suffer great economic loss thru their being declared independent. The Filipinos have not yet succeeded establishing complete national regional unity and in exploiting their great resources and placing their goods on the world market was the contention of Weeks.

Weeks laid considerable emphasis on the alleged illegal manner in which the Philippine legislature was supposed to have handled the native government's gold reserve when money was invested in the development of sugar and oil centrals.

Schaffer For Filipinos.

At this point Congressman Schaffer of Wisconsin asked the Secretary of War, whether it was not a fact the American Governor General was there at the time the gold reserve was handled in this fashion and that therefore he should be held at least as much responsible as any one else. Weeks replied that he was not sure about the law and that he would have to look it up before answering the question. Then Congressman Schaffer protested against this matter being introduced into the record. The Congressman went on to declare that the control of the vast land domain by the government, spoke rather well for the ability of the Filipino people to govern themselves. "It is better for them to hold on to this land than give it away to the big corporations as those headed by Doheny and Sinclair," said Mr. Schaffer. This remark brought a smile from General McIntyre. Weeks replied very feebly by saying that he used this point merely as an argument about the Island's great resources being a tremendous temptation to the adjoining countries. Weeks was forced to admit that the three political parties of the Philippine Islands were all for independence but he deplored the failure of the native leaders to cooperate with General Wood.

Demands Protection For Capitalist Investors.

In the course of the questioning of him by several members of the committee, Secretary of War Weeks disclosed the real basis of the American imperialist designs on the Philippines. He declared very frankly: "Before giving the Philippines independence, some provisions should be laid down to make the bonds, $70,000,000, held by American investors, as safe as they were when they were issued. When these bonds were issued it was assumed by the investors that they were safe. We should guarantee their continued safety now as they were at the time they were taken up by the investors." The Secretary of War admitted, however, that this point of view involves merely a moral obligation rather than a legal one. General McIntyre agreed that the ruling of Attorney Generals to date have been also that this was more of a moral obligation on the part of the Government than a legal point of view.

Japanese Scare Hovers Over Sessions.

Here the committee was given somewhat of a scare. The Japanese bugaboo was injected and it was handled very cleverly and with deadly effect. First of all, Congressman Ward inquired in a sort of half suppressed manner, whether it was not a fact that if a Japanese army had invaded the Philippines, an American force would be sent to drive the Japanese out. Congressman Ward prefaced his remarks with a very guarded statement that he was not sure whether this, the committee hearing sessions, was the proper place place where the Japanese question should be discussed. It may be all a matter of jingoism, but it is in the American mind and we ought to consider this somewhere.

When Congressman Knutson of Minnesota, pressed further the point of the danger of Japanese aggression, the members of the committee became rather wary and demanded that all these questions should be stricken from the record and handled in executive session.

Want People Kept Ignorant.

Committee Chairman Fairfield of Indiana, came to the rescue of his perturbed colleagues by making a fervid plea that the newspaper men who have a high "moral sense" should not disclose any portion, of this debate and keep it entirely out of the records. The committee members were apparently greatly disturbed by the likelihood of the people seeing thru the Japanese bugaboo that has continually been raised to prejudice and confuse the whole Philippine independence issue.

"Capital Too Timid."

Weeks made a plea that capital was "too timid" to invest in the Islands as long as conditions were as unstable as they are today. This caused Congressman Schaffer to ask: "When in the name of goodness will capital feel safe enough to invest, since we are always being told that this uncertainty of capital is a strong argument against independence?" Weeks admitted he could not answer this question, tho he was of the opinion that two or four years was an insufficient period for American capitalists to get the necessary sense of security to inspire their investing their capital in the Islands. Weeks definitely opposed the extension of native governmental control in the Philippines, as for instance, the election by the Filipinos of the Governor General instead of the present system of appointment by the President of the United States. The Secretary of War said he could see no other way in which the American government could retain its present control of the Islands.

Roxhas Replies.

Speaker Roxhas, representing the Filipino Independence Mission, then made a very effective reply to the Secretary of War. Speaker Roxhas showed that the Philippine government never appropriated any money for the investments in the sugar and oil centrals as had been stated by Weeks. Mr. Roxhas showed that the Head of the Philippine National Bank had merely lent some money of his own accord and that he was now serving time in jail for this act. He went on to show that the Philippine government has today more than thirty million dollars of its national gold reserve in powerful American banks chosen by Governor General Wood. Mr. Roxhas very ably pointed out that the financial slump which hit the Philippine Islands was not due to the incompetence of the Philippines to administer their national economy but rose from the world wide economic depression which hit the world at the close of the War. The transactions entered into by the Philippine National Bank were perfectly good, legitimate transactions at the time they were consummated, declared Speaker Roxhas. "The sugar centrals are today paying every cent of interest every year. The Philippine currency is today at par and often at a premium. This is the condition, at this time, when we are asking our independence. This shows very clearly that our government is able to maintain peace and order. Our government is supported and elected by the people and is meeting all its international obligations. Under the present status we have reached the maximum of economic development. Secretary Weeks admits himself that the present uncertainty is harmful to the extension of investments of capital.

"We are a people who have fought several wars for our national independence and freedom. For three years we have waged a hopeless war again the United States for our independence. We are a people that can make mature and deliberate decisions. We have given great degreat liberate thought to this important question of our national independence. We have no fear of the dissensions in our country spoken of by the Secretary of War Weeks. We no longer demand any sacrifices, monetary or any other, by the United States in our behalf. The Jones Law did not lay down any provisions or conditions as to our economic indebtedness or the degree of perfection to be attained by us economically before getting our freedom. If we are to accept the condition of the currency as the criterion of the worthiness of national independence and recognition, then only England and the United States would be independent today." These were the concluding remarks of Speaker Roxhas.

At least another session will be held on Philippine independence. The outlook for a favorable committee report is good.

CALIFORNIA SLAYS 13,000 DISEASED CATTLE AND HOGS

Drastic Action Against Hoof-Mouth Plague

(Special to The Daily Worker)

OAKLAND, Calif., Feb. 29.—Destruction of 13,000 cattle and hogs infected with hoof and mouth disease, was to be begun today by federal and state officials as the most drastic step thus far in the fight against the disease in California.

Reports to the headquarters here, from which federal and state officials are directing the campaign for eradication of the disease, showed that infection has now been found on a total of 34 ranches.

Stray Dogs To Die.

Orders were given that stray dogs and cats in the vicinity of the infected area be collected and killed.

Governer Friend William Richardson of California, following a conference with director of Agriculture G. H. Hecke and other officials leading the campaign against the disease, announced that he was, if necessary, willing to call an extra session of the state legislature to deal with the situation.

Reports from Washington stated Secretary of Agriculture Wallace is preparing to ask congress for an appropriation to be used in the fight.

Orders were issued today forbidding express companies returning milk or cream cans to infected areas.

Standard Oil Is Violator.

Several additional ranches, where infection has been found were placed under strict quarantine and the "tank farm" of the Standard Oil Company was rigidly quarantined as a result of violation of the order against moving stock across a public highway. No person is permitted to leave the company's "farm."

Preparatory to the destruction of the infected animals, trenches were dug at the ranches where the herds were located. The stock was shot and then, in most instances saturated with kerosene, thrown into the trenches and burned and buried.

"Friend of Labor" a Scab.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Feb. 29.—Mayor W. W. Campbell, elected by union votes as a friend of labor, has gone back on his backers. The Schenectady Trades Assembly unanimously protests in a resolution against the discharge by the mayor of a union machinist. All machinists employed by the city are non-union The business agent of the machinists was one of the principal supporters of Campbell against the socialist candidate, a man who was also a delegate to the central labor body.

An Australian Hughes.

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—W. M. Hughes, who was war-time prime minister in Australia, is undertaking a lecturing tour thru the United States. It is rumored that at the conclusion of his tour he will remain in the United States and become Australian high commissioner at Washington.

There is much opposition in Australia to such an appointment, it being held that, as a discredited politician, he has no right to speak on behalf of the Australian people.

Lure of Rendezvous Fatal.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 29—After one brief day of liberty, Gladys Ellis, 21, was again behind prison bars today, charged with the murder of Miss Louise Richards, 70, a matron at the women's prison, when the matron attempted to block her escape.

The girl was captured in a taxicab last night as she was speeding to keep a rendezvous with her lover before fleeing from the city.

Cap Makers for Brookwood.

NEW YORK, Feb. 29.—Brookwood Labor college at Katonah, N. Y., has been unanimously endorsed by the general executive board, United Cloth Hat and Cap Makers. Locals of the union are asked to assist in maintaining the institution. The board called attention to Brookwood's "splendid educational work for the entire labor movement." Four union cap makers are now students there.

Can't Utilize Returned Soldiers.

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—Efforts by the shipping companies in Australia to utilize returned soldiers against unionists along the waterfronts have failed. The returned soldiers have decided the matter by joining the Waterside Workers' federation. The unionists are now strong enough to force full preference to unionists on all waterfronts in Australia.

Rumors Can't Kill Him.

TOKIO, Feb. 29.—Reports persist in Tokio that Prince Matsukata is dead and that announcement of his death is being withheld until the prince regent can confer certain honors upon him.

Announce "Safety Week."

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 29.—Governor Len Small in a proclamation designated the week beginning April 20 as health promotion and safety week.

Brundage Up For Re-Election.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Feb. 29.—The petition of attorney general Edward J. Brundage as a republican candidate for attorney general, was filed late yesterday in the office of secretary of state Louis L. Emmerson.

Militants on the Job

The International Ladies' Garment Workers, on strike against the open shop in the Chicago industry, are meeting with the combined opposition of the bosses and the civil authorities expressed in the arrest and intimidation of strikers and pickets.

The employers have their gangs of gunmen and sluggers who operate without any interference from the police, but defensive measures taken by the workers immediately place them outside the law. More than a dozen arrests of strikers—men and women—have already been made.

Most of the shops involved in the strike are those of cockroach capitalists—small business men who depend upon their ability to sweat their employes to meet competition. When this kind of cattle can rally the police force of a city the size of Chicago to their assistance the united front of law and exploitation is plainly perceptible.

The Ladies' Garment Workers are putting up a splendid fight and not the least interesting aspect of the situation is the fact that the expelled members of the left wing are leading the struggle.

In every strike district they are the most active and the most trusted. They are furnishing the organizing ability and the militancy of the strike and in their devotion to the cause of the union which they did so much to establish they have forgotten for the time being the fact of their expulsion by officialdom and the campaign of persecution that has been carried on against them.

If there has been any doubt that the expulsion of members of the Trade Union Educational League has nothing to do with their desirability as fighting unionists the present strike has dispelled it. It was upon this group that the officials were forced to call when the strike occurred; they were confronted with the alternatives of seeing the strike die stillborn or of calling for assistance from the militants they have been hounding and slandering for months.

The union has gained in strength from the strike altho it is only four days old; many open shops will be eliminated and organization thereby extended; much of the ground lost because of the resentment stirred up by the official attack on the militants will be regained and for these advances the expelled left wingers and their sympathizers must be given the credit.

What are the officials going to do about it when the strike is ended?

More important still, what is the bulk of the membership going to do when the strike is ended and they have complete proof that a union which drives out the militants because the officials fear for their jobs is helpless unless, as may not always happen, the militants stay on the job and fight as they always have?

The job now is winning the strike. After that the struggle for the adoption of a fighting policy in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' will be resumed with additional vigor so that more and bigger victories can be won.

Danger Ahead!

While the President's private secretary, C. B. Slemp, that C. O. D. wholesale dealer in post office jobs, was away telling the Teapot Committee that he went to see Fall and McLean at Palm Beach merely for his "health and recreation," there was being perpetrated before the momentarily deserted Coolidge an act of the basest travesty on the good faith of the suffering, bankrupt farmers.

And who but Magnus Johnson, elected by the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota and Lynn W. Frazier of North Dakota should find themselves in the company of that false farmers' friend, Capper of Kansas, pleading the cause of the rural bankers before his royal highness, Coolidge, the sworn enemy of every poor farmer!

There is danger ahead for the farmers when these Magnus Johnsons and Fraziers join hands with the multi-millionaire Cappers to put trust in the War Finance Corporation eaded by Eugene Meyer, one of the financial izards of Wall Street!

Coolidge was informed by these so-called ilitant defenders of the dispossessed farmers at this plan was worthwhile not only beuse of the financial help it would bring to e hard-hit rival sections but also for the rean that "this movement would have a splend effect because of the assurance it would give to the bankers and agriculturists of the sections in question that the Federal Government realizes the acuteness of the present situation and is not indifferent to the needs of those in trouble."

So here we have it! Farmer banker co-operation—another panacea for the troubled rival masses! Pulling the chestnuts out of the fire for Coolidge, the prince of the Boston bankers and the hope of Wall Street! We are not surprised at Capper. But what of Magnus Johnson? And what of Frazier? Is this what they were sent for to Washington? Is this their duty?

And yet some would say that the time is not ripe for the formation of a powerful national farmer-labor party organized along class lines to make impossible just such danger menacing the working and farming masses of the country!

The Japanese Crisis

The censorship of news that has been in force in Japan since the earthquake cannot conceal the tremendous growth of mass discontent.

That there is in process of formation a popular revolt against feudalism in government and industry is shown by the fact that the middle-classes—students, intructors, lawyers and journalists—are apparently in sympathy with the demands of the mass of the workers and peasants.

The Japanese ruling class is discovering, much to its surprise, that the state religion no longer fills the bill as a somnolent for the populace. The attack on the person of the prince which took place shortly before his wedding is indicative of the fall of the royal family in popular estimation. Such an occurrence has the deepest significance to those who understand the hitherto sheeplike reverence of the Japanese for their rulers.

The Japanese cabinet is in a chronic state of crisis and its policy of non-recognition of Soviet Russia—largely the result of American influence—is bitterly opposed.

The Soviet government has made a favorable impression upon the Japanese people and the proximity of Russia facilitates the constant flow of information concerning the advances made by the Russian workers and peasants under their own government; with the increasing numerical strength of the Japanese labor movement there is a growing desire to learn from Russia.

Economically Japan is in a bad way. Her penetration policy in China has not been signally successful and the stupidity and reaction of her rulers deprives her of a natural market for manufactured goods in Russia.

The recent loan floated here by the house of Morgan mortgages Japan to the American financiers and the favorable position in which Japan found herself after the war no longer exists.

Japan today is torn by the conflict of forces which rends small nations without great natural resources very soon after they launch out into the stormy seas of imperialism.

She played at imperialism just long enough to industrialize large sections of her working class and these now lead in the struggle that will end with Japan becoming one of the people's republics whose embryos can be seen forming in the womb of the orient.

The Capitol Sanctuary

Closer to the White House creeps the investigation of the Teapot Dome leases. Edward McLean, close personal friend of the late President Harding, owner of the Washington Post, man about town and bon vivant, is shown to have had free access to all avenues of White House information including the privilege of securing secret service operatives to handle his leased wire messages during his frantic attempts to keep the Teapot Dome investigation from involving him and Fall.

Is there a normal child who believes that President Coolidge knew nothing of the tempest that was gathering and of the mad dash for the cyclone cellar by his friends and subordinates?

Of the fund of general information possessed by the president we know nothing, but certainly he is skilled in interpreting the gyrations of the political weather-vane. To attempt to place the presidential product resulting from the combination of stale crabmeat and a weakened constitution on a pedestal that lifts him above the crass criminalities of his associates is evidence of gross stupidity or of deliberate purpose to deceive.

President Coolidge has shown no intention of aiding the investigating committee to arrive at a full knowledge of the facts and persons connected with the oil scandal. On the contrary he has shielded to the utmost the attorney-general whom he dare not, in the face of public disapproval, entrust with what is the work of the office he holds—investigating the acts of and bringing to trial federal officials known to have been the agents of private oil interests.

President Coolidge, instead of scourging from the capitol premises the thieving gentry gathered there, sits silent and allows them to control the machinery of government, to sabotage by every means known to the underworld of finance, the investigation that even under these unfavorable conditions has branded them as hired men of powerful corporations engaged in exploiting the workers and farmers of America.

Like the cathedrals and chapels of the middle ages, the capitol today under Coolidge is sanctuary for thieves big and little.

Is it too much to ask that a president, who defies in such a brazen manner the masses whose servant he is supposed to be, be impeached and driven from office?

GERMAN CLOTHING WORKERS SAVED BY AMALGAMATED

American Aid Came in Nick of Time

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BERLIN, Feb. 28.—International solidarity has kept the German Clothing Workers' union from going under. The contribution of $3,000 by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, more than any other gift received from abroad, has made it possible for the German workers in the needle trades to continue their organization.

Some months ago the German tailors had turned to the clothing workers' organizations of the world with an appeal for a loan to help them out during this grave economic crisis of the German nation. The Amalgamated responded, not by a loan, but by an outright gift of $3,000. As General Secretary Schlossberg put it in the letter announcing the gift:

"You asked for a loan; we decided to make it a donation, a gift to you from your more fortunate comrades in America. We are not asking you to pay back the amount to us in the future as you offered to do. We know that when you will be on your feet again you will gladly come to the aid of other workers who might need it."

Deaply Touched by Gift.

In commenting upon the gift, First Vice President Ploog said to your correspondent on behalf of the German organization:

"We are deeply touched by the splendid gift and by the wonderful spirit of international solidarity of which this is an evidence. Our first expenditure will be that of starting our official organ, which for many months has appeared only sporadically and in a small edition, as a regular bi-weekly journal to be furnished to all our members.

"In how sad a plight we were before aid began to arrive from abroad you may judge from the fact that for a while only 10 per cent of our numbers were working full time, and that the income of the union per month was not enough to pay the postage for one week."

The German clothing industry, according to Ploog, is at very low ebb. Custom tailoring is especially precarious. More than 50 per cent of the custom tailors are out of work, because the average German hasn't any money to buy tailor made goods. In the ready-made-clothing branch about one-third of our members are working full time, one-third part time, and one-third are out of jobs.

8-Hour Day In Danger.

As in the rest of German industry, in the clothing industry the bosses are trying to profit by the workers' misery in forcing upon them a working day of more than the legal eight hours. In the ladies' garment industry of Berlin, for instance, the union had to agree during 60 days of the year the boss may keep the workers at work for more than eight hours without paying extra for over-time. In the boys' clothing industry the weekly period was lengthened from 46-48 hours.

As the strike funds of the unions are already gone, having become valueless thru the depreciation of the mark, the unions are in no position to resist by a strike, and can only hope that at a later period they will be able to win back their rights.

'Eva' Wins Applause at Performance by Deutsches Theatre

The Deutsches Theater gave a very fine performance of the operetta "Eva" by Franz Lehar, at the Athenaeum, Southport and Lincoln avenues. The Deutsches Theater has been reorganized under new management and will continue, as in the past, to produce plays and operettas in the German language. The acting and singing in the production of "Eva" was more than good, and holds out promise of worthwhile accomplishment in the future. Those interested in German drama would do well to inform themselves further on the activities of this organization.

In the production of "Eva" the leading parts were taken by Max Bratt and Adelina Ernster-Baranyai both of whom really distinguished themselves by their splendid singing as well as acting. Kurt Schlegel and Anna Berneck supplied most of the comedy, especially Kurt Schlegel who as the farceur in the operetta produced plenty of laughs in the audience. The next performance of the operetta "Eva" will take place Sunday evening at 8·15 at the Turner Hall, 820 North Clark street.

Upton Sinclair Tells How National Education Ass'n Keeps On Neck of Rank-and-File Teachers of U. S.

One hundred and twenty thousand teachers in this country belong to the National Education Association, now meeting in Chicago, which is utterly controlled by Big Business.

Big Business set about gaining this control years ago and its grip on the educators of America is now tightly fixed.

The following series of articles exposing the N. E. A. are taken from Upton Sinclair's latest book, "Goslings," which exposes the public schools as thoroly as the "Goosestep" exposed the universities.

By UPTON SINCLAIR
(Author of "The Goslings.")

THE National Education Association is a very old institution, predating the Civil War. It has always been controlled entirely by the supervising force; in other words, it has been an employers' organization.

During several decades of its history no classroom teacher was ever elected to any office. At the present time some well trained teacher is occasionally admitted to office for the sake of appearances.

It required many years of struggle to get the National Education Association to give any consideration whatever to the living and working conditions of the classroom teacher, or to recognize salaries, pensions and tenure as legitimate subjects for discussion.

Dodged Wages Issue.

It required a revolution in the organization to secure in the year 1903 the appointment of a committee on salaries, tenure and pensions; and this committee made a report which was full of misrepresentations. Not until 1911 was action taken even to gather the real figures on these questions.

I will give you a glimpse of the organization in those early days, just to let you see how these things remain the same. At the 1901 convention in Detroit, the United States Commissioner of Education gave a paper outlining the progress of the schools.

He was an aged dotard; as an eye-witness said to me, "In the educational system we don't bury the dead. We let them walk around to save funeral expenses."

This speaker congratulated the country upon the growing number of school pupils, but said not a word about the need of more school money. An orator who rose to applaud him declared that the educational sky was without a cloud, and his only regret was that the American public schools had not been able to get a donation from Rockefeller.

But suddenly a cloud rose upon the educational sky. A thing happened which had never before happened in the history of the N. E. A.—a classroom teacher rose up from the floor of the convention and asked to speak! To make matters worse, it was a woman teacher.

This female rebel declared that she for one was glad that the American public schools had not got any money from Rockefeller, and she hoped they would keep clear of all corporation influence.

If the rich wanted to help the schools, let them pay their taxes; let the railroads, for example, pay taxes on their franchise valuations, which they were everywhere evading.

You may not need to be told that this was Margaret Haley, making her debut to the N. E. A. twenty-three years ago. The great assemblage was stunned; to attack the railroads, the N. E. A.'s main source of revenue! At that time, you see, when you bought your ticket to the convention, the ticket included your dues, and the N. E. A. got the rake-off!

Friend of Vanderbilt.

The aged commissioner felt called upon to put down this insurrection. He got up again and stated that all the wealth of the railroads had come from economy in administration—he knew, because he was a personal friend of Commodore Vanderbilt.

He urged the delegates to pay no attention to this; the teachers were worn out from the school routine, and were not in condition to think soberly. Moreover, the delegates must bear in mind that Chicago was no criterion of the rest of the country; Chicago was "morbid and cyclonic."

Sixteen years passed, and revolution came in Russia, and our school superintendents realized the danger of permitting the lower classes to get out of hand. They resolved to put down the classroom teachers in the N. E. A., and to keep them down. The procedure by which they did it constitutes one of the most amazing public crimes in the history of the United States.

Bear in mind; this National Education Association was a public institution, with a charter from Congress, according to which it was controlled by its members.

Any educator—including teachers—might pay four dollars and become an active member, and these active members met in convention once a year, and there voted and elected officers.

This was democracy, as our ancestors understood it; and this was the thing which was suddenly discovered by school superintendents and their capitalist masters to be a menace to the American schools.

At N. E. A. conventions there would appear two kinds of active members. There would be those who had come from all parts of the country, and ninety per cent of these were from the employing class of the schools. These had the money to come, and made it their business to come; most of them had their expenses paid, either by the public, or by the organization to which they belonged. The other group was made up of members who lived in or near the city where the convention was held, and these would be ninety per cent classroom teachers.

They were the only classroom teachers who could attend the convention without great expense, and they represented, and properly felt that they represented, the great mass of the teachers who could not attend, but who had a vital stake in education, and had needs to be voiced.

Signs of Class Struggle.

So at N. E. A. conventions there was beginning to be noticed that major phenomenon of our time—the class struggle. Here were the high-up and prosperous and powerful superintendents and "great educators"; and here were the common riff-raff of the school proletariat.

In any big city it would happen, inevitably, that the proletariat would be in the majority. They would have little idea what was going on, or how they should vote; but here would come a dozen or two of the New York and Chicago and Milwaukee "Bolsheviks," who would get up in meeting and ask questions and explain matters to the classroom teachers, and induce them to vote for their own class—or shall we say for their own classes?

This was the thing which the educational employers decided to change. They worked out the scheme at their midwinter convention of 1918—the Atlantic City meeting of the Department of Superintendence. Instead of the N. E. A. being governed by the democratic vote of its active members at the annual convention, the N. E. A. was to become a representative body, like the United States of America; the members in the various cities and towns and counties would elect delegates to the state bodies, and both local and the state bodies would elect delegates to the national convention. The gang, of course, would be on hand at every stage of these elections to pull wires and get its own politicians chosen.

So, when the convention assembled in some big city, the classroom teachers of that city would no longer have votes as active members of the N. E. A.; instead of that, they would be represented by delegates on the floor, one delegate for every hundred teachers, and, in case they had more than five hundred members, one delegate to each five hundred members thereafter.

Disfranchising Teachers.

So the classroom teachers of the convention, instead of having one vote per teacher, would have one-hundredth of one vote per teacher, or maybe one five-hundredths of one vote per teacher! And so the N. E. A. would be made safe for the superintendents!

There was only one difficulty with that scheme, and that was explained to you when you were a child and read Aesop's "Fables." The mice wanted a bell put around the neck of the cat, but how was it to be done?

At some one convention of the N. E. A., the classroom teachers of an American city must be induced, not merely to disfranchise themselves, but to disfranchise the classroom teacher of the entire country forever and ever after!

Such was the job; and I repeat that the doing of it was one of the most amazing public crimes in the history of the United States.

The Non-Cooperative Movement in India

By LOUIS ZOOBOCK

IT IS a known fact that England had ruled and rules India not for India's benefit but for the benefit of the English capitalists. This does not require much explanation; the British government had done its best to discourage popular education; it taxes the Indian people heavily. India had more public schools before the English conquered the country than it has today. After 950 years of British rule, we find that 90% of the males and 99% of the females are unable to read and write.

The taxes imposed by the British imperialists are unbearable, being 50% of the produce. From 30 to 40 million of the population of India are systematically undernourished so that England's annual revenue may not be diminished by a dollar. India is forced to pay for its own food, as well as the salaries of the English rulers. It is forced to support the British army as well as all the military campaigns "conducted in the interests of India"; it is forced to pay the pensions of the many officials and officers, military and civilian, who have been employed in India.

England deliberately discouraged manufacturing in India. Her discriminating duties have ruined every branch of native manufacturing and as a result 80% of the whole population has been thrown back upon the soil; but even here the taxation consumes 50% of the product of the cultivators. The "tillers of the soil, when they have sold themselves for the last time to the money lender, when they have over and over again mortgaged their crops and their bit of land, are sold by the tax-collector until they drop of starvation".

Universal Discontent

Such are some of the unfortunate results of the policy of England, which has produced a strong revolutionary movement in India.

The discontent in India is universal; it spreads over all provinces and includes all classes: it is directed not against any particular act of England, but against the government as a whole.

The "Non-Cooperative" movement is only one of the many movements now operating in India. Gandhi, the leader of this movement, is the typical product of India—the land of mysticism and spirituality. In him are gathered all those traits that Hindus adore. He is an ascetic, imbued with the ideas and teachings of Tolstoy. He combines in himself a messianic personality with the power of eloquent oratory. Besides duty, nothing else is important to him; his uncompromising adherence to what he believes his duty and the purity of his daily life exalted him almost to divinity in the minds of his followers.

The Gandhi Gospel.

His gospel is that of "renewed self-respect and regenerated manhood." Real freedom, according to him, can be only won thru moral regeneration and not by warfare. All forms of hate must be replaced by love. His people "must put away all weakness, timid servility, deceitfulness, sloth, every form of moral impurity, and put on courage, honor, self-respect, industry." So equipped they could assert themselves and their mere assertion would be irresistible. They had only to refuse to co-operate with a government that would not meet their desires, and that government would find itself powerless.

At the meeting of the India National Congress, in December, 1920, Gandhi succeeded in changing the constitution of the congress, and in making it adopt his "non-co-operative" schemes. These include three things: The driving of the British from India by passive resistance, the complete independence of India, and a reversion to her ancient ways.

To accomplish this the people of India must gradually withdraw from all co-operation with their European masters, says Gandhi. Government servants must resign their posts, lawyers their practices, students must leave the schools, and notable individuals must give up their titles and honors, laborers must refuse to work for foreign employers, foreign manufacturers be boycotted, obedience to laws and payment of taxes be refused. Thus a political and economic independence would be established. The whole activity could be successful only as it was carried on absolutely without violence and even without bitterness. "Once self-control were lost, once the India people failed to maintain the highest standard of conduct, the cause would be lost."

"Non-Co-operation" a Failure.

This program of "non-violent non-co-operation" could and did not succeed even in India.

Indeed, when one reads the newspapers of those troubled years, one is struck with the way non-violent beginnings drifted quickly to violent ends. The policy of Gandhi resulted in a succession of failures. His first appeal to the office holders and to the rich and powerful was disappointing in results. Only an insignificant number responded.

The next appeal was to the students. Here the response was overwhelming. The students thronged in great crowds to place themselves at the disposal of India's great "leaders for the service of their country."

Great meetings were held, speakers were moved to impassioned eloquence and large sums of money were promised for new schools, but even here the enthusiasm soon died out and the students returned to the English schools and colleges. The vision of "a national education" was a splendid one, but the effort of the leaders to make it more than a vision proved a complete fiasco. They could provide only a few ill-equipped schools and could offer only the same old subjects less efficiently taught.

Change of Tactics.

In 1921, the second year of the struggle, the non-co-operators shifted from political to economic agitation. A remarkable boycott of foreign cloth began. Wearing it was denounced as a sin. Ten million rupees were collected to popularize the charkas or spinning wheel. In many of the principal cities great bonfires of English cloth were made. Everywhere homespun was proclaimed the only possible dress for patriots.

For a time the movement achieved a large measure of success, but it brought with it a burden of suffering. English cloth is better and cheaper than the Indian article. India does not possess enough mills to supply the normal demand. As a result the burden fell heavily on the poor.

The movement of non-violence soon changed its form. It assumed the character of revolutionary outbreaks. In the cities "volunteers" in uniforms drilled openly in the street, and paraded with banners while shouting praise of Gandhi. In the rural districts armed bands were formed and the police and petty officials were brushed aside in many places. In Fysabad district a non-co-operator had stirred up agrarian riots. At Aligash, when a political agitator was sentenced to prison, the crowd attacked the police guards, and the result was two killed, several wounded, and a postoffice and other buildings burned. At Malegaon men were prosecuted for carrying arms at a mass meeting. A crowd attacked police, killed a sub-inspector and a constable, and in quelling them three were killed and nine wounded. When the Prince of Wales landed at Bombay, the occasion was made one for savage and bloody rioting in a section of the city. At Chauri-Chaura, a score of Indian policemen became engaged in an alteration with a group of non-co-operators. The altercation became a fight. The police were urged to escape, they were battered to death with sticks.

These are only a few of the cases which occurred before the famous Moplah rebellion broke out in the Malabor region. The rebellion lasted several months and was mercilessly crushed by the English government.

The Future.

Thus we see that the Tolstoyan philosophy on non-resistance, as preached by Gandhi, has proved a failure. The main objections to Gandhi's program is that the people of India are not capable of such a revolution as he preached. In general the theory of pacifism is not practical or possible for a whole nation to follow. "Gandhi," as one said, "will be an educator for the future," but he can hardly be the savior for the present. His scheme of non-co-operation can be useful only as a part of a broader program, not as a program in itself.

Real resistance to English rule in India in coming. A greater India, a Republic of the United States of India, is the vision of every Indian, but it can be realized only thru a revolution led by men of sterner mold than the mystic Gandhi.

Australians Lose Jobs.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Feb. 29.—Because of the wholesale dumping of foreign textiles into Australia, most of the Australian textile manufacturing plants have been forced to close, and thousands of operatives are unemployed.

Reports received by the textile unions state that hosiery, underwear, and knit goods are imported from Germany to Britain, where the cartons and labels are removed and the goods re-exported from Britain to Australia as British-made goods.

Changes In Agricultural Relations In United States

By OSCAR PREEDIN

THE attempts to explain the present difficulties of farmers by temporary changes in relations of agriculture to industry—(disproportion in existing prices in favor of industrial products against farm products in comparison with the so-called prewar prices)—by "cheating" of farmers in the sphere of transportation and distribution—(high tariffs and increased distances between the prices that farmers receive and what consumers pay for farm products)—and by changes in overseas markets—(decrease of purchasing power of the old foreign customers of U. S. agricultural products of other countries)—are based without question on very real facts.

Listening to these explanations the farmers can recognize that they are exploited in many ways. If they will consider those means of exploitation closer, they may be able to discover that many of them are fingers of the one hand—capital—which are snatching the produced values for its greedy stomach.

Explanations Insufficient.

But these explanations are not sufficient even when carried thru to the very root of the evil. It is very easy to see that they all try to find the causes of farmers' difficulties outside of the sphere of production—not in agriculture itself. They are very far from the main point: from the most important changes in agricultural relations on the fields, from the place where free American farmers are transformed into dependent peasants, where the system of agriculture, as it was established during the colonization period, is smashed now in pieces and an entirely different system of agriculture is introduced in its place.

These changes are equal in importance to the expropriation of peasants' lands in connection with the abolition of serfdom in Russia in 1861 and in other European countries before that time, or the expropriation of common lands in England from about the last quarter of the fifteenth century to nearly the end of the sixteenth century.

Difference in Substance.

But the present changes are here essentially different in substance. The agricultural relations of United States with a dominating owning system were different not only from the old relations but even from the results of the "glorious" revolutions in agricultural systems in Europe. In Europe the medieval relations in agriculture were changed only so far as to open the way for development of capitalistic relations in agriculture. In United States, on the contrary, the farmers' system was a creation of capitalistic colonization. It could not have and did not have any obstacles in the way for development of capitalism but was in all the world the clearest expression of capitalistic agriculture in the period of colonization with abundant free lands suitable for cultivation and where the expansion of private landownership ahead of expansion of its cultivation found sometimes very strong opposition and was restricted.

The farmer system (I have called it this to distinguish it from the tenant system of Europe), as established in colonial times in a period when capitalism was represented by many competing groups of manufacturers and traders, essentially differed from all other agricultural systems by the facts that this system did not know any separate class of landowners-pomeshchiks, junkers, pans, barons, lords—that under this system the development of land rent was limited and the land was practically inseparable from farmer's income or profits, and that the actual farmers owned the land which they cultivated.

Various Forces at Work.

The forces which contributed to the establishment of such a system were many. There was a time when in the play of divisional conflicts the colonization of the western free lands and the expansion of the farmer system was here supported even by the Southern slave holders who helped the "West" to destroy the plans of the powerful "East."

What kind of agriculture would be here today if about a century ago the slave-holding "South" had not joined the "wild West" against the "civilized East"? if the attempts of "East" to "deliver up the public lands in the new states to the avarice of the old ones, to be coined into gold and silver for their benefit" had been entirely successful?

The "westerner," Senator Benton, of Missouri, in his speech in the United States senate of Feb. 2, 1830, predicted that "the sales of the lands will be held back . . . every possible inducement will arise to screw up the price of all that is sold . . . no more favor to the settler . . . no sales on fair and equitable terms. . . . Laws will be passed to fix the minimum price at the highest rate; agents will be sent to attend the sales, and bid high against the farmer, the settler and the cultivator. . . ." "Speech of Mr. Benton." Printed by Gales & Seaton, Washington, 1830, p. 72.

Danger Was Real.

The danger was real. Attempts of the "East" to restrict the colonization and to grab the public lands would have resulted, if successful, in considerable separation of land ownership from the actual cultivators. Thru grants of whole territories to single persons, thru sales "for songs" thousands of acres to speculators, thru acquisition of public lands by agents of banks, etc., a system of colonization was attempted where the seizure of free lands in private ownership could go far ahead of actual farming and where even a separate class of landowners could be created.

"The "East" failed to carry out those plans thanks to united opposition of the other sections of the country and to divisions in its own sections on this issue. Some decades later the slaveholding "South" failed to expand its plantation system on account of free farming, and under united blows from East and West slavery was abolished; previous medieval relations in the South were destroyed and her agriculture opened for capitalistic exploitation. The owners of the large plantations were transformed into capitalistic land owners. Here in the United States came into existence capitalistic agriculture with masses of tenants on one side and big land owners on the other.

But outside of the territory of previously slave-holding sections, the colonization proceeded mainly where sufficient quantities of land remained "public" up to the time when actual farmers settled there to work.

Much Land Seized.

Nevertheless, very considerable tracts of unoccupied lands were seized before the westward movement of the farmers reached them. The new states had very large private land holdings at the time of their admission or annexation. They had many millions of acres of which owners did not cultivate a single acre.

Land holding corporations, companies, agencies, were formed to centralize, to control and to "hold on" to the lands which were appropriated in the past thru seizure, private grants by Spanish rulers, corrupt sales, railway grants and numerous other methods.

Thanks to them, in the new states of the West, where still a small part of the total available land is in farms but very much land is in hands of land holders (speculators), prices of land are considerably higher than the average in the United States. Against average price of plow land in the United States of $90 per acre, in California this price was $130 and in Oregon $100 per acre in 1920. The new settlers are compelled to pay exorbitant prices—or high rents—for the reason that the uncultivated land is already appropriated.

Figures Unbelievable.

The statistics of tenancy and farm mortgages do not give us a complete picture either of the state or of the progress of separation of land ownership from actual farmers. They show us only the current conditions on the "land in farms." But "census farms" and "census land in farms" are very fluctuating things in United States. In agricultural statistics of European countries we can find always the land as a stable quantity with more or less accurate and detailed information about the changes in ownership of land in general, not only in connection with its cultivation.

In agricultural statistics of United States, on the contrary, the "land in farms," many millions of acres with all their buildings and improvements are things which from census to census can appear, disappear and reappear without making any disturbance.

Startling Phenomena.

In some states the disappearance of "land in farms" is startling. In New England in 1920 were over 4 1-2 million acres less of "land in farms" than in 1880. This same kind of "progress" was experienced in the Middle Atlantic states. From 1910 to 1920 only 22 states had an increase of "land in farms" (total 94 million acres), but 27 states had a decrease (total decrease 17 million acres). This shows that during the last census decade in a majority of states less land went into the circle of "land in farms" but more went out from there into the mysterious "total land area."

The United States census statistics, by recording only those farms which at the date of census are "directly farmed" or engaged in "agricultural products, and raising animals, fowls, and bees"—may be sufficient in respect to production of all these things. But when we speak about the separation of the farmers from the land and want to have full information about the actions of financial capital in this matter, then such statistics can disclose to us very little, but instead mislead us if we trust them very far. Widespread ruin of farmers by financial capital can be confused without such statistics giving any inkling of it.

In its business with farmers, financial capital in case of default can "foreclose" on the farmers with all their land and belongings. The calling of farm mortgages seldom is followed by immediate sale to another farmer or by a lease to a tenant. In many cases some years elapse until a called in farm finds another cultivator. In this manner in districts where farms are called in just before taking the census and are in search of purchasers or tenants during the time of census but not "directly farmed," only the remaining farms are recorded. The census will represent this district as without tenancy and without mortgage debts, therefore, as faring very well, but in reality it may be the scene of the most cruel and widespread "executions of farms" by mortgagors.

Present Example.

Especially during a time like this there should be wider intervals between disruption of cultivation of a farm ruined by bankruptcy and revival of its cultivation by a new purchaser or tenant; conquests of financial capital in agriculture are going ahead at rapid speed, but necessary agencies for disposition of its acquired lands are still in the period of organization; ruining of farmers is an intensive process carried on by all available means for the sake of increasing land holdings, with their promised future rents, in hands of financial capital; temporary prevention of cultivation of land is unavoidable because of the desire of land holders to keep rent at the highest point.

Therefore, the present statistics of tenancy and farm mortgages represent only a part of very widespread separation of farmers from their land.

But even this part, which is represented by census statistics, is very considerable: in 1920 in the total number of 6,448 thousand farms in U. S. were:

2,455 thousand farms (38.1 per cent) operated by tenants;

68 thousand farms (1.1 per cent) operated by managers;

1,611 thousand farms (24.9 per cent) operated by nominal owners (mortgaged);

2,313 thousand farms (35.9 per cent) operated by real owners.

Here we can see that among all actual farmers in U. S. in 1920 only about 36 per cent were full owners of the land which they cultivated. That is all what is left from the original "farm" system.

The Causes of Rural Unrest

THIS is the first of two articles dealing with the important changes that are taking place in American agriculture and of which the present widespread rural unrest is a reflection.

. . . .

MOST writers dealing with this subject stress the discrepancy between the price paid to the farmer for his produce and the prices paid for commodities purchased by him. Other writers deal with the problem of the middleman and the distributive charge levied on farm produce.

. . . .

COMRADE PREEDIN goes to the root of the matter and shows that the American farmer is rapidly becoming "peasantized," i. e., he is losing his ownership of the land very rapidly—is a non-owner working for finance-capitalists and that rent and interests are the burdens that are crushing American farmers.—Ed. Note.

Hurricane Winds

Hurricane winds! if you must bite and blow,
War not upon the hovels of the poor
Who suffer so,
Such pain endure.

Blow thru the costly castles of the rich!
For they have hearths with myriad logs to burn,
Being blessed by boundless, wondrous wealth which
They did not earn.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gernuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Last issue brings the startling news that Serezha Surikov, a chekist had been buried alive by counter-revolutionists, far out on the Steppes. Klimin and Stalmakhov talk of their friend who was too sensitive and tender hearted for the stern work of the revolution. In this issue Klimin reads a farewell letter from Surikov, written before his capture by the enemy.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

• • • •

CHAPTER VIII.

KLIMIN finished reading and rested his head on his hands.

"It is painful for me," he said. "for I feel myself to blame for his death. I always valued him highly, and he was one of the best political workers in the Division. He went fearlessly into bayonet attacks with the Red Army men, and, in a moment of panic, kept people from running away. There were few such Communists as he among the youth of the Party. But for a Chekist's work he was altogether too nervous, and I overestimated him when I took him to work in the Cheka. Much in his letter I do not understand, and much is simply wrong. Take his attitude towards shooting: altho the bourgeoisie describe Klimin as a cannibal, every shooting leaves me with a feeling actually physically unpleasant, like the feeling you have in childhood when some sort of evil impulse makes you squash and tease flies on the window pane. . . . And I have always been conscious of the blood, the sufferings, the groans, and probably always shall be conscious of them. But he worked like a man under a spell. And only suddenly, somehow, came to see the horrors of a shooting, shivered and was done for. Whereas I, if I do not fall ill, know that I shall go on shooting, without end, just so long as the revolution needs it. . . . I'm sorry for that fellow."

"After all, he was an intellectual," said Stalmakhov quietly. "I do not mean to say anything against him, for there are intellectuals of more than one kind, some like him, useful and necessary to the Party. But I do dislike all that talk, Communism, for and against Communism. . . . Is Communism some sort of philosophy? What is there in it to be talked about? You know, for me, it is a friendly word.

"And in all my life there have been only two such friendly words, that and the word 'nurse'; I named my sister so. My parents died early; I don't remember them, but know only that my father was a shoemaker, and that I was left with a sister, a dozen years older than I. She loved me, caressed me, and gave me the best bits. Her face was not beautiful, wrinkled and yellow, like an old woman's, but for me it was the prettiest in the world. I was just fourteen when she died during an epidemic of cholera, and from that time on I had no friendly word, just as I had no friendly place or home.

What Do You Think of "A Week"

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have already published three installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its characters, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We will publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

"Until the actual revolution, ten years later, I grew up in the streets. Cleansed boots. Sold newspapers. . . . Worked as a lad in a tailor's, a bookbinder's, and then in a printing shop. Wandered about all over Russia. How did I live thru it without dying of hunger? Why did I not turn into a drunken beggar? I don't know.

"But the moment the revolution started, it was as if some one said to me, 'Well, Stalmakhov, your life is just beginning. Take it.' I was then working as a postman in a little town in the South, and you know, going from one to another of those snug little houses, listening how those philistine swine rejoiced at the 'bloodless' revolution, that had come by accident, I wanted to shout at them, 'It's not your revolution. . . . You waited for it with full stomachs, but it found me, Stalmakhov, hungry and cold in the road. It brings release to me, and not only release, but also the chance of emptying on some one all the hate piled up in me by my past life.' How I hated at that time! . . . All the well-fed, the bourgeois, the merchants, teachers, doctors, officers, and most of all that cursed ordinary middle class person. I did my hating in the revolution before ever I started to love.

"And only later, after I had been beaten for Bolshevik agitation, after in Moscow in October I had taken part in the storming of the Kremlin and the shooting of the Junkers, when I was still not in the Party, and did not understand anything of politics, then, in moments of weariness a promise of rest began to glimmer before me, far away. . . . Like the Kingdom of Heaven for the peasant, far away, but promised absolutely, if not to me then to those who are to come, to my sons or grandsons. . . . And that will be Communism.

"What it will be like, I don't know. . . . Not long ago I took up a book by a man called Bellamy, about Communism, something in the way of a fairy story, and I disliked it so much that I did not read it to the end. Much too much like what things are now, and I feel that it will be so different that it's hard for us even to imagine it. But, when my head is muddled and tired, when work goes badly, when somebody ought to be shot and sometimes you don't rightly know why, then in my mind, I just think my friendly word, Communism . . . and it's as if some one were waving to me with a handkerchief. . . .

"There's a fellow in the Polit-dep . . . Martuinov. I heard him lecture. A clever chap, spoke always to the point and so that one could understand. And about the Communist Society—just as if he'd been there! But I saw him work, in the house-to-house search and . . . even to talk of it is unpleasant. I saw that he and all his talk were not worth a farthing. Surikov, of course, was not like that. He gave his life for the Revolution. And yet he could so easily go off into philosophy like that. . . ."

"Yes, that is true," said Klimin. "We, workmen, somehow take the Revolution differently. . . . Not long ago I had a talk with a comrade, also an intellectual. . . . About the refectory for the responsible workers. He was arguing that the refectory ought to be closed. And in his argument the line of his thinking was like this: the Revolution demands of us that we should keep within the general ration, if only of a skilled workman. (The skilled workmen got more than the rest during the rationing period.) I did not reason so: we are the Revolution, we are what we call at meetings the forward, the advanced guards. If each one of us, who are carrying on a big work, is to hunger and weaken and break down, of course there will soon be an end of our advanced guards; it's as simple as that! But then, for the intellectuals, the Revolution is something outside, a little God demanding sacrifices, but for me, for example . . . I can say something like what some king or other said, 'The State . . . that's me.'"

He laughed.

"Well, well, it's getting dark, and I promised to go somewhere. . . . Goodbye, Stalmakhov, I beg you, find Karaulov, or telephone to him. . . . I know you'll do your best to find him. Perhaps we shall really have to call the Communist Company to arms. . . . So you'll do it."

"I'll do it."

They shook hands warmly and separated.

And no sooner was Stalmakhov out of sight than Klimin was thinking, with intense, eager delight, of how he was just going to see Aniuta.

This delight pushed its way thru care and worry, like the Spring grass thru the last thin crust of ice and the cold black earth. It was sad that Surikov had been killed, and Gornuikh's gloomy prognostications kept continually floating into Klimin's tired brain.

Aniuta was waiting for him on the terrace. He walked thru the little garden. The sun was reddening the west, mist was rising from the thawing black earth, and the trees were as if recovering from an illness. From far away she noticed the nervous twitching of his tired, thoughtful face. He came up to the terrace, and tenderly stroked her soft hair. She rose from her chair, took his hand and, giving him a firm handshake, asked gently, intimately, "What is the matter with you? What has upset you? She walked after him into the room and sat on a chair opposite him while he, just as he was, without taking his coat off, threw himself on the sofa, and lay back with his hands behind his head.

"Nothing," he abruptly replied.

It was the first time that she had seen him upset. At work she had known him sometimes worried and stern, sometimes very angry, but never gloomy.

"He does not want to say," she thought and she was unhappy. Hitherto she had not thought of her love for Klimin, and had never sought it, just as she did not seek luxurious life, delicate food or fine clothes, but accepted everything just as it was. But now, seeing the suffering on the face of this man who was dear to her, and feeling her powerlessness to help him in his suffering, she painfully became conscious of her love for him, and at once his aloofness hurt her. Both were silent, and in that watchful silence he suddenly felt that she was hurt.

HELP!

By MAX BARTHEL (Berlin).

Germany plunged with its laboring folk
Down into the deepest hell,
Men and women die, and old people.
The asylums are full and the prisons too.

Tubercular and starved are the German children.
Infants moan in bare rooms!
Intelligence stands with its knowledge before the naked void.
Before starvation there are cruel torments in Germany.

The people can no longer cry from hunger.
The laboring masses are exhausted;
They are defeated, in misery, in chains;
Every day brings new torments, new misfortune.

We call upon the comrades of other lands,
Who work and know what Need means;
We call upon all women and mothers, too, and all those Whose heart still glows for undeserved misery.

We call to those who have worked all their life long;
They have drudged with fists and minds;
They have fought desperately for existence;
All bear the red stripes of defeat.

Yesterday we helped Russia, Bulgaria, Japan;
Today we carry our love into the heart of Germany.
Do not relax, you friends of distant lands;
The bread is poisoned which uselessly decays.

You distant comrades of England and Russia,
Strong iron men in the United States,
Miners of Australia, of France,
And you comrades all of other lands:
Help!

See, we want brother to help brother,
That all those who work
Shall at last set up brotherhood upon the earth,
That slavery and misery shall be shattered.

Honest Government In Soviet Russia

By KARL BORDERS

(The author was with the American Friends (Quakers) in Soviet Russia for nine and a half months during the famine.)

IS there any graft and dishonesty in Russia today? Well, it depends on whom you ask. And if you had asked me a year ago, my answer would have depended on what day you asked the question. If it were the day that theft was discovered in the warehouse, or the day that Famine Committee President of Ivanovka was reliably reported to be dispensing special rations to his friends, I should probably have said, "All Russians are thieves and liars." If I had just come from a conversation with Tovarish Rolff who works with much patience, long hours and little reward to bring enlightenment to the Communist youth of Sorochinskoe; or if it had been the day I tied my clothes in a neat bundle, put them on my head and waded the river with the district school inspector to visit a children's home where there was a suspicion of graft —I should very probably have said with great decision, "The Russians are a fine, honest lot."

In either case, I should have fallen into the great Nordic Fallacy and have been guilty of that supreme error, a universal race or class pidgeon-holeing. There are honest Russians and Russian crooks. There are devoted, self-sacrificing Communists in Russia and there are those, particularly in the villages, who have been swept into places of responsibility and power holding on to the skirts of the Revolution, who hold office for the usual reason —what they can get out of it. It was historically inevitable that with a complete inversion of society some of the dregs should have remained near the top for a time. It was inevitable, too, that in the unsettled times of transfer from the old to the new, certain individuals should have taken advantage of the chaos to settle old sores of hate and revenge. It is either utopian or ignorantly partisan to ignore these facts.

There are certainly still such examples of dishonesty and graft to be found. But to conclude from these cases that all Russia is a welter of bribery and theft is to follow the reasoning of the blind man who felt on the tail of the elephant and assured his friends that the elephant was very like a rope.

No Corruption in Higher Places.

There is, however, one curious aspect of Communist Russian political corruption. While cases of petty thievery and graft are found in the minor positions, it is rare that such instances are produced, even by the most meticulous search of ill wishers, in the ranks of the higher officials where greater temptations with larger rewards for dishonesty present themselves.

I presented this phenomenon to a friend who returned from Russia only a few days ago and asked for an explanation. He replied at once that the reason was simple, the prospect of the nearest wall and a well-aimed rifle was a rather strong deterrent. Undoubtedly this does play a part. During the time I was in Russia—ten months—I heard of twenty railway officials being executed when found guilty of accepting bribes. A noticeable increase in railway efficiency followed all down the line.

But the explanation lies infinitely deeper than that. First of all, the men who occupy the major positions of power and importance are men who have been tried for years in the fire of revolutionary activity, who have so long forgone the acquisition of personal wealth for their cause that they are above temptations of this lower order. Lenin, whatever other criticism may have been heaped upon him, was never accused of having ambitions for personal enrichment. The others at the top will bear the same close scrutiny.

Importance of Communists.

It is, of course, one of the sad things of the revolution that there are not enough of that sort to go around for all the positions of trust and importance. An American who was with the Red Army during the Revolution told me in Moscow five years later that one of the great disappointments of his return was to find that such great numbers of the idealist youth of those early days were not to be found. They had naturally been the first to offer themselves in the battle against reaction nd had been killed in the hottest part of the fighting. War, contrary to Mr. Brisbane's brilliant column, does not destroy the most bloodthirsty and bestial of the race first.

A second condition bringing about this honesty in high places is the construction of the Soviet State, which keeps the officials in closest touch with their constituency. I saw an example of this in Moscow at a meeting of delegates of all the trade unions of the state or gubernia of Moscow.

The meeting was held in the great Hall of the Nobles, now the Dom Soyuzov or House of the Unions. (It was in this same hall that the body of Lenin lay in state just a few days ago.). By a special ticket from the president of the Moscow unions my friend and I were admitted to the platform which had been erected at the end of the great ball room with its magnificent chandeliers. The floor of the room was filled with representatives from the industries of the state, horny-handed workingmen and stalwart workingwomen straight from the bench and the machine.

It was the custom in all such meetings that I attended to have as part of the program a presentation of the World Situation, as they termed it. The man selected to present this world view was always one of the best informed men they could find. On this occasion it was none other than Kamenev, one of the triumvirate nearest Lenin. He was received with applause upon his appearance, but without ceremony, and went shortly to the speaker's desk. He smoked a cigarette thruout the talk which was more like a class room lecture than a speech. And, here is the significant thing: thruout the talk a perfect snowstorm of questions written on bits of paper was showered on the platform from all parts of the audience. He knew, and his audience knew, that he was speaking to the backbone and sinews of the Revolution. Here was the significant and determinative constituentcy of the government plying one of the chiefs with questions. It was the sort of thing that happens in America when a member of the cabinet addresses a notable chamber of commerce.

No Teapot Politics in Russia.

Then there is still another reason. It would simply be impossible for an official in Russia to sell a Teapot Dome and get away with such a convenient little loan as our late secretary of the interior is reliably reported to have done.

With private ownership of estates, stocks and bonds eliminated, it would be a matter of real practical difficulty for an official to take any large sum and remain in Russia to enjoy it. The salaries of all officials is well known, and it is also well known that none of these salaries will permit luxurious living. It can also be assumed that the official has no other means of support, owns no ranches, clips no coupons, and draws no retainers' fees. A rather certain suspicion would attach to one of these officials if he were observed to be living unusually well.

I have laid emphasis on the more or less mechanical deterrents. The real reason, in the end, is the second one I have pointed out. Lenin did not refrain from stealing for any of these reasons, but simply because he was not that kind of a man. There has been no sensational corruption at the top in Soviet politics because the leadership has been in the hands of men who are honestly devoted to a cause into which they have put their lives and are actuated by no ulterior motives. And the system to which they are devoted will make increasingly less probable such conditions in every part of the Soviet Republic.

The Infallible Decision

In California when a radical is apprehended, if he is suspected of having harbored a thought, he is arrested for thinking it, tried for criminal syndicalism, and convicted for contempt of court.

Shortly we may expect:

Prosecuting Attorney (to an astronomer, charged with carrying mystic inscriptions in the left hind pocket of a pair of union-made trousers) Is it not a fact that this is a code message in the unknown tongue; and that is was delivered to you by a flying dutchman, ten feet underground?

Astronomer: Those, Sir, are copies of ancient Babylonian inscriptions, recording an eclipse.

Prosecuting Attorney: Lair! where did you get them?

Astronomer: I took the paper out of the waste basket in the observatory, and, as I was going for a walk, I brought it along. Nature is not always considerate of the time and place in making her demands.

Judge: Any one uttering the word "Nature" in this hall of Justice is guilty of contempt of court. I sentence you—"

Prosecuting Attorney: Your Honor!

Judge: What is it?

Prosecuting Attorney: Your Honor is well aware that the crime of contempt of court carries a light penalty.

Your Honor, I just saw this criminal bestow a vile look of disdain upon the Holy Bible that sanctifies yon witness stand.

Judge: Proceed!

Prosecuting Atorney: Base criminal, do you believe that Jesus Christ was the son of God?

Astronomer: No.

Prosecuting Attorney: What do you believe?

Astronomer: (off his guard) I believe he was a lucky lad who, by some happy chance, was led to think instead of imitate.

Prosecuting Attorney: Your Honor, the crime of blasphemy does not carry a sufficiently heavy penalty for this infidel.

Judge: An insignificant detail, a technicality of no consequence—culprit, stand up while I make an example of you!

Judge: You are convicted of the unpardonable sin, and I sentence you to be hung in this world and to be burned for ever with hell-fire in the next.

THE LITTLE GREY DOG.
By HERMINIA ZUR MUHLEN.

(Synopsis: Benjamin was a little colored slave who had lost his father and mother. It was in the old days of negro slavery down south so Benjamin had to work hard all day in the fields under the hot sun and he was continually beaten by the overseer. One day Benjamin was surprised when his only friend, a little grey dog whom he had saved from drowning, spoke like a human being and told him to run away. They ran until they came to a river, where an alligator was just about to eat Benjamin up. The dog then saved the boy's life and got the alligator to take them to an island in the middle of the river, where they would be safe from the servants of the rich slave owner who were after them.)

"WE thank you, mighty animal; but how can we reach the island? The water is rough and deep, and my little friend can't swim."

"I will carry you over on my back," answered the alligator.

Benjamin and the dog seated themselves on the scaly back of the animal, and it began to swim. What a strange journey that was! The waves played over the back of the alligator and the dog was afraid that the alligator might change his mind and eat both of them for breakfast. For that reason he spoke continuously to the alligator, flattered him, praised his goodness and declared solemnly that the alligators are the noblest animals in the world. This trick did not fail in its purpose. When they landed on the island, the alligator called twelve of the strongest alligators to him, instructing them that they must not harm a hair on the boy or the dog, that they were his guests. He also commended them to swim along the bank of the river and stand guard, keeping the people from coming to the island. This was well done, for when the sun was high in the heavens, five men appeared, sent by the rich man to look for Benjamin. One pointed to the island, started to go into the water, when an immense alligator pushed his head out of the water and the man crept back. "He can't be there," said the man to his companion. "The alligators here must have eaten him."

Benjamin and the dog rested all day on the island. The little boy ate the sweet berries that grew there, drank from a well, and at evening the alligator carried them back again to the bank and bid them a friendly farewell.

Today traveling was more difficult than it had been yesterday, for Benjamin's feet were blistered, he groaned and complained at every step. The dog comforted him, encouraged him, let him ride on his back a little while tho the boy was too heavy and after a few minutes the dog's bones would crack and he would have to lie down. Deep sorrow tormented the dog, surely the servants of the rich man were somewhere in the neighborhood, determined not to return home without the boy. And even if they were not found, how far was it to the North? How will we get there if Benjamin is already too tired to go further?

Toward midnight they suddenly saw a fire burning on a meadow. People must be there. The dog dragged the boy into some thick bushes, told him to keep still, crept softly toward the fire. A pot hung over the fire, and a blond man sat before it. Close by stood a wagon with large wheels, to which a brown horse was harnessed. The dog looked at the man very searchingly. He looked different from the people at home, had a very light skin, kind blue eyes; surely he was a Northerner. But was he a good man? Then the dog remembered that only very good people understand the language of animals, and the dog decided to tell him the story of little Benjamin. Carefully he came closer to the fire and said softly, "Good evening, man. Are you a Northerner?"

The man looked at him in surprise, but, oh, joy, he had understood the words and answered, "Good evening, my friend. Yes, I am a Northener. Do you want to eat something? My supper will soon be ready."

"I am not hungry," replied the dog. "But I want some help." And then he told the story of little Benjamin.

The blond man became red with anger and his eyes gleamed. This made the dog happy. "He is really a good man," thought he, "for only good people are angered by the sufferings of other people." When he was thru speaking, the man said, "Bring your little friend here quickly. My horse has rested enough. We will ride off immediately so that no one can capture Benjamin."

How happy the little grey dog was! In spite of his weariness, he danced with joy, wagging his tail, and started toward the bushes where Benjamin was hidden. Then he saw something terrible. A man came over the meadow with a dog, which ran straight towards the bushes. The grey dog howled with fright. The blond man looked up, jumped forward and called to the dog, "Keep the man back just a moment, and all will be well." At that the dog ran toward the man. The man had reached the bush, with one bound the dog leaped at his throat, bit it hard, did not loosen his hold in spite of cuts and blows.

In the meantime the Northerner had taken little Benjamin in his arms, ran hastily toward the wagon, jumped in, and called to the dog, "Follow us, we will wait for you in a safe place." Then he cracked his whip, started on the road, the brown horse galloped ahead, for it knew everything that was going on.

The grey dog still gripped the man's throat, thinking every moment that if he could detain the man, it would be an advantage to the good man and the little boy, and would save his friend. But the man, tired of wrestling, took a large knife from his pocket and plunged it deep into the breast of the faithful dog. The dog whimpered piteously and fell heavily to the ground. His clouded eyes still saw, far off in the distance, a tiny spot that kept growing smaller and smaller; that was the wagon which was carrying little Benjamin to freedom.

Great joy filled the dog's heart. He wagged his bushy tail once more. Then he died.

The blond man and little Benjamen waited a long time in vain for the grey dog. Benjamin wept bitterly, and his new friend comforted him: "The brave dog will come running back. All is well with him."

But tho Benjamin was safe, he was always sad when he thought of his friend. But he did not know that the little grey dog had died for him, paying his debt of gratitude to Benjamin with his life.

Hungary Trains Boy Scouts.

Good boy scouts make good fascisti. Hungary has learned that lesson, and that's why in Hungary you will find a highly developed boy scout movement.

A traveler thru that country sends the news that he saw some of the best types of boy scouts in the land of Horthy. Not content with having washed their hands in the blood of the Hungarian Communists, the white guard, monarchist leaders in that ill-fated land are training their youngsters to be the murderers of any future attempts on the part of the workers.

Would you be surprised to learn that the Hungarian boy scouts are the image of their American brothers? Even their creed is formulated on the same "principles." Boy scouts the world over are merely army kindergartens. In the lands of the open reactionary anti-working class (fascist) rule, the boy scouts are kindergartens of murder and destruction.

There is no mathematical problem involved in the question: How far is it from a boy scout to a white guard? It's a matter of command.

"Obedience," the central theme of the boy scout creed, covers a multitude of sins.

What is most heart-rending, tho, is to see some good, honest trade unionists encourage these organizations. It's like taking a lion's cub for a pet, thinking you were bringing up an Angora cat.

Every worker who permits his kids to join the boy scouts can blame himself when this same kid jabs a bayonet into the ribs of some striking fellow worker, or burns down some trade union hall.

Why a uniform on the boy scouts? Why drill? Why unquestioning obedience and blind patriotism to a Daugherty Injunction government? Why such liberal contributions from the bosses to the boy scouts? Ask yourself these questions, worker.

BIG PROBLEMS FACE RUSSIAN COMMUNISTS

NOTE.—Today the DAILY WORKER continues the publication of the important speech by Chairman Kamenev, of the Moscow Soviet, on the big problems now confronting the Russian Communis Party, the ruling party in Soviet Russia. Every day the DAILY WORKER is publishing installments of this momentous discussion involving the fundamental interests of the emancipated workers and farmers of the Soviet Republic. This discussion should therefore be of the greatest interest to all the workers and farmers of this country. Kamenev spoke to the Moscow Communists as follows:

LET us now consider another aspect of the question—let us remember what we demand from those comrades among the workers, or even among the unemployed, who are expected as Communists to understand our final aim, Communism, and our latest bloody struggle with the White Guards, and at the same time to find a clear mental path thru those immediate external contradictions of the principles of Communism and Socialism which they—the unemployed or the city proletariat, are bound to come across at every step, when they go into the street, look at the shop windows, or observe the doings of the New Economic Policy.

We demand a very high degree of self-control, experience, and theoretical understanding from these comrades, if they are not to be carried away by anarcho-syndicalist currents. We must admit to ourselves that in proportion to the extent of the existence of the NEP, and in proportion to the increasing acuteness of the situation created in the relations between the separate workers, the unemployed, and those NEP bourgeoisie, these anarcho-syndicalist currents are almost inevitably bound to reach nearly to the ranks of our Party. And when the workers' group, this Myasnikov set, has been able to gain a hearing among certain elements of our Party whose outlook is extremely limited, this influence exercised by Myasnikov's counter-revolutionary speeches is explicable as a result of those contradictions which we are unable to eliminate, which remain, and which are the constant cause of a certain amount of doubt and vacillation in this wing of our Party, a certain tendency to give a hearing to those ideas current in the Myasnikov atmosphere.

What is the essential character of the Myasnikov tendency? The opposition of the working class to our state.

What is Menshevism? The opposition of the working class to our state.

It requires a high standard of political schooling to understand that our state, despite its many faults, and despite the insufficient wage payments to the workers, is still a workers' state. And this standard cannot be expected of every workman.

The Two Dangers.

The two dangers threatening us from various quarters are: First, degeneration under the influence of the NEP; and secondly, the anarcho-syndicalist tendency. How are we effectually to combat these dangers, how are we to ensure that the increased demands put upon our Party are to be adequately met, how are we to make sure that a strike does not merely pass over without affecting us, but is made unnecessary by us beforehand; how are we to help the economists on the one hand and the provoked proletariat on the other, how are we to find an antidote against these decomposing influences within the Party, how are we to find a reply to the questions engaging the proletariat, questions which will become increasingly acute as the contradictory system of the NEP develops further?

The answer to this is to be found in the workers' democracy, in the raising of the general tone of the ideological life of our Party, in the conversion of every nucleus into a laboratory of Party thought, in which every member of our Party, and every non-partisan worker placing his confidence in our nucleus, can have the problems which disturb him answered in free discussion.

The answer is to be found in not having the resolutions adopted by the nucleus dictated from above, but in their being the result of independent thought expended on these fundamental questions.

This higher standard of political life, in the nuclei and in the higher organizations alike; the discussion of all questions coming before the Party in these organizations, so long as no insuperable obstacles stand in the way of such discussion; this is the guarantee, at the present juncture, against the schismatic elements entering our Party from various sides, just as other measures, measures of severest discipline, superlatively military in description, afforded guarantees to our Party against other dividing influences in other times of bitter struggle.

Another condition essential to the workers' democracy, dictated by the general situation, and a necessary guarantee for free discussion, is that the posts in our Party are filled by election.

Democratic Centralism.

You are well aware, comrades, that this question of the discussion of all questions, and of the participation of all members in the discussion, the question of the choosing by election of the whole Party apparatus from the top to the bottom, is in no way new to us either as a problem or as a task. The idea of this system has not occurred to the Party now for the first time.

We have long been aware that democratic centralism does not consist in the Party being elected from below, but in the undeviating execution of the instructions of the Party on the part of the persons and institutions holding positions in the Party.

This was a fact established for us some decades ago; but we have had to apply this democratic centralism in different ways under different conditions, and if we had delayed, at the present juncture, in our transition to a broader application of this principle, we should have committed a grave error.

But can anyone maintain that on this occasion the Central did not observe the necessity in good time? How did this workers' democracy come about? As early as the Plenary Session of the Central in September (convened in connection with the prevailing excitement and with the formation of the workers' group above mentioned) Comrade Dserszinsky submitted to this session a report pointing out that a dying out of our Party, the dying out of the inner life of the Party, the greater prevalence of nomination rather than election, might easily become a political danger, and might paralize our Party in regard to the political leadership of the working class.

An analysis of this movement, present both within and without the Party in July and August, caused Comrade Dserszinsky to set up a broad commission to inquire into the internal situation in the Party. The task set this commission was to deal with the question as a whole.

The Plenary Session following, in October, passed a resolution citing the resolution of the Central, and stating that: "The Plenary Sessions of the Central, and of the C. C. C. (Central Control Commission) fully approve of the course adopted at the right moment by the Political Bureau, with reference to internal Party democracy; they also approve of the stronger measures dictated by the Political Bureau to combat the 'wasteful expenditure,' and against the dividing influence of the NEP upon the various elements of the Party."

Application of October Resolution.

This resolution is the sole one passed by the October Plenary Session with reference to Democracy. The October Plenary Session dealt with various other questions as well, but these had no reference to Democracy. It dealt with some very delicate problems, but not with those pertaining to Democracy.

With regard to Democracy, the Plenary Session of the Central and of the C. C. C. debated on the following lines. The resolution passed on this subject was as follows: "The Plenary Session instructs the Political Bureau to take every action required to accelerate the work of the commissions appointed by the Political Bureau at the September sessions: 1. The commission for examining into the disparity between the agricultural and industrial prices; 2. over the workers' wages, and 3. over the situation within the Party.

The Political Bureau, after working out the measures necessary to be taken in these matters, is to begin with the immediate execution of these measures, and to report on its activity at the next plenary session of the Central." Thus the October plenary session commissioned the Political Bureau to work out the resolution.

And we have worked it out, indeed, we have done more: we have succeeded in having this resolution (which contains every present element of workers' democracy within the Party, and which points out the actual character of this workers' democracy and how it is to be practically applied) unanimously adopted by the Political Bureau and the Presidium of the C. C. C.

By this action the Party has thus afforded the guarantee that the change of policy which we are accomplishing is really being carried out with mutual agreement, and can and must be executed with the slightest possible injury to the Party.

Difficulty of Task.

The carrying out of such a change of policy, comrades, is invariably difficult. We have gone with you thru a large number of such alterations in tactics—sometimes the evolution has been difficult, and has cost the Party much, and sometimes it has been comparatively easy.

We know then when we changed our course in the trade union question, we were obliged to do it in the midst of a reciprocal struggle, in the midst of a severe combat which drew the whole Party into discussions outside the actual issue.

And when we undertook the fundamental change of tactics implied by the NEP, we undertook this without internal discussion, without internal struggle, without the formation of factions. Here, with regard to the NEP, we performed the evolution unanimously, and it was, therefore, performed smoothly and with the least possible detriment.

And what is the question before us now? We are, and always have been, in favor of the workers' democracy. I have not heard a single criticism of the formulation of the resolution passed by the Central. Nobody will assert that the workers' democracy is distorted in this resolution, or that this or that point should be added.

We do not see any practical proposals for the carrying out of the real workers' democracy. But the danger exists that we shall find this evolution difficult of performance, and that some unsound conditions may be caused by it.

Unity of Party at Stake.

In the Central we have done everything possible for facilitating the performance of the evolution: we have attained the unanimous acceptance of the resolution in the Central. But what danger is incurred by the actual performance? The danger exists that when we turn into this new path, our Party vehicle may take the course so abruptly that its wheels may leave the earth altogether . . . You know the high appreciation of which our Central is worthy. You know that the unity of the Party is at stake.

We are confronted by the danger which threatens us at this curve, the danger that when we do not possess firmly established groupings, we shall no longer know what we are to understand regarding the freedom of discussion which we proclaim.

At every district meeting the same question arises: "How does the matter stand, does this workers' democracy include or exclude free discussion and the freedom to form groups?" The workers' democracy, like every other democracy, includes the freedom of ideological groups. If we think of democracy in its complete and unlimited form, the rights of groups cannot be excluded.

But we maintain definitely that the workers' democracy, as formulated by the present resolution of the Central, permits no freedom to groupings, let alone freedom for factions. Here, too, we must come to an agreement with one another. There are comrades who believe that these limitations are impossible; Comrade Preobrashensky (I am glad to see that he is present) maintains that: We cannot comprehend the workers democracy without this freedom for groups. Why are we against groups? For the reason that we are obliged to leave the Party fundamentally where it is. We are against groupings because we do not merely represent a Communist Party, and because we find ourselves with you, in a special situation, as a Communist Party.

The Danger of Groups.

And if even the Communist Parties of France and Germany possess group freedom, this is merely a circumstance which originates in the inheritance of the organizatory methods of Social Democracy. Our Party is not in this position; our Party differs from all other Communist Parties in that it governs the country, whilst the others are still struggling for power. We need be a prey to no illusions here. Here we have 400,000 Communists belonging to different spheres, different generations, and coming from different parties—and these 400,000 Communists are governing the country. Is it possible to allow these 400,000 Communists the liberty to form groups? We say—no. Such freedom to form groups leads to a splitting up of state power, and it is only irresponsible persons, only such who have no comprehension for the reciprocal relations between our Party and the state power, who can play with this idea and talk so much about it.

The 10th Congress of our Party dealt with this question at an exceedingly critical moment, and those comrades who maintain that the resolution passed by the Central is inadequate, or must be differently interpreted, must be asked the question: What do you propose to do with the resolution of the 10th Congress? The resolution was Comrade Lenin's, written with his own hand, and passed without any amendment. Comrade Lenin understood very well the circumstances which induce the formation of groupings and factions.

There is a certain transition stage. When we stated at a meeting that this is the resolution passed by the 10th Congress two years ago, someone replied that the resolution was out of date, and should be altered, since it was written two years ago. But this resolution is so formulated that it cannot become obsolete.

At the present time we are carrying on an existence three-quarters of which is passed in a vise between the ruling regime and the elements hostile to the Soviet government, an existence surrounded on all sides by the snares set by the NEP. So long as this objective situation remains, so long does every word of the resolution passed by the 10th Congress retain its full force.

Evening Song
By SHERWOOD ANDERSON

Back of Chicago the open fields—were you ever there?
Trains coming toward you out of the West—
Streaks of light on the long grey plains? Many a song—
Aching to sing.

I've got a grey and ragged brother in my breast—
That's a fact.

Back of Chicago the open fields—were you ever there?
Trains going from you into the West—
Clouds of dust on the long grey plains.
Long trains go West, too—in the silence.
Always the song—
Waiting to sing.

THIS TIME IT'S REALLY TRUE

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER

MY neighbors are a cool-headed, well-balanced pair; she is German—a veritable Brunhilde in stature and demeanor—and he is a dignified, bearded Russian professor at the Academy, who endured and worked and suffered in Turkestan Trans-Caucasia during all the dangerous years of the civil war.

When I brought to them the news of Lenin's death, they both went pale. Brunhilde gasped and reached for support, and said in a quavering voice: "I don't believe it. They have said it too often. Only last week the health bulletin was so cheerful." But her behavior showed that she believed only too well.

And the dignified professor—he who has always seemed so distant and reserved—quivered thruout his whole frame as he repeated over and over again in a bewildered manner: "But I just dreamt about him last night. It can't be true, it can't be true." He was a pathetic figure. "I dreamt that someone tried to assassinate him and I threw myself between him and the assassin."

And when I left the room I could hear the professor mumbling away to himself, "And I dreamt about him last night, just last——"

The official news came at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, but everyone on the streets knew long before that. The co-operative on Iversakaya, which had been closed for the day in commemoration of Bloody Sunday of 1905, opened its doors in the middle of the afternoon for the sale of black crepe and ribbon only. Each of the show windows contained Lenin's picture draped in red and black.

The buildings of Moscow had been decorated with red and black flags in memory of the unsuccessful revolution of 1905, and as we wandered aimlessly thru the streets, from square to square, seeking for kindred spirits with whom to share our grief, the red flags without the black borders were hauled in, to be hung out again a moment later at half-mast with black crepe tied to their staffs.

Before the Dom Soyuzov, the Trade Union Hall, the soldiers were clearing away the heaps of snow on the roadway. Here Lenin was brought the next day; here he will lie until the funeral in the Red Square on Sunday; and here thousand upon thousands of people are coming to look at him for the last time. The peasants and villagers from the neighboring provinces are pouring into the city. They are sleeping anywhere and everywhere, but they must see their beloved leader.

The workers instinctively flocked to their factories to get the least details as soon as they heard of the news. The theatres were crowded with grieving people, seeking confirmation and listening eagerly to the speeches made to them by Soviet officials and by the delegates from foreign countries to the Comintern. Hundreds of these spontaneous meetings were being held less than two hours after the official news was announced.

The concert that had been planned for the evening by the Comintern workers in commemoration of Bloody Sunday, gave way to a demonstration of mourning. It does not matter what the speakers said—what is there to say on an occasion like this? When the first speaker finished and said: "Let us honor our beloved leader's memory," the people rose in a body and deep silence prevailed. Then the chairman, in a quavering and unsteady voice, started singing the revolutionary funeral march; a few women's voices joined in for a short time; but the singing petered out; no one moved and no one spoke some minutes; no one knew what he was doing or where he was. Everyone was dazed and carried away—then gradually the people resumed their seats.

But a working woman rose from the audience and spoke in a strong, steady voice. "Comrades," she said, "I work in a factory far from Moscow and I came here on factory work. When I heard of Comrade Lenin's death, I came to the Comintern, where I was sure of meeting people who would understand what I was feeling. I have just suffered a bereavement in my own family and I say to you now: Do not sit down and weep! Our leader was a man of action, and the way to honor his memory is not to collapse and give way to grief, but to carry on his work, to follow the road he has pointed out for us, to spread his gospel thruout the world, and to realize his aspirations."

And that is the spirit of all the people. They are stunned by the news, but they are not afraid of the future. For over a year his grip on the wheel had gradually slackened, and now that he will never again lead the people, they mourn the loss of a beloved friend but they have no misgivings of the future.

As soon as the news spread that Lenin's body would arrive from Gorki at one o'clock the following day, people thronged to the station. They were prepared to wait thruout the night in the bitter cold for the sake of a glimpse of the bier. But when it was announced that no one but the elected delegations from factories and institutions would be allowed to come near the station, the waiting people dispersed.

On the morning of Jan. 23, the day after the news spread, and two days after the calamity, all the approaches to the Dom Soyuzov were cleared of traffic and pedestrians.

The streets were crowded with people, and after the procession had passed, they poured into the square in front of the Dom Soyuzov.

And night and day, ever since the hall where the body lies has been open to the public, thousands of people have been thronging to look for the last time on Lenin. Solid walls of cavalry police are needed to keep the throngs from stampeding out of the lines toward the hall. The crowd gets beyond the control of the men now and then, and the crushing and seething of the mob is terrific. But gradually the lines proceed in orderly fashion toward the hall.

Once inside the hall, the silence and gravity, compared with the fighting scramble on the outside, have an immediately subduing effect. Two columns of people march quickly past the bier, get a fleeting look at the body which is lying in the middle of a brilliantly lighted hall, and march out at another entrance.

At night the situation is no better than in the daytime. Thousands of people stand in line two and three hours during the night in this bitter cold weather waiting their turn. The employes of institutions, the workers in factories, the children from the school march in groups behind their red banners draped in black. Night and day, night and day, the endless stream flows uninterruptedly on.

In a proletarian family, two children were whispering to each other in bed the evening the news was announced. "Things will be very bad in Russia now," the little six-year-old boy said. "Things will never be bad in Russia again," said his ten-year-old brother with great confidence. And that seems to be the feeling of the Russian people now. The first reaction is one of despair and bewilderment, but a little maturer thought makes them realize that Lenin's work has already progressed so far, that his disappearance from their midst is no permanent blow to the work before the Russian people—his death is the death of a well-beloved friend, and as such he is deeply mourned.

And everyone is agreed that the only way to behave in the present situation is to carry on the work of this man of action—to spread the gospel of this man of genius.

A NEW UNITED FRONT - - - - -

By CARL REEVE

A STUDY of the initial issues of two new publications which first saw the light of day this month, the "American Mercury," edited by H. L. Mencken and G. J. Nathan, and the "New Leader," edited by the renegade socialist, James Oneal, reveals a striking similarity in editorial policy and in the class of readers appealed to. Oneal in contributing to the Mercury a series of insinuations entitled "The Communist Hoax," relinquishes all claim to being a scientific socialist or Marxist. He has sunk at last to the level of the frothy, indiscriminate cynical Mencken.

Birds of a feather flock together "The editors," says the American Mercury, "view the capitalist system if not exactly amorously then at all events politely. The reader they have in their eye, whose woes they hope to soothe, is the normal, educated, well disposed, unfrenzied, enlightened citizen of the middle minority. There is no middle ground of consolation for men who believe neither in the socialist fol-de-rol nor the principal enemies of the socialist fol-de-rol; yet such men constitute the most intelligent and valuable body of citizens that the nation can boast. Good work is always done in the middle ground between the theories."

"The New Leader," says the first editorial of this official socialist weekly, "Is not 'liberal,' or 'radical,' or 'progressive.' The New Leader is socialist in its point of view. We shall not make the mistake of glorifying the working class." After thus giving a new definition of socialism, the New Leader in this same issue—Jan. 19—tries to prove how similar it is to the American Mercury by reviewing that magazine in these words, "The American Mercury cannot be classified as 'liberal,' as 'radical,' as 'progressive,' or as 'revolutionary.' Its one editorial promises war on hokum, political, economic and social."

We suggest that the American Mercury change its cover to read "Edited by H. L. Mencken, George J. Nathan, and James Oneal." Perhaps even if they lost sight of their aim—"To ascertain and tell the truth"—this board of editors would better please the "middle minority." This should be a good combination. Both publications are gentlemanly and polite in hurling from their frigidly critical attitude their thunder at the Communists. The New Leader "Resents this method (cheap, political) of attacking a group which, after all, is insignificant." But the Leader "Has seen many who left us adopt programs in anticipation of imminent social upheaval in the United States. We observe them now as the most incorrigible of petty opportunists. We shall urge the recognition of Russia, at the same time we shall avoid those droll humorists, the Communists, and their bizarre programs."

And now listen to what the "one editorial" in the American Mercury, praised so highly by the New Leader, says about Marx and the Communists: "In the field of politics Utopianism is not only useless, it is also dangerous. The ideal realm imagined by an A. Mitchell Palmer or a King Kleagle of the Ku Klux Klan is as idiotically Utopian as the ideal of Alcott, a Marx or a Bryan. The American Mercury will devote itself to exposing the nonsensicality of all such hallucinations."

Here we have the spectacle of an official socialist paper praising an editorial policy characterizing Marx as "idotically Utopian." The socialist organ commends a magazine which "has no set program, either destructive or constructive," which "believes that the world is down with a score of painful diseases, all of them chronic and incurable." Further, we have the renegade socialist editor, James Oneal, giving up his last claim to being a scientific economist, by supporting such a magazine with a contribution, characterizing, among other mis-statements, the Communist movement of America as an "emotional reaction."

The Communists certainly are willing to admit that their tone and tactics are different from the "middle ground" criticism of Oneal and Mencken. It is easier to criticize than create. The DAILY WORKER, also born in January, goes the American Mercury and the Leader one better. Realizing that the workers are the historically rising class, the DAILY WORKER is seeing to it that that class gains the supremacy as quickly and efficiently as possible. While the Mercury and Leader are politely theorizing about the workers in mincing terms that the workers will never read, the DAILY WORKER is putting into effect the program of "all power to the workers."

The DAILY WORKER will continue to be a potent factor on the side of the American workers in the class struggle. The New Leader and the American Mercury will continue to produce artistic criticism of the workers as they fight their life and death struggle. As observers, Oneal and Mencken, knitting their knowing brows into a frown of disapproval, will entertain the "middle minority" ly critically analyzing—always in a polite and aesthetic manner—the labor pains attendant upon the birth of the workers' state.

The Day of Days

By WILLIAM MORRIS

What's this? For joy our hearts stand still,
Each eve earth falleth down the dark,
As tho its hope were o'er;
Yet lurks the sun when day is done
Behind to-morrow's door.

Grey grows the dawn while men-folk sleep,
Unseen spreads on the light,
Till the thrush sings to the colored things,
And earth forgets the night.

No otherwise wends on our Hope:
E'en as a tale that's told
Are fair lives lost, and all the cost
Of wise and true and bold.

We've toiled and failed; we spake the word;
None hearkened; dumb we lie;
Our Hope is dead, the seed we spread
Fell o'er the earth to die.

What's this? For joy our hearts stand still,
And life is loved and dear,
The lost and found the Cause hath crowned,
The Day of Days is here.

THE LEADERSHIP OF THE BRITISH LABOR PARTY

By WM. F. DUNNE

SINCE the rise of the British Labor Party to power the American liberal and labor press, as well as the organs of capitalism, have devoted columns of space to it. There has been a decrease in the articles on Russia for here is something that American writers think they understand—it has a homelike flavor and there is no great hostility to the British Labor Party as yet.

It is, say most of the publicists, the apotheosis of democracy and the crowning proof that in Anglo-Saxon nations no other weapon than the ballot need be used by the workers.

In the liberal press, particularly, does the comment reach an ecstatic note; the dictionary is plundered to embellish the adjectival eulogies of the aims and methods of the British Labor Party.

A Neglected Fact.

None of the commentators seem to have taken into consideration one fact that is obvious to the most casual observer of the British labor movement—that the Labor Party is not a homogenous entity but a huge amorphous body in which all shades of opinion from the Manchester school of liberalism to the advocates of social revolution thru the dictatorship of the workingclass are represented.

No criticism or comment which does not stress this fact is worth the paper it is written on. The British Labor Party is the exact opposite of the Communist Party of Russia in every respect except that both number workers and farmers among their supporters.

The Communist Party can be criticised as a party but the British Labor Party cannot and this, I think, accounts for the enthusiasm of the liberal brethren; each can find some proof that his pet hobby is embodied in its program.

Communist Criticism.

It can be ascertained quite easily that the criticism of the British Labor Party by Communists is in striking contrast to that of all other writers on the subject; that, as a matter of fact, Communist criticism is not criticism of the British Labor Party as such but of its leaders and their policies.

More even than the now almost defunct social-democratic party of Germany is the British Labor Party a party of leaders, but with this difference—the Labor Party leaders have no such control over their followers as had the officials of the German organization. This is a blessing for the British workingclass.

The leadership of the British Labor Party is now in the hands of parliamentarians, that is to say that those who speak for the party are committed to a belief in the eternal efficacy of present parliamentary forms as the only means necessary to abolish capitalism and establish a social system free from exploitation.

There is not the slightest evidence to support the contention made by their admirers that MacDonald, Snowden, Webb, Brailsford and other intellectual leaders of the British Labor Party have any different conception of the role of the workingclass other than that of the "full-belly" philosophy of the members of the Liberal party.

The Tone of Respectability.

True, their appeals are directed to the workers; they glorify the workingclass in public speeches but their official and private acts show them to be dominated by the middle-class craving for respectability that has been the curse of the British labor movement and that cannot be escaped by any party which sets as its goal a parliamentary majority.

The rise of the Labor Party does not mean, as so many liberal observers contend, that the British workingclass has been converted suddenly to perfect confidence in parliamentary action or that the left wing of the labor movement has seen the error of its ways and abandoned the strike and boycott in favor of conciliation and arbitration. It does not even mean that there is any great mass loyalty to the Labor Party.

There is no question but that the Independent Labor Party—the group which includes the leaders already mentioned—is using a good deal of its energy in trying to convince the masses that but for the lack of an actual majority in the house of commons all workingclass problems, such as unemployment, would be near solution. It is also quite plain that the parliamentarians consider a labor party government such a victory for the workers that everything should be subordinated to strengthening its hold on the parliamentary machinery.

Objection to This Policy.

There could be little objection to this if there was any reason to believe that with such a majority the leadership of the labor party would be spurred to a real assault on British capitalism.

The strength of any workingclass lies in its economic organizations and no political party which, previous to the overthrow of the capitalist state, minimizes the necessary activity of the trade unions is a workingclass or revolutionary party in the real sense of the term.

It may mouth, thru its leaders, the phrases of the social revolution, but when it discourages because it fears for its parliamentary prestige—another phrase for the favorable or neutral attitude of certain capitalist strata—the use of the strike weapon against sections of the capitalist class, it confesses that it differs from its capitalist competitors for parliamentar honors in minor details alone.

Discouraging Strikes.

The leadership of the British Labor Party, in addition to lauding parliamentary action to the exclusion of all other means, expressing its firm conviction in the basic goodness of modern democratic institutions including government, before and during election, has, since it assumed office, discouraged to an extent not yet fully known in America, the new spirit of militancy that has shown itself in two great strikes—the railwaymen and the dockers.

It is from the official organ of the Independent Labor Party to which the intellectual leaders of the British Labor Party belong that we gain an accurate estimate of their knowledge of and loyalty to the principles and tactics of the class struggle.

Writing in the "New Leader," just before the railway strike, Brailsford accuses the union of betraying the Labor Party because it proposed to strike to resist a reduction in wages. It is hard to discern any difference between this official expression of the British Labor Party leaders and that of any employers' publication in the United States:

The Leaders' Position.

"It would have been difficult," says Brailsford, "to invent a diversion so nicely calculated to upset public confidence (in the Labor Party.—Ed. note) and to foster a mood of panic * * *. What is at stake is the whole future of this machinery of conciliation * * * No one can question the abstract right of the Associated Society to reject a decision with which they are dissatisfied. But it is clear that if they do so the moral authority of these decisions is destroyed. The real sanction for the working of conciliation is public opinion. * * * Sooner or later the discipline of service must replace the discipline of the class struggle. * * * This strike, if it takes place, will deal the Labor Party in public opinion a blow which no Rothermore or Beaverbrook could have inflicted * * * If we are fit to govern, we must learn in the industrial as well as the political field to master our jealousies, to suppress our egoists and to organize ourselves in the workshop as in the party for the triumph of the common cause."

In other words, while British capitalism remains in full possession of the factories and the food, the parliamentary leaders of the British Labor Party strive to inaugurate an era of industrial peace in which a striking worker is to be branded as a traitor to the "public welfare." Ye gods!

The federation of British industries and the unemployed and starving British workingclass are lumped together as mutual beneficiaries of the "cause."

Reason For Tolerance.

Is it any wonder that there is no panic in the ranks of the British capitalists? No enmity, but only kindly tolerance for leaders whose industrial policy consists of the establishment of conciliation boards to which the workers will humbly appeal when conditions become too onerous and who denounce the workers' impatience with such tactics as "egoism" and disregard of the "discipline of service."

The duty of a revolutionary party in capitalist parliaments is to arouse the workers against the capitalist system; to stimulate all of their activities, to mobilize them for the final struggle, to destroy the last vestige of respect for and fear of capitalism in the minds of the workers, to furnish a program that by its clearness and uncompromising character stands out as the next step which the workers must take on the road to victory. The Labor Party leaders deny the need for any struggle except that for "public respect."

Self-Deception.

The British Labor Party is deceiving itself as well as the workingclass. It apparently does not understand that the stagnation of British industry, unemployment, loss of economic power by the unions and consequent defeats have had the usual result in countries where the workers possess the franchise—they swing to parliamentarianism as the only available method of securing any immediate relief. They hope the government will be able to do what they could not do with their unions alone while the factories were closed—put an end to the increasing tyrannies of the employers.

They expect the Labor Party government to take the side of the workers in the strikes that are inevitable and if the leaders were not of the type that values the smug approval of the middle class more than the esteem of the workers, they would, as a political tactic sure of success, use the government as lever with which to pry maximum concessions in the form of wages and working conditions from the employers. A government with a policy of this kind need not long remain a minority bloc in parliament in a country where the majority of the population are members of the workingclass.

Unable To Lead.

But the leadership of the British Labor Party is constitutionally unable to have confidence in the driving power of the masses or to mobilize that power.

The left wing of the party may get control of the organization but never of the leaders. Their route is already charted. They will adhere to their policy of class collaboration and parliamentary futility and in the end will denounce the workers as ignorant ingrates; dull hopelessness will be their outstanding characteristic and the more bitter ones will finally become the advisers of the most reactionary section of the British capitalist class.

There are those persons who will say that this is bitter criticism and untimely; that the leaders of the British Labor Party have not had time to prove themselves and predictions as to their end are unwarranted.

Not Individuals But Types.

To those I say that I am not criticising MacDonald, Snowden and the rest as individuals but as a type—a type in which there are few if any variations. They are historical products thrown up by the clash of forces in the class struggle and whether they come to the surface in Russia, Italy, Bulgaria, Germany or England matters but very little.

They strive to cure the evils of a struggle that can be ended only by accentuating the struggle, thru a reconciliation of warring classes and in this they serve the beneficiaries of the system. Capitalism claims them for its own and the manner of their end can be predicted with almost mathematical accuracy.

Not in its present leaders but in the left wing elements of the labor movement who reject the policy of conciliation and class collaboration lies the real leadership of the British workingclass.

When they take their place as the acknowledged vanguard of the British movement they will find the present leaders in the camp of the enemy.

The Road To Ruin.

Belief in the identity of interest of all classes in the British Isles, grouped around the standard of the British empire, conviction that the state is or can be made an impartial agency, complete confidence in parliamentary machinery as an instrument that can wipe out the cause of class antagonisms, lead straight to the betrayal of the revolutionary movements. If it does not, the history made in the last seven years is devoid of meaning for the workingclass.

"Norm-oil-cy"

By SCOTT NEARING
(Federated Press Staff Writer)

The oil expose is not a scandal in any accurate sense. It is a lesson in realism. Senators Lenroot and Walsh have merely exposed to public view the ordinarily accepted transactions between business men and public officials, in the course of which business men exploit American resources and plunder the American people.

Mr. Daugherty does not regard the matter as scandalous. Mr. Coolidge has not, in any one of his public utterances, displayed the least indignation or ever surprise. Men high up in American public life are evidently quite accustomed to this kind of thing, and are annoyed—not scandalized—when it comes to light.

Read Imperial Washington (R. F. Pettigrew); turn the pages of Ida Tarbell's History of the Standard Oil Co.; run over the works which Ray Stannard Baker, Lincoln Steffens and Charles Edward Russell turned out in the muckraking days that preceded the war, and you will find this story repeated again and again, in chapter after chapter of American business history.

Nor is it incongruous that these very men were the arch patriots of the war days. The war, like Teapot Dome, was a business proposition. The same men who profiteered before and during the war have been profiteering since the war, and will continue to profiteer so long as the profiteering system remains.

It may be difficult to explain to those patriots who fought and bled in the war why a few men should get away with millions, and this will prove particularly embarrassing during the coming months in audiences of bankrupt farmers and workers on part time. But with the press flourishing, the movies in full swing and the radio broadcasting, it will be possible to persuade the American masses to forget even tho they cannot forgive.

Communist Party Gains in Leading Saxon Cities Shown in Tabulation

The following table illustrates the gains made by the Communist Party and the losses of the Social Democratic Party in the recent communal elections in Saxony, as compared with the elections in 1922.

It also shows the victory of the capitalist parties which, however, was not a very great advance over the last elections, and was only made possible by the apathy of a great part of the masses who did not vote at all, due to the bitter disillusionment caused by the treachery of the Social Democratic Party.

The table gives the number of places captured by the Communist Party, the Social Democratic Party, and the combined Capitalist Parties, in the principal cities and towns of Saxony.

Crowe Turns State's Attorney's Office Over to Garment Bosses in War on Striking Workers

State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe has his special police force busy working for his friends among the waist and dress manufacturers. Crowe is running for re-election on his record as a union-baiter and he is doing all he can to keep his old friends on the right side of the political fence.

Arthur Weiss & Co., who have their dress factory at 315 W. Adams St., are well guarded every day by from five to ten detectives attached to Crowe's office.

At every election Weiss has had put into the pay envelopes of his workers cards telling them which way the boss expected them to vote. They were always told to vote for the candidates of Crowe's faction.

Don't Bother About Little Fellows.

Union pickets at the Weiss shop have been told by the detectives of Crowe that, "you can do what you want to the little fellows, but lay off Weiss. If you don't, you will get your God damn heads broken."

Abe Weiss, a member of the union and of the general strike committee, was arrested Saturday by Crowe's detectives and taken to the state's attorney's office where he was questioned. Weiss refused to answer any questions and after a while he was released.

The detectives who arrested him did not have any excuse to offer. He was told that he was wanted at the state's attorney's office and was hustled off without being permitted to see or talk to anyone. Later the detectives told reporters that Weiss had ordered them to leave the vicinity of the dress shop. That this was a lie was proven when the detectives failed to make any charge against Weiss.

Statements of the employers' association that the strike had failed to effect even union shops was characterized as "bunk" by union officials in charge of the strike.

Non-Union Shops Crippled.

"The shops controlled by the union, are not turning a wheel. The bosses are the only people who are in them," said Mayer Perlstein, vice-president of the international union, in charge of the strike. "Non-union shops are crippled. The Mitchell Bros. shop which was absolutely closed against the union has 75 per cent of its workers on strike. They are the largest employers in the Chicago dress industry and they are the leaders of the anti-union manufacturers.

"When the employers association says that the strikers are returning to the shops they know they are only saying what they wish were true."

Seven girls were arrested for picketing along S. Market St. and taken to S. Clark St. police court Saturday. They all demanded jury trials and were released on $400 bail each. The girls were, Eleanor Saglowski, Vera Dowbrow, Bertie Knolin, Sophie Martin, Yetta Kessler, and Minnie Suparinan.

Twenty other girls who had been arrested Friday night for picketing were also arraigned in S. Clark St. court and demand jury trials. They were all released on bonds.

Piece Work Is Big Grievance.

Low wages, piece and seasonal work are the chief grievances of the strikers according to one of the girls who is on strike and who came to the DAILY WORKER to tell her story.

The bosses in the dress industry are trying to unload onto the backs of the workers the results of the general depression which has hit the country since the war. All of them have lowered wages. The enormous profits which the bosses made during the war they are trying to continue by cutting the wages of the workers.

Girls who do finishing on dresses receive as little as $14 and $15 a week. Operators work from five to six months a year. During the last two or three years their wages have averaged $18 or $19 a week. During

CHICAGO LABOR PROTESTS CROWE STRIKE BREAKING

Pledges Aid to Strike of Garment Workers.

Indignation flamed out at the meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor against States Attorney Crowe's efforts to break the strike of the ladies' garment workers.

By unanimous vote the labor delegates began proceedings for an inquiry into the misuse of the people's money and officers at the hands of the state's attorney. John Fitzpatrick, president of the Federation, was instructed to appoint a committee to probe the strike breaking activities of Crowe and his assistants.

Strikers' Officer Threatened.

The attack on Crowe was opened when Meyer Perlstein, vice president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers took the floor and announced that he had been threatened in Crowe's office by two of the state's attorney's assistants.

The strikers' executive said that two days before the walkout he went to Crowe's office in answer to a subpoena. To his amazement he found himself confronted with two assistant state's attorneys who began to threaten him. They told him that their office was prepared to take drastic action against him and against the strikers if they "started anything." Their attitude was distinctly hostile.

Fitzpatrick Warns Crowe.

This news that Crowe was again using his office for strikebreaking purposes as during the upholsterers' strike when his men dragged unionists in there to be grilled by Dudley Taylor of the Illinois Employers' Association aroused angry comments from the delegates.

John Fitzpatrick followed with the information that he had dispatched a letter of protest to Crowe reciting the illegal and outrageous actions of that official and declaring that the federation would not permit such conduct to continue. Fitzpatrick said his letter pointed out that Crowe had arrested a total of 15 strikers Friday and Saturday, nine Friday and six early Saturday.

The strikers, some of them girls, had been roughly handled by Crowe's men and their constitutional rights were, furthermore, violated by the police action in holding them for hours—at Crowe's orders—before they were booked. The strikers arrested Friday were not booked until after six o'clock, causing unnecessary delay in getting bail. They were kept meantime in a noisome detention room at the police station in company with prostitutes.

Delegates Flay Crowe.

Anton Johannsen spoke, demanding that the federation conduct a thoro investigation of the employers' organization masquerading as a 'states' attorney office, and other delegates spoke to the same effect against the Crowe regime.

The federation also adopted a resolution pledging full co-operation to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union in their fight for better conditions in the needle trades.

Building Trades Unions Hold Unity Conference in N. Y.

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 2.—Means to bring about unity in the building 'trades' unions in Chicago, New York and Cleveland were discussed at a meeting of the executive officers of all the international unions in the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor, in session here. A committee of 14 will meet on March 17, in Chicago, in an attempt to bridge the gap between [illegible] councils there. Similar efforts will be made to establish harmony in other cities where "dual" councils exist.

LOS ANGELES POLICE RAID T. U. E. L. MEET

Thirty-four, Including Mother Bloor, Arrested

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 2.—Ella Reeves Bloor and about thirty-three others, men and women, were arrested here this evening, when the police raided a meeting of the Trade Union Educational League held in the Peoples Educational League headquarters at 224 South Spring Street.

The police had no warrants and no charges were placed against those arrested. All were released without bail subject to call when wanted.

Literature, the property of the T. U. E. L. and the Workers Party, was confiscated. The orders to the police were "arrest everybody in room 200 Phillips Building." The newspaper photographers were tipped off and they were on hand and took pictures of the women as well as the men, and histories of their activities in the labor movement.

A hall on the fourth floor of the same building alleged to be an I. W. W. meeting place was also raided and everything found there carted away and those who happened to be present arrested.

Plan Tool Exchange.

SEATTLE, March 2.—Carpenters here are considering a plan for establishing a tool exchange at union headquarters. Extra tools and those no longer desired could be exchanged at the tool bureau.

Have You Anything to Say About It?

Tomorrow we will publish some of the letters that have been coming in to us, giving the views of our readers on our serial, "A Week". We hope to keep on publishing some of these letters every day until we reach the end of the story. Don't you want to be among those stating their views, among those who really have something to say? Today's installment of "A Week" appears on Page Six. Read it carefully. Remember what has gone before. What do you think about the handling of this gripping story, about the characters, about their ideas and their struggles. Surely you have something to say. Send in your thoughts to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.

Legion Joins Klan Against Foreign Born in Alliance

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ALLIANCE, Ohio, March 2.—The American Legion-Spanish War Veterans and kindred "patriotic" societies have pledged their support to the authorities here in stamping out "Bolsheviki" propaganda amongst the foreign born.

The K. K. K, broke up a Lenin Memorial meeting here a few weeks ago after shooting off a few bombs and burning a Klux cross.

It has long been known that the Klan-Legion and like 100% plussers have a common working agreement against organized labor and the declaration made by the Legion head backing up the Klan in its attacks against labor is proof again that the Legion and the Klan are tarred with the same stick.

LINK GLASGOW, FALL LEGAL AID, TO LEWIS GANG

Got $60,000 from the Union Treasury

By THOS. MYERSCOUGH.

Members of the United Mine Workers of America were treated to a surprise recently, when the name of one Glasgow, referred to as the attorney for Fall of Washington, Palm Beach and Tea Pot Dome fame, was mentioned in the news dispatches in connection with the latest exposures of the Oil Can celebrities.

The name of Glasgow is one that is familiar to the miners and that is as it should be, for the name means much coin out of the treasury of the U. M. W. of A.

Shortly before Charles Evans Hughes became secretary of state he was paid $50,000.00 retaining fee by the International Union, U. M. W. of A., and upon his assumption of the cabinet post, he recommended that Wm. A. Glasgow, Jr., of Philadelphia, Pa., be selected to succeed him, according to word then sent out by the International officials. Since that time he has collected huge sums of money from the Miners' Union as attorney in the famous West Virginia cases; the exact amount is unknown, but during the months from February to December, 1923, alone, he is known to have collected more than $60,000 for his services.

If, as is reported, this is the same Glasgow and he divides his time between the OIL CAN grafters and the COAL MINE schemers, the membership of the miners union need not furrow their brows any longer over the actions of Lewis and his satelites, in their strenuous attempts to retain the control of that organization.

The rebel or progressive elements have long been aware of the influence of the trusts over the affairs of their union, they have watched the work of A. R. Hamilton, the Pittsburgh financier, thru his agent, Harry Straub, they have seen the results of the different sinister influences that secretly control their destinies and now, what?

The missing link may be found if the workers of these United States will punch a larger hole in the Tea Pot. Perhaps we may be able to show in the near future that heat and power are not the only saleable values of coal and oil.

It is even probable that thru the hole in the tea pot we will be able to see the root of the evil in the U. M. W. of A.

ASTOUNDING EXPOSURES IN OIL SCANDAL GIVE STRENGTH TO WORKERS PARTY DEMAND

THE impeachment of President Coolidge was demanded by the Workers Party of America and the DAILY WORKER last Friday—FOUR DAYS AGO.

We stated then that President Coolidge had been shown to be in close and friendly contact with the McLeans, Falls and Sinclairs, and that he and his cabinet officials and subordinates, notably Harry M. Daugherty and William J. Burns, were actually protecting criminals they should be prosecuting.

There has been rapid confirmation of our statements and justification of our demand for impeachment of the president.

Astounding revelations, made in the most dramatic manner, have linked Coolidge, Daugherty and Burns with the pirate crew that has stolen the natural resources of the nation.

U. S. Secret Code Aid to McLean

A confidential employe of the White House has been found, in conjunction with the debaucher of federal officials, Edward McLean, owner of the Washington Post and Cincinnati Enquirer, to have used, with the knowledge of William J. Burns, a secret code of the Department of Justice to keep McLean informed of "dangerous developments."

Another employe of the Department of Justice, confidential secretary of William J. Burns, is shown to have been told by Burns to warn McLean that the department had been ordered to investigate him. The private secretary of the Attorney-General, one Rochester, was in close touch with McLean. McLean himself was credentialed as a department of justice agent.

A message sent over the secret leased wire to McLean at Palm Beach, presumably either dictated by President Coolidge, or at his request, states that the "principal" is glad there will be no "rocking of the boat" and that "there will be no resignations."

Senators Make Ironic Comments

So seriously involved is President Coolidge that his name is made the subject of ironic comments in the senate; staid senators refer to him as "Cautious Cal" and Senator Caraway in a speech has challenged him to affirm or deny that he has been assuring the Teapot Dome criminals of protection.

President Coolidge has said that he will make no reply to the charges.

The Workers Party of America contends that the government of the United States is the instrument of the capitalist class.

It maintains that its chief functions are to aid in the plundering of the workers and farmers of the United States and to suppress the resulting revolts.

It has stated time and time again that the Department of Justice is run in the interest of the blackest section of the capitalist class, that it is run by criminals for criminals and that in addition to fighting labor and radical organizations its major task is to shield the members of the capitalist class who in their greed for profits violate the law they themselves have approved.

Can't Conceal the Dirty Mess

Evidence submitted to the Teapot Dome Committee in the last four days, despite the efforts at concealment by government officials from the president down, has furnished abundant proof of everyone of these contentions by bringing to light the intimate connection with the beneficiaries of the Teapot Dome steal of the innermost circle of the Department of Justice headed by William J. Burns.

Let us state again that Attorney-General Daugherty and William J. Burns, their personal and confidential secretaries, the president and his confidential courier, with other confidential employes of the Department of Justice constituting those in the very heart of the government, co-operated to keep the thieving crew, whose activities the senate was investigating, informed of the slighest menace to their safety.

Let it be remembered that these are the agencies of capitalists that broke the strike of the railwaymen, because they said it was a challenge to the government, and that are trying still to jail Communist workingmen for "attempting to overthrow the government."

If the workers and farmers of America still believe that American government in theory is their government, is it not plain that every act of the Coolidge administration is a refutation of that theory?

Government Giant Capitalist Conspiracy

Is any more evidence needed to show that the United States government today is nothing but a gigantic capitalist conspiracy against the masses of America?

Broken strikes and a department of justice owned by oil and railway operators.

Bankrupt farmers and a treasury department owned by oil and steel barons.

Workingmen hounded and jailed for their opinions in Michigan, Idaho, California, Pennsylvania and West Virginia,

Coming! The Teapot Special!

The DAILY WORKER announces it will issue a Special Teapot Edition, dated Monday, March 17th. This will be the first attempt on a large scale to get the real meaning of the oil scandal before the American working class. Hundreds of thousands of copies of this issue should be distributed. Party members and sympathizers, alike, must join in this effort.

This special edition of the DAILY WORKER will contain articles analyzing the investigation that is taking place in Washington. The facts will be marshalled in orderly array, so that all labor will clearly understand the meaning of this far-reaching political explosion. There will be smashing cartoons and sketches by Robert Minor, Fred Ellis and our other artists. This edition will be the biggest effort we have yet put forth. Send in your orders today for this special issue to THE DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.

FORBES, HEAD OF VET BUREAU, IS CAL'S NEW PERIL

Teapot's Understudy Is All Set to Go

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2.—Col. Charles R. Forbes, former head of the Veterans Bureau, has begun preparations for a fight for his liberty.

Refusing to comment on the bribery indictment returned against him late yesterday by a grand jury in Chicago, Forbes after conference with his counsel, James Easby-Smith, said merely that arrangements will be made within a day or two to have Forbes go before a United States Commissioner here and give bail of $5,000 for his appearance in Chicago when he is wanted.

Until he and his counsel have determined their course, Forbes will have nothing to say, it was said on his behalf. But it was indicated at the same time that his trial is likely to result in disclosures even more sensational than those before the senate committee which led to the calling of the grand jury and the indictments against Forbes and J. W. Thompson, Chicago and St. Louis contractor.

In the senate's investigation, testimony of scores of witnesses centered about the charge that Forbes had entered into a conspiracy to allot hospital construction contracts to favored contractors, J. W. Thompson, St. Louis, indicated yesterday was named as head of one of the construction firms favored by Forbes.

$5,000 Paid in Bathroom.

Elias H. Mortimer, Philadelphia, former intimate associate of Forbes, testified that he had given Forbes $5,000 in a bathroom in the Drake Hotel, Chicago, as part payment to Forbes for favors rendered the Thompson firm which Mortimer represented.

Mortimer also testified Forbes had agreed to a division of all construction between two groups of contractors, one to get all jobs west of the Mississippi and the other all those in the east, the profits to be split three ways among the two groups and Forbes.

Another charge brought against Forbes during the hearings involved him in the sale of quantities of government supplies at far below proper prices. It was for this, Brigadier General Sawyer testified, President Harding asked for his resignation.

In defense Forbes declared Mortimer's testimony was based on personal enmity. Mortimer admitted he had separated from his wife on account of quarrels begun during the period he and Mrs. Mortimer accompanied on an inspection trip to the Pacific coast.

At the conclusion of the senate investigation, all evidence was turned over to the Department of Justice which sought in Chicago the indictment since returned by the grand jury.

In connection with the new evidence, the jury stated:

"1—That one or more officials of the government used official information for purposes of speculation.

"2—That two members of Congress were paid certain sums of money.

"3—That persons having no official connection with the government or that particular department, had possession of a file of a federal department.

"4—That money was accepted by certain individuals, not attorneys, for the purpose of obtaining clemency for prisoners, thru their intimacy with officials of the government.

"5—That money was collected by certain individuals, not attorneys, for obtaining thru such intimacies, permits for intoxicating liquors."

Thompson, who was in Chicago when the indictments were returned, surrendered and appeared before Federal Judge Carpenter. He gave $10,000 bond. Forbes is in Washington and is expected here this week.

Toronto Workers Are Now Getting Lesson in Class Government

(By The Federated Press)

TORONTO, March 2.—Under the Farmer-Labor government the workmen's compensation act was administered by the provincial department of labor. The Conservative government has now handed it back to the attorney general who had charge under the Conservative regime which preceded the Farmer-Labor cabinet. Manufacturers criticize the administration of the law under the labor department and now want the government to provide for appeals and allow lawyers to be heard in such cases. The local labor unions are suspicious of the charge proposed and fear that the object of the manufacturers is to get rid of Halford, the labor man on the board.

Attempt to Force Religion on Helpless Children, Defeated

(By The Federated Press)

SACRAMENTO, Cal., March 2.—An attempt to force religious instruction on the school children of California has been frustrated by a decision by Attorney General Webb that it would be illegal to close public schools an hour earlier two days a week in order to allow pupils to attend religious exercises.

"It would be unwarranted discrimination to keep children whose parents do not desire them to have religious intsruction two hours longer a week in school than those who do desire such instruction," says Webb.

Old Guardsmen Smoot and Lenroot Nervous Wrecks Since Doublecross of Probe Exposed

By LAURENCE TODD

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, Mar. 2.—Senator Smoot, apostle of the Mormon church and for many years blustering boss of the republican old guard on the senate floor, has been tamed, shaken, hushed by the oil scandal investigation.

Something has gone wrong with Smoot's world. He sits beside Chairman Lenroot and nervously twists one hand in the other. His voice is almost never heard, and when he does try to speak it is scarcely above a whisper. His eyes no longer bore thru the countenances of the men who testify before his committee. His glance is roving, or it rests for long periods on the table.

Smoot's "Unbiased Report".

Smooth was chairman of this committee when it was ordered by the senate, a year ago last summer, to inquire into LaFollette's charge that the leasing of the naval oil reserves was a stupendous fraud on the public, based on a criminal conspiracy. For nearly a year he was too busy to press the matter. Then with reluctance he started hearings, and filed triumphantly the report of the two "unbiased experts" who made a report which suggested that Teapot Dome had only a small fraction of the value that formerly had been placed upon it. Then Senator Walsh of Montana began his examination of witnesses, and looked into the records of the two experts, and into the sudden riches displayed by former Secretary Fall. Smoot began visibly to wilt.

Smoot, Doheny and Company.

December came, and Smoot took another chairmanship, but remained on the public lands committee. He has attended almost every session in the long and sensational inquiry which Walsh has developed. At first Smoot and Lenroot strove to protect Fall and the leases, but soon they had to drop that line of obstruction. There came the day of Doheny's confession that he had paid $100,000 in banknotes to Fall. That was the day that Smoot slipped a note into Doheny's hand, and Doheny, when Walsh called upon him to show it, dug from his pocket a heap of tiny fragments of paper, saying that Smoot had merely asked him to meet Smoot in the latter's room after the session.

Lenroot Has Heebie-Jeebies.

Lenroot has been nervous too, at times. Whether the matter be only a coincidence or not, it was evident to all who attended the hearings that these two henchmen of the administration shared a mystery that is denied to ordinary hard-shelled reactionaries, such as Bursum, Cameron and Pittman. Now they have admitted that they conferred with Fall before he went on the stand.

There came the day when the local manager for the Western Union Telegraph Co. was summoned before the committee with copies of the great number of telegrams dealing with this oil probe which went from here to McLean of the Washington Post and to Fall, his guest, at Palm Beach, at the time Senator Walsh was going down there to get McLean to confess that his testimony as to a $100,000 loan to Fall was a lie.

Walsh began to read, to himself, the first of the telegrams. Smoot peered anxiously over his shoulder. Suddenly Walsh's eyebrows went up. Smoot looked ill. Both men whispered to Lenroot. Then, without consulting any of the six other members who sat about the table, Lenroot declared they would go into secret session. Walsh interrupted him. Lenroot rapped the table again and explained in an agitated voice that all parts of the telegrams that were found to be relevant to this oil investigation would be read in public session later on. Smoot wrung his hands, and looked as tho he were about to collapse. Lenroot was far from composed.

Afterward, a Democratic member admitted that "big politics" was affected by the revelations found in this stream of reports which went by wire to McLean and Fall in Florida. The men suspected in the fraud were being kept intimately in touch with the committee itself.

Now Smoot and Lenroot admit they conferred with Fall before he took the stand.

Crowe Aids Garment Bosses In War on Striking Labor

the entire year they must come to the shops and do the work that is to be done. Some times they are thru at noon, sometimes before. While they are waiting for a little work to do they get nothing.

When the boss has a large order they must work all hours of the day or night to get the order done only to be without work a few weeks later.

Must Help Out Husbands.

Many of the women who work in the dress industry in Chicago are the wives of very poorly paid foreign-born workers. They go to work to supplement the wages of their husbands. When they have children the children must take care of themselves while their mothers work. The kids go to school when they are old enough. After school they play in the streets or wherever they can.

When the children are too young to go to school they are put in day nurseries. For this the mothers must pay. After the mother has completed a days work in the shop she goes home to take care of her children and prepare meals for her husband.

Many of the girls who work in the dress and waist industry live at home. Their wages are so small that they cannot support themselves.

The girls who do not live at home must manage as best they can on the small wages they receive. When they get a weeks pay that seems large, $35 or $38, they are compelled to save a good part of it for the slack seasons.

Girls Huddled Together.

Often these girls who are not living at home are compelled to live three and more in one room in order to economize. Working on a piece work basis at high speed and long hours part of the time and being idle most of the time helps to break down the health of the workers.

The bosses in the industry attempt to bring back prosperity by cutting wages and promising to cut prices and telling the workers: "If I make cheaper garments more of them will sell and that will make more work. I can only cut prices by cutting your wages."

Outside the union shops the girls are not sure of an equal division of work that is to be done. The boss gives the work he has to do during slack times to the workers he wants to give it to. Often workers anxious to get a little work are willing to work very cheaply. They establish a practice. Once they work for less than the regular price the bosses try to cut them to the same level even during busy seasons. In union shops when there is little work to do what there is to be done is equally divided.

Bosses Who Surrendered

These bosses have surrendered to the striking dressmakers—the first break in the big strike against sweatshop conditions in Chicago.

Worry Even While Working.

"We know what it is to be hungry. We know what it is to go without and to worry even when we are working. We have worked in the dress industry for years without knowing where or when we would get another wage cut.

"To strike is not as bad as to live in fear that you would not get a share of the little work that there is to do," the girl striker who told her story to the DAILY WORKER said.

Farmers Get Excited.

OAKLAND, Cal., March 2.—California officials today appealed to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to assist in "allaying the hysteria" in other states resulting from the outbreak of hoof and mouth disease in California.

Break in Ranks of Bosses

A BREAK has occurred in the ranks of the employers who are fighting the dressmakers' strike against sweatshop conditions—as the DAILY WORKER forecasted.

Fifteen bosses, employing more than 250 workers, have yielded all the union demands and will be permitted to resume work today. This means that the 40-hour week, with pay for 44 hours; wage increases, ranging up to 12 per cent; maintenance of unemployed and the iron-bound closed shop, have been won by this section of the strikers.

Union officials inform the DAILY WORKER that this is only a beginning of the union's success and that another group of employers may be expected to give in speedily. The union is striking at the busy season when employers must get their profits if they expect to come out ahead for the year.

The early victory of the union over 15 employers has given renewed impetus to the strike. More pickets will be on the line this morning than any day so far in the strike. Left wing militants who are recruiting pickets for the shop squads say that volunteers are coming forward with greater enthusiasm since receiving the news of the first success.

Support which the DAILY WORKER and the Chicago Federation of Labor are giving the strike are powerful factors in the fighting spirit of the strikers.

PHILADELPHIA WORKERS FOR ST. PAUL MEET

Teapot Dome Inspires Them to Action

By ABRAM JAKIRA.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 2.—"On to St. Paul!" was the slogan issued by the Workers Party of Philadelphia at the mass meeting held in connection with the Teapot Dome scandal now under investigation in Washington. Comrade Baker of Machinists Union made a survey of the oil scandal and pointed out that it is not a matter of individual corruption but that the entire government is corrupt being a tool of big business interests.

Comrade Sklaroff with facts in his hands showed that American history is full of Teapot Domes and that the present oil scandal is but one link in a long chain of corruption of capitalist governments.

Continuous applause greeted Comrade Weinstone's speech in which he enumerated the part played by the leaders of both republican and democratic parties in the notorious oil scandal. His appeal to work for the establishment of a Workers' and Farmers' Government and to support the May 30th Convention met with great enthusiasm.

Comrade Jakira, District Organizer Workers Party, pointed out the role of the Workers Party in the American labor movement and made an appeal to the audience to join the Party to build the trade union movement and to carry on a campaign for establishment of a labor party in Philadelphia.

A resolution was adopted unanimously, condemning both republican and democratic parties as agents of big business interests and pledging full support to the labor party movement.

The resolution in the concluding part reads:

"Whereas a Convention has been called for May 30th at St. Paul, by the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, the Farmer-Labor parties of Washington, Montana and South Dakota, and other organizations, for the nomination of a farmer-labor candidate for president and the adoption of a national platform and this convention gives the opportunity to create the mass Farmer-Labor Party which will carry on the fight for a Workers' and Farmers' Government,

"Be it resolved, that we, workers in mass meeting assembled, endorse this May 30th Convention and pledge ourselves to carry on a vigorous campaign in the trade unions and other labor organizations of Philadelphia, urging them to send delegates to that convention and that we call upon all working class organizations to repudiate both the republican and democratic parties and to proceed with the organization of a class Labor Party in Philadelphia."

Did Not Do Unto Her, as He Did Unto Others, Wife's Charge

NEW YORK, March 2.—For the first time, the fundamentalist-modernist schism in the Episcopal church has invaded the home and became the cause of divorce.

Wm. H. Griffin, New York lawyer, has answered his wife's suit for divorce by asserting that their differences are due to the fact that Mrs. Griffin is a modernist, while he has been and remains a fundamentalist.

Draw Your Own Conclusions.

In her complaint, Mrs. Griffin charged misconduct at Atlantic City and that her husband failed to show her affection. But Griffin says the trouble is due to "the plaintiff's views regarding religion." They were married in 1906.

"The plaintiff favors the school of thought of which the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant is the most conspicuous exponent at the present time." The lawyer's answer, submitted by a law partner, reads in part.

He Was Hard Boiled.

Griffin accuses his wife of being "a veritable iconoclast in religious matters," and declares he is content to allow all dogmatic dissertations to be shattered against the solid rock of fundamentalism.

"The plaintiff, with free rein," says the answer, "has chased practically all the isms which this city offers to such seekers."

Mrs. Griffin today denied her husband's statements and said she believes in the orthodox principles of Christian religion and that she still belongs to the Episcopalian church.

Japanese Prince Tries to Stage a Comeback: He Fails

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TOKIO, Japan, March 2.—Formal announcement of the death of Prince Matsukata, one of the two surviving members of the Genro, or "Elder Statesmen" of Japan, was made today.

Three days ago he was first declared dead. Then the announcement was termed as "premature." Since that time it has remained indefinite as to whether he were dead or alive.

It was reported that announcement of the death was being withheld until the Prince Regent could confer upon him certain last honors.

Matsukata was twice Premier of Japan and was the organizer of the Japanese monetary system.

with the aid of an army of spies and perjurers, who take orders from and protect men like McLean—the millionaire debauchee to whom the White House is open.

Corruption Like That Under Czar's Rule

There is no parallel for the corruption in government circles in America today except that in Russia during the latter days of the Czar's rule.

Thousands of spies gathering information that can be used against every individual whom the agents of oil, steel, coal, copper, transportation and finance may wish to terrorize; open graft and looting in every government department where the opportunity exists; an officialdom that has been bought like any other commodity used in their enterprises by the industrial and financial lords; open defiance of the wishes and instructions of the elected representatives of the masses; law enforcing departments obviously engaged in aiding, not prosecuting, criminals of all kinds from defaulting bankers and white slavers to wealthy beneficiaries of enormous and admitted thefts of government property.

The immediate answer to these apostles of oppression, robbery and corruption should consist of the organization of a mass farmer-labor party to fight the bi-partisan machine of American capitalism and of the impeachment of President Coolidge as the present responsible head of American government. If there were one-tenth of the evidence against a union or a working class political party of official endorsement of and participation in government corruption that there is against President Coolidge and his cabinet, every member would be imprisoned even if new jails had to be built.

We Demand Coolidge's Impeachment

We demand again that impeachment proceedings be started against the president and we urge that all organizations of workers and farmers get behind the demand with their mass strength.

Let every man, woman and child in America be informed by the resulting publicity as to the exact extent of and the detailed methods whereby government in the United States is owned and controlled by the exploiters of the workers and farmers.

U. S. Code Used by Burns to Warn McLean; Inner Circle D. of J. at Oil Crooks' Disposal

NEW YORK, March 2.—Translation of secret code telegrams exchanged by Edward B. McLean with his Washington agents while the publisher was in Palm Beach during the opening days of the Teapot Dome investigation, has been furnished the Senate committee by the New York World, according to a copyright article published by that newspaper.

The World states there is reason to believe that the code used was that of the department of justice and that one of the messages to McLean reveals Wm. J. Burns, director of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice, as an active informant of McLean on developments in the Teapot Dome inquiry.

Telegrams Recorded.

The telegrams published were as follows:

"January 9, 1924—Edward McLean, Palm Beach.

"Jaguar baptistical stowage beadle 1235 huff pulsator commensal fitful lambert conation fecund-hybridize. "WOD."

The paraphrase given was:

"Walsh will take 12:35 Atlantic Coast line tonight and not seaboard air line. Lambert will accompany him.

"William O. Duckstein."

Duckstein was a confidential employe of McLean in the offices of the Washington Post.

Another telegram was:

"January 9, 1924—Edward McLean, Palm Beach.

"Zev Hocusing imagery commensal abad opaque hosier lectionary. Clot prattle lamb jaguard rovod timepiece nudity. Hocusing lectionary chinchilla peternet bedraggled rip rale overshade quake. Raps Walsh.

Paraphrase:

"Zevely believes investigation is progressing entirely in your favor. He doesn't think much of Walsh as a cross examiner. He thinks you needn't worry about approaching examination. Zevely went over with Lambert questions that will probably be asked you and Lambert will advise you regarding answers. Walsh due 8 o'clock Friday morning.

"Wm. O. Duckstein."

Telegram:

Paraphrase:

"According to Lambert's instructions, the papers have been put in the safe deposit box belonging to you and Fraser in the Commercial Bank. Would you like to have them where they will be available to me? I will be all day at the office of the Post.

"Wm. O. Duckstein."

Burns Tips McLean.

Telegram:

"Mr. W. O. Duckstein, Palm Beach.

"Haxpaw sent overbuy bonka and householder bonka sultry tkvouop prozoics bepelt goal hocusing this pouted proponent. "Mary."

Paraphrase:

"Sent for Burns, who told me to say McLean investigation is under way by special agents of Department of Justice. He believes information is important. "Mary."

The Mary referred to it said to be Mary Duckstein, a confidential secretary in the Department of Justice.

In connection with the code telegrams, sent to McLean, the Teapot Dome committee has been informed that the one referring to "Mary," referred to a confidential secretary in the Department of Justice. This woman, committee members were told, is related by marriage to W. O. Duckstein, the McLean agent to whom the code telegram in question was sent.

"Serious Steps" Planned.

This particular telegram, according to Senator Walsh, was the one which said that Wm. J. Burns had sent for "Mary" and notified her that McLean was being investigated by the Department of Justice.

The committee will check translations submitted to it against the principal code expert of the War Department, whose aid was enlisted yesterday by Senator Walsh. This expert's report is due today.

Walsh will run down a report that the code used by McLean and his employes was based on White House cipher.

If it is established that the government's code was used, or that confidential information from a government department was given to McLean by an official of the government, "serious steps" will be taken at once, a member of the committee said.

Women In Case.

Senator Walsh has announced he would summon Mrs. W. O. Duckstein, wife of E. B. McLean's secretary, to testify regarding code telegrams sent to McLean at Palm Beach.

Mrs. Duckstein is a special agent of the Department of Justice and was formerly confidential secretary to William J. Burns, head of the bureau of investigation of the department.

Duckstein today stated his wife's name is Jessie, but that she had used the name Mary on occasions. One of the code telegrams to Duckstein, signed "Mary," informed him that Burns had sent for Mary and said to tell McLean he was being investigated by the justice department.

Walsh wants Mrs. Duckstein to tell whether she sent this message and whether Burns had given her such instructions. He also wants to know how McLean got the obsolete Department of Justice code in which the telegrams were sent.

Burns will be called to tell more about these things also.

DAUGHERTY QUIZ O. K.'ED BY SOLONS FULL OF T.N.T.

Old Guard Panicky as It Passes

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The Senate has passed the Wheeler resolution providing for an investigation of Attorney-General Daugherty's administration in the Department of Justice.

The vote came after two days of bitter debate.

The resolution provides that the investigation will be conducted by a committee of five senators, three republicans and two democrats, elected by the Senate.

Nomination and election of the committee was begun by the Senate immediately after passage of the resolution.

At the last minute on the motion of Senator Willis, Ohio, the resolution was softened in language by striking out the preamble which cited alleged incompetency of the attorney-general. As changed the resolution reads:

Text of Resolution.

"Resolved, that a committee of five senators consisting of three members of the majority and two members of the minority be authorized and directed to investigate circumstances and facts and report the same to the Senate concerning the alleged failure of Harry M. Daugherty, attorney-general of the United States, to prosecute properly violators of the Sherman anti-trust act and the Clayton act against monopolies and unlawful restraint of trade; the alleged neglect and failure of the said Harry M. Daugherty, attorney-general of the United States, to arrest and prosecute Albert B. Fall, Harry F. Sinclair, E. L. Doheny, C. R. Forbes and their co-conspirators in defrauding the government as well as the alleged neglect and failure of the said attorney-general to arrest and prosecute many others for violation of federal statutes and his alleged failure to prosecute properly, efficiently and promptly and defend all manner of civil and criminal action wherein the government of the United States was interested as a party, plaintiff or defendant. And said committee is further directed to inspire into, investigate and report to the Senate the activities of the said Harry M. Daugherty, attorney-general and any of his assistants in the Department of Justice which would in any manner tend to impair their efficiency or inefficiency as representatives of the government of the United States. The said committee above referred to and the chairman thereof shall be elected by the Senate of the United States."

The vote was 66 to 1.

Senator Elkins, West Virginia, republican, alone voted against the resolution.

Workers Uniting in Youngstown for Foreign Born

(Special to The Daily Worker)

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, March 2.—What promises to be the most aggressive council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers yet organized in Ohio is now under way in Youngstown. Letters have been sent out to all working class, labor and fraternal organizations requesting them to attend the general conference which is to be held March 23, at the Hungarian Hall, 338 W. Federal St., at 8 p. m. Already organizations are busy electing their delegates to the conference.

The ruthless suppression of workers meetings and the police hounding of workers like in the Farrell raids had aroused the workers up to the absolute necessity of organizing to defeat passage of the selective finger printing and criminal identification immigration laws now before congress.

FAKE GRAIN BILL DENOUNCED BY F. F.-L. P. SEC'Y

McNary Plan Passes Senate Committee

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The McNary bill providing for a $200,000,000 agricultural export corporation has been favorably reported by the senate committee on agriculture today.

The bill was amended in committee to reduce the operating period from ten years to five. The corporation directed by a commission headed by the secretaries of agriculture, commerce and treasury would be authorized to maintain prices on farm products by balancing the export of the surplus.

* * * *

"Fake Bill", Says Manley.

Charges that Julius Barnes, President of the United States Chamber of Commerce was the real author of the McNary bill were made yesterday by Joseph Manley, secretary of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party.

"This is a fake bill," said Manley. "It was drawn for the prpose of killing the Norris bill which provides for price fixing by putting the entire grain selling business, domestic and foreign, into the hands of the government. There are so many loopholes in the McNary bill that only a small portion of even the export business would actually be handled by the Agricultural Export Corporation.

"The Chamber of Commerce has this sham substitute jammed thru the senate committee in order to leave the banks in control of the wheat belt. South Dakota, particularly, is being flooded with specious arguments for this plan which will do nothing for the farmers. The Chamber of Commerce's hope is to quiet the unrest of the poverty-stricken farmers by this piece of bunkum.

Class Party Gains.

"South Dakota farmers will not be satisfied with the McNary bill nor any other Big Business trickery. The South Dakota Farmer-Labor Party is making tremendous strides thru the wheat lands. It has the whole-hearted support of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party and Tom Ayres, its candidate at the March primaries for United States Senator, is running on the Federated Farmer-Labor slogans of the "Five Year Moratorium for all Working Farmers" and "The Land for the Users".

Virgin Islanders Demand Freedom, Not U. S. Navy Rule

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Copies of the draft of a measure creating a permanent form of civil government for the Virgin Island, favored by the people of that new possession of the United States, have been handed to Chairman Fairfield, house committee on insular affairs, and to Admiral Latimer, judge advocate general of the navy, by Rothschild Francis, chairman, Virgin Islands committee.

Since the purchase of the islands, during the war, the United States has ruled them thru the navy department, without in any way consulting the wishes of the people themselves.

Resolutions have been adopted by the A. F. of L., the American Civil Liberties union, the Negro Sanhedrin, Lincoln League of America, and the Virgin Islands committee, demanding citizenship and a permanent form of civil government by and for the natives. The colonial councils in the islands recently adopted a resolution which in part asked congress to determine the political status of the natives of these islands in the American government.

German Seamen Tie Up Ships in Australian Port

(By The Federated Press)

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Mar. 2.—Seamen on the German steamers Hanover and Itauri, now in Sydney harbor, have gone on strike demanding British rates of pay. They say that owing to the collapse of the German mark, their wages now amount to but a few pence a month, and any further collapse in the currency will mean that they were working for no wages at all.

The captain and the agents of both vessels cabled to the owners in Germany, who replied that as the rate of wages was agreed to prior to the vessels leaving Germany and were adjusted at Hamburg by the arbitration committees from time to time, they didn't propose to alter them.

The men have refused to take the vessels to sea. The captains are unable to put the men ashore, being prevented from doing so under the Australian immigration act. Likewise, while the men remain on the vessels, the captains have to keep them in food.

Canadian Worker Sees Gleam of Hope Break Thru European Mists

The DAILY WORKER:—The sun is now breaking thru the clouds in Great Britain, and the dock strike may appreciably hasten the progress of the workers towards the ideal of a Workers' Republic.

When this ideal is within measurable distance of attainment, then will come the great offensive of capital in North America to starve out the workers of Great Britain and then Canada will be called on to play a great and perhaps decisive part in keeping open food supplies for the British workers.

Let us see that in season and out of season the workers are saturated with the philosophy of hope rather than the hopeless fatalism which considers that the workers of Canada are forever predestined to lie helpless in the grip of the oil-soaked autocracy of Washington. For once let the workers of Canada cease speculating upon the golden day when labor will triumph in Europe and the United States, and instead bend their energies to bringing nearer this golden day. Let us look forward to the immediate realization of a Canada both self-contained and able to extend valuable aid to labor all over the world.

Head of Mellon's Steel Co. Hires All Treasury Employes

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Sen. Couzens has discovered, by a private questioning of the mysterious "Col. Drake," who has been put in charge of employing all personnel at the Treasury, that Drake is president of the Pressed Steel Car Co., a Mellon concern.

The Pressed Steel Car Co. is infamous in strike history, and in its record of bitter warfare upon organized labor.

Couzens is demanding that Congress investigate the Internal Revenue Bureau, to discover the loopholes in the law and in the rules of its enforcement, whereby hundreds of millions of dollars of income taxes have failed of collection. Drake is supposed to report secretly to his private boss—Mellon—as to the "safety" of employes proposed for transfer to the Internal Revenue Bureau. He is not on the government payroll, but is credited with guarding the Bureau against radical clerks, who might talk too much when big reductions in tax levy are handed out to oil companies for "depreciation of plant," etc.

Mellon has sent representatives to Couzens, seeking to prevent his going further with the investigation plan.

New York Firetraps Owned by City Are Highly Profitable

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 2.—A large group of city-owned buildings in Brooklyn were condemned by Alderman George U. Harvey before the board of aldermen, Harvey charging that these structures are firetraps. He suggested that the dangerous buildings be destroyed and the site used as a playground. He pointed out that the former owners were still allowed to collect rent after the city had purchased the tenements in question. These illicit landlords, he said, were reaping substantial profits.

Alderman John J. McCusker, in whose ward the buildings are situated, protested against this "interference" in his bailiwick. Despite McCusker's solicitude for the lawbreaking profiteers who squeeze high rents from the condemned tenements, Harvey's resolution was filed.

Lewis Tools Bring Besco Slaves Raise in Price of Coal

(By The Federated Press)

GLACE BAY, Nova Scotia, March 2.—The 12,000 coal miners employed by the British Empire Steel corporation are talking of a new wage fight less than a month after the Montreal agreement was signed. The agreement was objected to by a number of locals, including two that have consistently opposed the radical trend of the rest of District 26 of the mine workers. The contract runs for one year, expiring Jan. 15, 1925, contrary to the wishes of the miners, who did not want it to end in late winter. The wage increase is partially offset by an increase in the price of company coal to miners of $1.30 a ton over the old price of $2.25 a ton.

CHICAGO UNIONS JOIN BATTLE FOR FOREIGN WORKERS

Council Endorsed by Labor Federation.

The Chicago Federation of Labor yesterday cast itself into the fight against the Davis laws which plan the fingerprinting and indexing of foreign born workers under the guise of "selective immigration" measures.

By unanimous vote the federation adopted a resolution passed by the newly constituted Council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers that met at 180 W. Washington St. that morning and that represented numerous Chicago labor locals, language and political groups.

The protest adopted by the Federation will be forwarded at once to both houses of Congress. It represents the largest and most formidable body of labor opinion yet formulated against the open shop scheme and shows that the workers from the Windy City are not taken in by the "anti-foreigner" cry which Big Business is raising for the purpose of having several million workers at its mercy.

The resolution follows:

Flay Peonage Laws.

Whereas, There are now pending in the United States Congress several proposed laws, backed by the big employers of the country, intended to enslave the workers, cut down the standard of living, and establish the "open shop" thru the destruction of the existing unions, and

Whereas, Some of these notorious proposed laws, known as House Bill No. 691, introduced by Representative Rosenbloom; House Bill No. 2900, by Representative Kelly, and Senate Bill No. 4303, by Senator Colt, provide for selective immigration on a contract basis, registering of all foreign born workers in general contained in these foreign born workers be also photographed and finger-printed like criminals, and

Whereas, These proposed laws are a menace to native and foreign born workers alike, inasmuch as the true purpose is to force these foreign born workers to become a club wherewith to beat down the standard of living to all the workers of this country, to force then to become strike-breakers to help destroy the established trade unions, and

Whereas, The Convention of the American Federation of Labor held recently at Portland, Ore., in a forceful manner went on record pointing out the dangers to the workers in general contained in these proposals for legislation for selective immigration and registering of foreign born workers and recommended that the Executive Council use all means at its disposal to defeat such legislation, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Conference go on record to constitute itself as a Council for Protection of Foreign Born Workers and do everything in power, by means of public protest meetings, publicity, etc., to oppose the passage of these proposed laws to oppress the foreign born workers.

Conference Plans Action.

The morning conference which formed itself into a council for the Protection of the Foreign Born laid plans for mass meetings and literature to arouse the workers of the Chicago district to the menace of the so-called "selective immigration" laws and the necessity of all workers standing together against attacks at any one group.

The conference will meet again Sunday after next at which time it is expected that additional unions will be represented. The conference was called by the Czecho-Slovakian Workers' Council. The organizations sending delegates were:

Organizations in Council.

Czecho-Slovak Workers' Council; Machinists' Local Union, No. 84; Machinists' Local Union, No. 134; Machinists' Local Union, No. 113; Machinists' Local Union, No. 478; Painters' No. 194; Painters' No. 237; Capmakers, No. 5; Brewery Workers No. 18; Carpenters' No. 341; Carpenters' No. 1786; Carpenters No. 1637; Hodcarriers No. 27; Local Workers Party; Young Workers League; German Protective Organization; Hungarian Sick and Death Benefit Society; South Slavic Organization for Protection of Foreign Born Workers; Ukrainian Organization for Protection of Foreign Born Workers; Lithuanian Workers' Alliance.

The Council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers is a particularly important thing for Chicago labor, delegates pointed out, because such a large proportion of the city's workers are of European extraction.

WAGES DOWN, PROFITS UP.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., March 2.—Statistics published by the New South Wales bureau of statistics show that factory wages paid to male adult workers during 1923 were lower than in 1922, and slightly lower than in 1921. Wages paid to female adult workers in 1923 were higher than in the previous year.

As a result of this, coupled with a big drop in the cost of raw materials used, profits have advanced. The average profit for 1923 was 18½%, as against 15% in 1922 and 12½% in 1921.

CAL CANNOT OR WILL NOT ANSWER SENATOR CARAWAY'S QUESTION

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 2nd.—President Coolidge will make "no comment" or reply to the question hurled at him in the Senate by Senator Caraway, Arkansas, it has been stated officially at the White House.

Caraway, in a speech, said he would like the President to reveal whether he ever had any communication with E. B. He said one hundred million people want an answer to that question because of a telegram to McLean in which reference was made to "the principal" receiving a message from McLean and being gratified that "no resignations" would take place.

"Who is the principal?" asked Caraway. "Who knows whether there were to be more resignations from the Cabinet? Who could have been the principal?"

SERF LIFE FILM IS MOSCOW ART PLAYERS' LATEST

German Relief Will Get Proceeds

NEW YORK, Mar. 2.—"Polikushka," the first screen production of the Moscow Art Theatre players, which features their leading star, Ivan Moskvin, in the title role, will be shown at the Amalgamated Temple, 21 Arion Place, Bklyn, Wednesday evening, at 8:30 p. m., March 5, and in the Bronx, at Eblings Casino, 156th street and St. Ann's avenue, Friday evening, March 7 at 8:30 p. m.

The film is an adaptation from the story of serfdom written by Leo Tolstoi at the time when the Russian peasants were emancipated. "Polikushka" is a jovial drunken peasant, typical of that period, who manages to earn or steal enough for drink, but the care and responsibility of raising a large family rests lightly on his shoulders. It happens that the mistress of the village entrusts "Polikushka" with an earrand to get a large sum of money in a nearby city. The peasant is elated over the trust, and becomes a changed being; for the first time in his life he has been entrusted with responsibility which he must carry out on the peril of his life.

"Polikushka" carries out his trust but on the way home, he falls asleep and loses the money which falls out from a hole in his cap. To his simple way of thinking there is nothing left but to do away with himself. He picks up his cap for one last, hopeless search and then hangs himself.

Moskvin plays the role with such realism and sympathy that one might almost say he "lives" "Polikushka." The picture is altogether different from any film produced in America. The work of an artist interpreter of the highest order, such as is Ivan Moskvin, and the remarkable simplicity of the story written by the master-artist Tolstoi, cannot be surpassed.

All those who want to see a remarkable film should not fail to come. In addition, a new film called "Russia-Germany" in which is depicted the condition of the German workers, will also be shown in the Amalgamated Temple on Wednesday evening for the first time in America.

These performances are given for the benefit of the starving German workers and their families.

FINN WORKERS GIVE LEAD IN CO-OPERATION

Bing, Builder, Boosts Municipal Housing

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Abolition of the slums thru private initiative is hopeless, said Alexander M. Bing, one of the largest real estate operators and builders in New York, at the opening of the cooperative housing exhibit held under the auspices of the United Neighborhood Houses, Inc. Bing favored state aid in housing and stated that it was possible for the state or municipality to embark on a program of slum clearance without losing money.

State aid in financing the cooperative housing efforts of groups of wage earners apeared to be the most practical method to those attending the exhibit which contains models and posters illustrating co-operative housing ventures already undertaken by wage earners in New York City.

The cooperative housing properties of a colony of Finns in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, afford the most interesting example of such ventures by New York wage earners. A group of Finnish workers, chiefly carpenters and bricklayers, started their cooperative idea in 1916. Today they own cooperatively ten apartment houses sheltering 450 families or about 2250 persons. The tenants' incomes vary between $40-$50 a week and their rents between $30-$50 a month. For this they get apartments which compare favorably with those renting for three times as much in New York. Apartments are thoroly up to date with electric light, steam heat and hot water. Bathrooms include tub and shower.

Workers purchased their apartments in these cooperative houses for about $100 a room. In the newest building this price has been somewhat increased as a result of the high cost of building. If, however, a worker is without the necessary cash he receives a loan to the extent necessary.

The cooperative housing idea in this instance has branched out to include a cooperative meat market, a cooperative bakery and a club. The club has a large auditorium for lectures, dramatics, musicals, dances, etc., a pool room, a coffee room and other clubrooms and serves as a general center for the community.

Other outstanding examples of cooperative housing undertaken by New York wage earners include the five cooperatively conducted tenements begun under the auspices of Dr. H. M. Tyndall of the People's Tabernacle, the Beekman Hill Homes on East 50th st., and the Workmen's Cooperative House at 1786 Lexington ave.

These experiments show what can be accomplished when people get together and throw over their dependence upon profit-seeking private initiative. But even in this matter of housing the possibilities of cooperative effort cannot be fully realized because the cooperators must go to profiteering private interests for the land on which their houses rest, for building materials and for the credit required during the building period. Only when private interests have been ousted from their control of land and other natural resources will it be possible for workers to acquire good homes with a reasonable expenditure of labor. This cooperative housing exhibit simply points the way.

Connecticut Job Seekers Finding "Not Wanted' Signs

(By The Federated Press)

HARTFORD, Conn., March 2.—A quarter of the applicants for work at Connecticut free employment offices during January were turned away because no jobs were available, according to the report of the state department of labor. This represented a considerable falling off in the labor demand as compared with December. The report shows that out of 3,265 applicants only 2,483 were furnished work.

The figures show that employers were more anxious to obtain women workers than men, for 86 out of every 100 women applying got a job while only 66 out of every 100 male applicants were placed. This illustrates the tendency in modern industry to give the cheapest labor the steadiest employment. Frequently, as shown in the U. S. children's bureau study of the last depression, the breadwinner of the family cannot get a job but the mother and even the younger children can find employment.

Little Entente Doomed by New Balkan Treaties

By FRITZ KREJCSI
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

PRAGUE, March 2.—It is considered an obvious fact that the recent Franco-Czech and Italo-Jugoslav treaties spell the doom of the Little Entente, which supposedly embraces Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia and Roumania. I hear that the Belgrade-Rome treaty came as a surprise to the Czech government, and a thoroughly unpleasant surprise at that. Both Roumania and Jugoslavia resented the alliance which the Czech Foreign Minister, Benes, concluded with Poincare; it was felt that this alignment meant the complete enslavement of the Little Entente to France, unless it were counteracted. The Italian-Jugoslav pact was the antidote. Benes' attempt to thwart that treaty failed miserably.

While the connection between Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia will be maintained, a new alignment of forces is arising, which will embrace Italy, Hungary and Poland, with the eventual adhesion of Jugoslavia and Roumania. This means that Czechoslovakia must seek some modus vivendi with her restless neighbor, Hungary.

The recognition de jure of Soviet Russia by Czechoslovakia is approaching. Even the most virulent reactionaries here are now reconciled to the inevitable.

48-Hour Law for Women May Pass N. Y. Legislature

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 2.—A heated debate ensued before the Senate and Assembly Labor and Industries committees at Albany, where bills proposing a 48-hour week and the establishment of a minimum wage commission were discussed. The bills would apply only to women and minors.

Opposition to the bills was expressed by the employers' representative, Mark A. Daly. It will be remembered that Daly's role as the paid lobbyist of the Associated Industries was exposed recently during the bosses' unsuccessful attack upon the State Labor Commissioner, Shientag. On that occasion, it was shown that the Associated Industries have been expending immense sums to maintain a lobby, devoted to sabotaging every measure of social or economic progress.

Sponsors of the bills included emissaries of the State Federation of Labor, the Consumers' League, the Women's Trade Union League and other labor groups.

In 1923, both the minimum wage commission and 48-hour week bills were defeated, but it is considered that the latter measure stands fair chances of being passed this year.

League of Nations Labor Bureau Is Good for Something

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 2.—The World War was fought on less coal, iron, steel, lead, zinc, cotton and wool than were used in peacetime manufacture in 1913, according to statistics compiled by the International Labor Office of the League of Nations, and issued thru their American office here. The second volume of an exhaustive inquiry into world production is the immediate source of these figures.

Use of copper, aluminum, rubber and silk was increased during the war.

Wheat and rye production averaged during the five war years from 80 to 90 per cent of pre-war, while sugar and rice were inreased. Cattle were 5 per cent higher, hogs about the same, and sheep 10 per cent less than in 1913.

Housing construction in Germany in 1917 was only 4 per cent, in the principal cities, of that for 1913. In Vienna in 1918 and 1919 it was only 1 per cent, in Milan and Rome 8 per cent, and in Britain, on a valuation basis, as low as 4 per cent of the amount for 1913.

Banks Crash in Canada; Sir Thomas White to Be Quizzed

OTTAWA, March 2.—The dominion government has appointed a commission to probe the Home Bank disaster. It will investigate the action of Sir Thomas White, Conservative minister of finance, about six or seven years ago. A complaint was made to White that the bank was unsound. Because of the danger to war time credit which would come from a bank failure he allowed the bank to go on. This is now one of the reasons urged by the Home Bank depositors for government relief.

Another phase of this bank disaster, which caused the loss of savings to so many poor people now involves a member of the King government, Solicitor General E. J. McMurray. McMurray's law firm borrowed money from the bank and was unable to repay and the security which it gave subsequently declined in value below the amount of the loan.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

FARRELL, Pa., March 2.—Six members of the Workers Party, arrested by the Farrell police aided by Department of Justice agents, who are now held under $3,000 bond, charged with violating the Pennsylvania Sedition Law, will be tried in the Mercer County court late in April. The grand jury meets the first week in April, and the trials will follow immediately.

The defense will wage a vigorous battle against the infamous sedition law and the Farrell cases, the first of such kind in the history of Mercer county, will be of great importance to organized labor and workers in general.

Prosecutor Rickert of Mercer county, backed by the Steel Trust press is busy poisoning the public mind with yarns about the "Red Terror" and Chief of Police Leyshock of Farrell is the small town hero of the plot. Freedom of assemblage is absolutely forbidden in Farrell and workers must journey across the state line into Ohio to assemble, as in the days of the steel strike when Bill Foster had to assemble his boys in "No Man's Land," which is a strip of land just over the Pennsylvania line.

POWDER TRUST BLAST BRINGS DEATH TO FORTY

One Hundred Injured in Giant Explosion

(Special to The Daily Worker)

METUCHEN, N. J., March 2.—Forty workers lost their lives and over one hundred were injured, some fatally when a T. N. T. explosion in the Nixon Nitration plant, part of the Powder Trust wrecked the little industrial town of Nixon and brought sorrow and desolation to the hundreds of women and children.

The T. N. T. that exploded was part of 2,000,000 pounds that had been purchased from the government's Raritan arsenal and removed from big shells at the arsenal magazine.

The explosion occurred at 11:30 a. m. on Saturday in the ordinance salvaging plant. The bodies of the victims were so mutilated and burned that only a few could be identified.

The little settlement surrounding the dynamite plant is known as Nixon. When the awful report of the blast subsided the screams of the women and children from the settlement rose on the air. It was heart-rending.

Girls and men were pinned down by steel girders, and showered with nitric acid. Wounded men, with barely a rag of clothes on their backs and with burned bodies scorched black, rushed from the little village in all directions.

WORKERS PARTY BRINGING UNITY TO ARMENIAN GROUPS

Fusion Agreed Upon At Boston Confab

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., March 2.—Unity of the two Armenian groups within three months was agreed upon by delegates from each faction at a convention here. There were 38 delegates in all, 19 from 16 branches, representing the Armenian Federation of the Workers Party S. D. Huntchakist and 19 delegates from 16 branches representing the Armenian Workers Party, which had not affiliated with the Workers Party of America before the convention.

The unity program adopted was proposed by C. E. Ruthenberg who represented the Workers Party at the convention. It is interesting as showing party requirements in such cases. It's several provisions read as follows:

A—Will recognize both groups as party of the Armenian Section of the Workers Party and will issue dues stamps and membership cards to branches of each group.

B—It will require that within a period of three months the branches of the respective groups shall unite into one branch in each city, carrying this decision into effect thru the City Central Committee and District Executive Committee of the party in the territory in which Armenian Branches exist.

C—No new branches as charters of the Armenian Section of the Workers Party, to replace the present charters reading Armenian Federation of the Workers Party—S. D. Huntchakist Party will be issued to the branches anywhere until these branches have united as stated in paragraph "B."

D—During the three month period in which the branches are to be united the C. E. C. will require of the Bureau elected by each of the groups that no factional struggle be carried on. Neither circular letters nor articles in the party press shall be issued in which one or the other group is attacked.

E—The C. E. C. will require that in each city in which more than one branch exists, no matter which faction it belongs to, there shall be formed immediately a Propaganda Commmitee, consisting of representatives of the branches in equal proportion, which Propaganda Committee shall arrange public meetings under the joint auspices and carry on joint propaganda among the Armenian masses for the Workers Party.

F—At the end of the three month period in which the branches of the respective groups are to be united the C. E. C. will either appoint a Bureau to represent the United Armenian Section, or call a new convention made up of delegates from the United branches.

G—Branches or individuals who fail to carry out or in any way hinder the execution of the above program or any of the conditions laid down, will be expelled from the Party.

No Branch can be affiliated with the Communist International without affiliation with the Workers Party.

Many Workers Join the Party at Kenosha Meeting

(Special to The Daily Worker)

KENOSHA, Wis., March 2.—Many new members for the Party, arrangements for the formation of branches of the Young Workers League and its Junior section as well as an Italian branch were the net results of a well attended mass meeting called by the Workers Party here last night. Al Schaap, district organizer of the Chicago district Young Workers League, spoke on "Protection of the Foreign Born."

When the speaker declared that the efforts being put forth by the vested interests to curb or destroy the labor unions would surely fail, and that the proposition to curtail the activities of the foreign born workers by the enactment of new laws, would be bitterly fought by the Workers Party, the audience knew that he meant what he said.

Schaap declared that "any attempt to photograph and finger-print the foreign born must be resisted by all workers" and that the party he represented was taking a leading part in the general struggle of the working class.

The speaker laid particular stress on the part of the Y. W. L. with its Youth and Junior sections is taking in the class struggle. The meeting was the forerunner of many others that will make the party grow in this Wisconsin town.

Asbestos Toilers Make It Hot for St. Louis Bosses in Wage Fight

ST. LOUIS, March 2.—The first strike in the general move of St. Louis building trades for a minimum wage scale of $1.50 an hour has been de[illegible]red by the asbestos workers and [illegible]ors. The men walked out [illegible] their representatives reported [illegible]n's demand for $1.50 an hour [illegible] refused by the employers. The union working agreement expired January 1.

The employers are experiencing difficulty in an effort to man their jobs with nonunion workers. The striking local union has a membership of about 100. No negotiations are being carried on.

THE PARTY AT WORK

Party Branches Respond To Call For Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund

By C. E. RUTHENBERG
Executive Secretary, Workers Party

THE Central Executive Committee of the Party has asked the branches to raise a campaign fund of $15,000 for use of the Party in making the fight for mass Farmer-Labor Party in the 1924 presidential election.

In the circular letter sent to party branches it is pointed out that the present situation in the United States offers the greatest opportunity of the last quarter of a century for a great step forward to class political action by the Workers and Farmers.

The experiences of both the industrial workers and farmers since the end of the war have developed a wide-spread movement for independent political action. This movement, which was already highly developed, has been greatly intensified by the Teapot Dome exposures, showing the utter rottenness of both the old parties and the government which they administer.

The wide-spread sentiment for a Farmer-Labor Party must be crystallized organizationally. Unless the movement is given the leadership which will crystallize the isolated groups already over the country in a great Farmer-Labor Party with its own candidates and platform, fighting against the two old parties in the presidential election, the present opportunity for this step in advance toward class action will be lost, the movement dissipated and come to naught.

There must be a Farmer-Labor Party contesting the presidential election. This is the view of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party. The Party has during the last two years carried on a consistent campaign for the formation of a mass Farmer-Labor Party. It has won for itself a position of leadership thru the work done to realize this goal.

The opportunity which now exists places great responsibilities upon our Party. It is our work to crystallize the Farmer-Labor sentiment into a Farmer-Labor Party. We must furnish the leadership.

It is to meet this situation that the Central Executive Committee has asked the Party Branches to raise the Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund of $15,000—for literature, speakers and organizers in the Farmer-Labor Party Campaign.

Party Units Respond.

The request for funds left the National Office last week. Already the branches of the party are beginning to act upon the appeal and to send in their quota for the fund.

The branch having the place of honor in making the first contribution to the Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund is the Polish Branch at Hamtramck, Mich. Altho the appeal has not yet reached most of the branches, other responses have already come in. The Lithuanian Branch at Elizabeth, N. J. was second on the list. The contributions received are

Hamtramck Polish Branch	$10.00
Elizabeth, N. J., Lithuanian	5.00
Mystic, Iowa, South Slavic	9.00
Erie, Polish	1.00
Dr. Karl F. M. Sandberg	75.00

The fund is being raised in the branches thru voluntary purchase by the members of a Mass, Class Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund label. Each member of the Party is asked to place one of these labels on his dues book. Branches with up to 25 members are asked to raise at least $10.00 and branches with over 25 members $25.00.

There are now 1300 Party Branches. If each branch raises the quota requested the total asked for from the Party Branches will be easily raised.

Comrades of the Party! We are face to face with a great opportunity. In the present historical situation there could be no greater achievement for us than the crystallization in the United States thru our work and leadership of a great, mass class, Farmer-Labor Party.

YOU WILL HELP THE PARTY MEET ITS RESPONSIBILITIES AND ACHIEVE VICTORY THRU YOUR CONTRIBUTION TO THE FARMER-LABOR PARTY CAMPAIGN FUND.

TAKE UP THE QUESTION AT YOUR NEXT BRANCH MEETING. SEND IN YOUR QUOTA PROMPTLY.

HOUSE TO HOUSE CANVAS SUNDAY FOR GERMANS

Volunteers Called For By F. S. R.

Sunday, March 9, is the day set aside by the friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany for a house to house canvass on behalf of the German working class. It is an opportunity for militants to show their solidarity and friendship for the workers of Germany.

A state of famine exists in Germany, especially in the industrial and populous parts of Saxony, Thuringia, the Rhine provinces, Silesia and Berlin. These people are entirely deprived of foodstuffs.

European Workers Aiding.

The workers of other countries are doing their part. Great Britain, France, Holland, the Scandinavian countries, Italy and even Russia who has just gone thru a famine herself, are doing their part thru the International Workers' Relief Committee to bring help and courage to the hard pressed German workers.

The American workers have made a beginning in relief work for Germany. That work must now expand and speed up if we are to take our places along side of the workers in other countries who are standing by Germany's children. We, too, are a branch of the International Workers' Relief Committee and we are expected to do our share.

Dime Means a Meal.

We need volunteers for the house to house canvass to be held on March 9, Sunday. The money that comes in thru that canvass will be used to support the existing soup kitchens in Germany and to open new ones. Every dime that comes in means a meal for a hungry German child.

The American capitalists are in league with the German capitalists to starve the German workers into slavery. The American workers must send help to their German brothers to enable them to make their fight against their oppressors. It is our fight too. Lower standard of living over there will be reflected in a similar movement here. By helping Germany, you are helping yourself, too. Remember! Volunteers are needed! Sunday, March the 9th! For the House to House Canvass! Send in your name and address to the Friends of Workers Germany, Room 307, 166 W. Washington St.

White Guards in Australia.

MELBOURNE, Australia, March 2.—Contrary to the wishes of the Australian people, the anti-Labor federal government has allowed a number of Russian White Guards, with their wives and families, to enter Australia, where they propose to settle as farmers. They were formerly in the Kolchak and Denikin armies, and came to Australia by way of China.

IMPEACH COOLIDGE!

Engdahl and Dunne Speaking on Lesson from Teapot Dome

Labor's answer to the exposure of the present capitalist system of government, thru the Tea Pot Dome scandal, will be given at a mass meeting to be held in Chicago, Thursday, March 6, at Wicker Park Hall, 2040 West North avenue, 8 p. m. The speakers are: J. Louis Engdahl and William F. Dunne, both editors of the DAILY WORKER, and Arne Swabeck, District Organizer of the Workers Party.

The Tea Pot Dome steal—one of the many thieveries that take place at Washington—is just another effective proof that a capitalist government functions only in the interests of the Big Money Bags. High governmental officials, in this case, are involved and shown up as holding government positions for the purpose only of aiding Wall Street interests for bribes. This incident, coming at a time when the country is stirred up about the formation of new parties, proves that the only new party needed is a real class party of farmers and workers. The need of such a party will be explained at the meeting March 6. Admission is free and all the readers of this paper should attend and voice their protest against such governmental corruption, and show definitely that they realize the need of independent political, working class action.

Poles Who Revolted Against Tyranny May Get Life Term

The Polish government has put on trial 120 workers who took part in the revolt in Cracow in the month of December. These workers are in danger of being sentenced to prison for life altho it was the government which provoked the revolt by sending infantry and cavalry against the striking workers.

The workers of America, by their protests, can do a great deal to save their fellow workers in Poland who are in danger now. Polish workers in this country, especially, can help to free their comrades in Poland by making their voice heard on behalf of the prisoners. By their protests they will at least make it clear to the Polish consuls and the Polish ambassador in this country that they are dissatisfied with the terrorist actions of their mother country, and in this way the Polish government may learn to know the attitude of the Polish workers in this country.

Proves Bribery in Courts.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 2.—E. J. Manion, president, Order of Railroad Telegraphers, and head of the Telegraphers' labor bank here, is foreman of a grand jury which is investigating a reported system of wholesale witness tampering and bribery in St. Louis courts.

REDDING, Cal., March 2.—Persecution of the I. W. W. here continues. Men are constantly being arrested and dismissed in groups of five or ten. At this writing 11 are in jail, six on a criminal syndicalism charge.

NEARING DEBATES YALE PROFESSOR ON RUSSIAN ISSUE

Opponent's Father Was Duma Leader

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 2.—The biggest educational event that has been announced for New Haven recently will take place in Music Hall, 117 Court street, Wednesday, March 5, at 8 p. m., when Professor Scott Nearing of New York and Professor Alexander Petrunkovitch of Yale will meet in debate.

The question to be debated will be: "Shall the United States Recognize Soviet Russia?"

Prof. Nearing holds that such recognition shall take place at once. Prof. Petrunkovitch is opposed to recognition.

Fired For Radicalism.

Prof. Nearing is nationally known as a lecturer, teacher and radical. He was Instructor in Economics and Assistant Professor in the University of Pennsylvania (Wharton School); Instructor in Economics, Swarthmore College; Instructor in Sociology, Temple University; Professor of Social Science and Dean of the College of Arts and Science, Toledo University.

The universities of Pennsylvania and Toledo declared him too radical to teach in those educational institutions and he was fired—as they say in the shop.

Nearing was compelled to look for more sympathetic audiences for his message and teaching and he found such audiences among the workers and their sympathizers. Since leaving the universities he has gained a national reputation as a lecturer, teacher and debater.

Son of Russian Liberal.

Alexander Petrunkovitch is professor of Zoology in Yale. His father was one of the greatest political leaders of Russia during Czarist times. His father was one of the founders of the Constitutional Democratic Party of Russia, a party of young capitalism and opposed to the feudal aristocracy. Together with Milukoff he organized the first government in Russia after the overthrow of the Czar. This government was followed speedily by the Kerensky regime.

The elder Petrunkovitch was a member of the Russian Duma since its foundation in 1905, was the editor of "Retch," the official daily organ of his party. Prof. Petrunkovitch of Yale is considered in the country to be one of the first authorities on Russia and is the leading contributor to the Times Current History magazine in Russian matters.

The debate between these two intelectuals, one an American and for Soviet Russia, the other also an American citizen, but born in Russia and against the present government of that country, is expected to pack the hall.

Teapot and May 30 Furnish Live Topics for Boston Meet

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., March 2.—A membership meeting of the Boston local on the May 30 Convention and the Teapot Dome Scandal, proved to be the best discussion meeting that the Boston local has ever had. After the City Central Committee Secretary had read the communications from the National Office, William Simons, district organizer, discussed the oil situation, the present outlook for the May 30 Convention, and laid stress on getting resolutions passed in the various organizations. He pointed out that in Worcester, T. F. Conroy of Machinist Local 694 had placed his local on record in favor of the Convention.

Comrade Canter explained the outlook for a State Labor Party in Massachusetts, excoriating the Socialists in the Conference for Progressive Political Action for their delay in sending out the referendum decided on last October. Many other comrades took the floor, representing most of the branches in the city. It was an encouraging meeting.

Celebrate Communist Women's Day Thruout World, March 8th

Women thruout the world will celebrate International Communist Women's Day Saturday, March 8th. It is stressed, however, that this is not merely a women's affair, but the affair of the whole Communist movement.

Meetings are being arranged in all the large industrial centers thruout the United States. These will be announced in the columns of the DAILY WORKER during the week. The proclamation on International Women's Day issued by the Communist International to the Communist Parties of all countries is as follows:

Forward to Women's Day!

To the Central Committees of all Communist Parties.

DEAR COMRADES: As you know THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST WOMEN'S DAY will be observed as usual on March 8th.

The Presidium draws your attention to the fact that, in accordance with the decision of our World Congresses, this Day is in all countries THE AFFAIR OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY and not merely a "Women's affair". The Presidium expects you to honor this decision and to do your utmost to ensure the successful observance of this day by collaborating in the preparations for it with the leading women comrades in the National Women's Committee and in the Party organs engaged in communist work among women.

The general offensive of the world bourgeoisie against the proletariat (which is as strong as ever), and against the destitute and poor sections of the population, the rule of military dictatorship, fascism and white terror in many countries, the necessity to establish a united front of the exploited and oppressed, all this taken together adds to the significance of the International Communist Women's Day as a tried and excellent means to awaken wide masses of women and to make them active fighters in the revolutionary class struggle of the proletariat. The proletarian united front, of which the Communist Party is the leader, can only be complete if women workers are also drawn into the work of the establishment and organization of this front.

The Presidium is well aware of the great difficulties confronting the International Communist Women's Day in the countries where Communist Parties have been suppressed and have thus been reduced to an illegal or semi-legal existence. However, Communists never shied at difficulties, on the contrary, the greater the difficulties the greater their efforts and activities. It is just in those countries where the Communist Party is proscribed and persecuted with or without martial law, that it must make special efforts for the preparation and observance of the International Communist Women's Day. This Day must be an overwhelming proof that the Party is alive and active in spite of all prohibition and persecutions, that it maintains its stand in the midst of the enslaved and impoverished masses, suffering with them and defending their right to live, as only a true leader of the masses towards their emancipation can do.

Communist Parties, men and women comrades of all countries, recruit self-sacrificing female forces for the next great phase of the proletarian liberation struggle, for the overthrow of class domination-bourgeois dictatorship thru the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat! Do your duty, and do it joyfully! All of you who believe in Communism, from the foremost leaders of the revolutionary proletarian vanguard in every country down to the ordinary and unknown men and women, close up your ranks! Organize the International Communist Women's Day! Prepare yourselves for it! Do your utmost to ensure its success!

Dear Comrades, the Presidium is convinced that you will make this our appeal your own, and that you will do your utmost to ensure its success.

Long live the International Communist Women's Day!

Long live the struggle against the class domination of the bourgeoisie, of the propertied classes! Long live the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat!

Long live the Communist International!

With Communist Greetings,
The Presidium of the Executive of the Communist International.

FOSTER FLAYS MINER FAKERS IN LABOR HERALD

March Issue T. U. E. L. Organ Just Out

Wm. Z. Foster makes some astounding statements on the United Mine Workers, once the pride of the American Labor movement, in his article in the March issue of the Labor Herald.

He says "The Convention was undoubtedly the most reactionary held by the miners in twenty years."

Proving it makes a most interesting story. The fight on the resolution to appoint organizers drove the machine to spend $1,000 in telegrams to secure aid from officials in all surrounding coal fields.

The steam roller, and every trick, fair or foul, had to be used according to the author, to maintain the existing power. The influence of the Ku Klux Klan, the fight on the Howatt case, the disregard of a member of the President's Cabinet and the influence of the DAILY WORKER in this convention, make interesting and important reading. No one interested in the progress of labor and the retarding reactionary leadership should miss the details of this story.

This outstanding article does not complete the value of this number.

Moissaye Olgin's article, "Lenin," measures up to the high standard articles of this important contributor. An article on the Needle Trades Conference by I. L. Davidson is another valuable contribution. There is a summary of world labor to keep the busy militant well posted on every phase of labor's progress.

A splendid article on "Labor in China," a photograph of Lenin you will want for your album and a cover drawing by Ellis—among other features, make the March issue of the Labor Herald a worthy organ of the militant T. U. E. L.

'Recognize Russia,' Cries Dudley Field Malone in Frisco

(By The Federated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Mar. 2.—"One does not have to be either a Communist or a capitalist in order to urge our government promptly to recognize the unconquered government of Russia. We should promptly open trade relations and send into Russia 3,000,000 plows and tractors with men to teach their use. Our policy toward Russia has been based on fears which are unworthy of a great people. It is the devastating emotion of fear which has produced the Ku Klux Klan's intolerance at home and supported the intolerance of our foreign policies abroad," said Dudley Field Malone, addressing the Public Spirit club here.

"We must join forces with the great people of Russia, and help toward bringing into the world a new order of co-operation and justice."

Immigrants from America Leaving for Russian Farms

Thirty-two members of the agricultural commune Red Ray are now on their way to Odessa, Russia. They have been granted land by the government. Fifteen members of the commune had left previously. Another part of the commune will leave two months later. Every group is carrying agricultural machinery.

Three delegates from the dairy and poultry commune Herald left this city for Moscow on invitation of the Russian government to select land for a dairy and chicken farm.

May 30 Convention Urged by Unionists of Massachusetts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WORCESTER, Mass., March 2.—Machinists Local Union 694 went on record in favor of the holding of the May 30th Convention, pointing out that now more than ever is the need for such a party manifest. The members were much influenced by the Teapot storm which has already politically buried many prominent politicians in either capitalist camp, under an oil pool. Convinced that labor could hope for nothing from the capitalist parties, Local 694 pledged its support to the Convention.

CANADIAN CALLS DAILY WORKER THE 'BEST EVER'

Jars Ideas Loose, Is Another Comment

The DAILY WORKER staff never get tired of reading letters from readers telling what they think of their paper. Maybe that is because the people who write in to us seldom fail to praise the paper.

The workers of Canada and other parts of America believe that the DAILY WORKER is as much theirs as do the workers in this country. Here is part of a letter from a Canadian worker: "The DAILY WORKER is the best working class paper I ever saw here or anywhere else. You produce the paper; it is up to your readers to get the subscribers. Here is a new one."—S. F. M. Edmonton, Alberta.

• • • •

"My copy of the DAILY WORKER is read regularly by six or seven workers. That doesn't leave them in very good condition for filing. Send me No. 324 and No. 325 and I will be able to complete my file. I want to keep all issues of the DAILY WORKER."—Jim Lacey, Roxbury, Mass.

• • • •

"You are certainly getting out a good paper. It has the ring of militancy which should appeal to every worker who reads it. You are doing a nice job on the oil crew."—J. S., Annona, Tex.

• • • •

"I like the paper fine. It sure ought to jar them loose from a few old ideas."—W. A. W., Centerville, Iowa.

"That issue of Feb. 8, was a hum dinger. Send me about a dozen copies."—Louis Surkert, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Alcohol Scandal Rocks Government of Czecho-Slovakia

By FRITZ KREJCUI.
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

PARIS, March 2.—Czecho-Slovakia's political foundation has received a shakeup thru a reeking scandal, this time involving alcohol, not oil. The president of the senate, Karl Prashek, member of the Landowners' Party, was also president of the Association of Alcohol Burners. This association is shown to have collected and spent $3,000,000 for corrupt purposes, chiefly to bribe leaders of political parties to pass laws favoring the alcohol industries.

When the sensation was revealed, the president of the republic, Masaryk, refused to receive the compromised president of the senate. Prashek resigned. But he retains a strong weapon in his knowledge of the names of political leaders who received their share of the $3,000,000 booty.

Thru this knowledge—or blackmail, if you prefer—Prashek and his agrarian followers are receiving far-reaching political and economic concessions for the well-to-do farmers. It is even rumored that the parliament will pass an agrarian tariff—protecting native grain producers at the expense of consumers—owing to the pressure which Prashek is able to exert upon his political rivals.

If Washington has scorched its fingers in the oil conflagration, the sudden explosion of the alcohol dome in Czecho-Slovakia has caused no smaller upheaval in that country. The credit of the old political parties in the Czech republic is badly scathed. Indications are, however, that Hindriska Dubbovitch, of Prague, is learning his lesson more effectively than Henry Dubb, of Pittsburgh, and points west.

$15,000,000 Back Pay Case Appealed by R. R. Shop Unions

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 2.—The Federated Press learns that the six leading shopcrafts, whose suit for $15,000,000 "back pay" against the Pennsylvania railroad was dismissed in Federal court at Philadelphia early this month, have filed an appeal which will probably be heard during the March term of the Appellate court in the Quaker City.

The men's action is intended to obtain an injunction against the railroad magnates, who brazenly disregarded the decision of the U. S. Railroad Labor Board and whose tactics were upheld by Federal Judge Dickinson on Feb. 5. The System Federation, which is contesting the issue for the workers, represents 60,000 laborers.

Rockford Mayor Runs on Platform of Public Ownership

(By The Federated Press)

ROCKFORD, Ill., Mar. 2.—Municipal ownership of an electric light plant, direct employment of labor by the city for all public work, home rule and free speech are among the principal planks of the labor platform in the Rockford municipal election this spring. Mayor J. Herman Hallstrom is serving his second term as the nominee of labor. The campaign is being managed by the Winnebago County Labor legion, the organization that put Hallstrom across at previous elections. Membership in this legion is confined to workers and those who sympathize with workers' aims.

BROCKTON STRIKE CASES TRIED BY SHOE CO. JUDGES

167 Cases Left from the Big Strike

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BROCKTON, Mass., Mar. 2.—Today, the cases of the Brockton strikers are before the state supreme court. The cases developed from the revolt of 15,000 shoe workers against the inhuman decisions of the State Board of Arbitration last May, against the manufacturers, and against the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, which assented to the award.

During the eighth week of the strike, their "fellow worker" (sic), a former shoe worker, upon whose support they relied implicitly, declared the strike illegal. The defiant strikers went on the picket line, and 141 were arrested, under an obsolete law against loitering passed in 1899, aimed at street walkers. In all, there are 167 cases, the remainder being on assault and battery, and disturbance of the peace charges. Assault and battery is the charge placed against those who got in the way of the cops and were beaten up.

The cases were originally held over for the supreme court in October, but a mayoralty election was coming in December, so for political reasons the trials were put off until 1924.

Refused To Compromise.

At a meeting of the strikers held a week ago Sunday, Attorney Geoghan stated that Assistant District Attorney Williams was willing to accept a fine of $5, from those arrested for loitering, provided they pleaded guilty. The original fine was $10, and it was from this that an appeal was taken. For the others, half the fine would be accepted, except for a few of whom an example must be made by a jail sentence.

To plead guilty meant to acknowledge that they had no right to strike, that they were satisfied with a state of involuntary servitude, that they were quitters. This the men resolved never to do; rather than plead guilty, they would go to jail.

The judges sitting in the case are hostile to labor, Judge Avery of Quincy, hearing the smaller cases, being one of the most reactionary. The bench is controlled by the shoe manufacturers. The original court sentence, in fact, was imposed by Judge Rowe, whose brother belongs to a shoe firm. The other public officials are likewise controlled.

Mayor No Friend.

The present Mayor, Bullivant, was elected by the strikers, but does nothing for them. Even before election, he campaigned for law and order. Manning, who was licked, howled against the Bolshevists, the strikers, waving the American flag, and damning the red one. No candidate advocated the strikers' cause; but the workers, instead of putting up their own candidate on their own program, went out to lick Manning. Manning was licked, but Bullivant was elected and the interests of labor were not advanced one whit.

The defense of the strikers is being handled by the Brockton Labor Defense Council, an organization which confines its activities solely to the Brockton strike cases. The address is 51 Main street, Brockton, Mass.

Conclusion of Kamenev's Speech Before Moscow Communists

NOTE.—The DAILY WORKER today publishes the conclusion of Kamenev's great speech to the Moscow district convention of the Russian Communist Party. The struggle within the party, which was exaggerated and perverted by the paid liars of the capitalist press into a civil war, with the minority and the majority leading armies against each other, can only be understood from reading this speech and those that will follow. We advise you not to miss a single issue of the DAILY WORKER as we will publish each day a portion of the discussion. Kamenev's speech continued from last Saturday's issue follows:

* * * *

KAMENEV SAID.

I am of the opinion that when a member of the Party is in doubt about anything, he should apply to his organization, discuss the matter there, and try to gain a majority, but all within the confines of the Party. But if he goes to other people, or to comrades belonging to quite a different party, then he commits a crime. We know very well that there are many comrades engaged especially in the formation of groups.

We have nothing against differences of opinion. Let us assume that differences of opinion arise amongst us today with regard to this or that decree, or this or that enactment. The comrades meet and debate. Thus, for instance, the question of currency reform is on the agenda, a question of essential importance for the whole Soviet power and for the Party. Perhaps there is a group of comrades who are not in agreement with the manner in which this reform is to be carried out. But this is an accidental difference of opinion, subject to discussion in the Party.

Treading On Dangerous Ground.

But when these same comrades, after being united all these years on one and the same platform, now come to us and say that they are not in agreement with us at all, and that they can form a group complete in itself, then they must permit us, who are no infants in political experience, to say that we do not believe this. We say to them: You are treading on dangerous ground, on ground forbidden by the Congress. We tell you this because we are well aware how factions come into being, and how they pursue their aims. We ourselves once formed a faction; for 20 years we were a faction in the Russian Social Democratic Workers Party, and we were deliberately a faction, for we intended to conquer power by these means, and we have carried out our purpose.

We split off from the Mensheviki, and made our Party into a complete whole in itself. If we are to solve the present question, we must state openly what a faction leads to and what is the result of the formation of groups. We have a very different conception of the structure of the Party to that held by those comrades who stand for the liberty to form groups. There exist two forms of party groupings: let us take the Menshevist party, with which we long lived in close affinity, and which we got to know thru and thru—and our faction, the Bolsheviki. What is the difference between these? The difference consisted of the fact that we were a centralized organization of the shock troops of the revolution, united down to the last man on our ideological basis.

Necessity of United Action.

And what were the Mensheviki? They were a coalition of various shades, of various groupings. This was the Menshevist organization, and this is why they succumbed in internal party struggles. We stood as a united organization, and they as a coalition of differing shades and groupings. It was not for nothing that Comrade Lenin named the Mensheviki the heroes of petty reservations. If we have an organization in which one section is opposed to another, it is only natural that each group will make reservations with respect to the other. I am afraid that Comrade Preobrashensky will make reservations with regard to Comrade Sapronov, and that Comrade Sapronov will do the same with regard to Comrade Ossinsky.

Comrades, I ask you what you really want. Do you want a firmly welded fighting-organization, with all the inner democracy possessed by the Party, or are you trying to transform our Party into a coalition of groups, of small groupings and shades of opinion? This is a luxury which we cannot permit ourselves. And we are of the opinion that the Party would drive away, with a hangman's rope, and before the next congress, any Central bringing the Party into such a condition. Such a degeneration of the Party would signify its complete defeat on the field of real state power. It must be our endeavor to perform the necessary evolution in mutual agreement, and in such a manner as to lose as little as possible by it. But should anyone seek to utilize this evolution for the purpose of introducing into our conception of things, that which formed the essential character of the Menhevist party, then, comrades, you must permit us to call a halt. That is something which we shall not allow.

Party Apparatus.

Neither shall we allow that which we have heard and felt at the district meetings. The question of the Party apparatus was brought up at all these meetings. The favorable opportunity is to be seized upon when the Party admits that errors have been committed, that there have been "appointment experts," that stupidities have been committed. This is the moment for those comrades who have been drumming at the door for three years to come and say: "Now then, down with the apparatus." If the necessary transition which we are endeavoring to carry out is to be utilized for the purpose of inciting one section of the Party against another—that means overstepping the limit and risking a broken neck.

What is our Party apparatus? According to information I have received from the Central, 20,000 comrades are working in the Party apparatus. I do not know whether that is many or few. But I know that a much larger number of apparatus workers are employed in our people's commissariats. But if 20,000 out of 400,000 Party members are absorbed by what we call the Party apparatus, this has been brought about by necessity. The question is, therefore: what are we to do with this apparatus; is it of any use for anything, or does it consist of a selection of members who should be hunted out of the Party? I maintain that this apparatus should be renewed, that the faults of the apparatus should be removed by our common efforts—but if the slogan is issued: "Down with the Party apparatus," then we shall have to be careful indeed not to destroy the whole apparatus of the government by such a slogan, and careful again not to injure the actual framework of the whole Party, by the aid of which the Party has been working up to now along the lines upon which it had to work.

Is it possible to accomplish those state duties incumbent on the Party without the help of this apparatus? You forget that we, with you, are carrying on work which is three-fourths state work—or are you going to believe those who tell you that the Party should occupy itself with its own affairs, and the state with state affairs. There are people who will say this. It is a false political conclusion. In our agrarian country, with our number of proletarians, with our state apparatus, and under the NEP, it must not be forgotten that Comrade Lenin placed this apparatus on a sound basis, and that we Communists, as a Party, are faced with this enormous task of purely state work.

Require Centralized Apparatus.

The slogan, "dismissal of the apparatus men from their posts," were employed by us Bolsheviki against the Mensheviki, because we wanted to destroy this party.

It must be remembered that we require a mighty centralized apparatus. The apparatus which we possess is bad. It commits errors, just as all our Party members do. And those Party members who have been placed in responsible positions by the Party, the economists, the co-operators—do they not make mistakes too? To be sure they do. But the errors which really concern the Party, our mistakes which effect the actual body of the Party, these cut much more deeply. As a general rule, however, the Party apparatus has carried out the policy dictated it by the Central.

The apparatus is a tool, an instrument, and if you are not going to admit that the apparatus has carried out its policy, if you are going to undermine the general policy by the slogan of: "Dismissal of the old apparatus-men from their posts," then the Party will not permit this. It will renew its apparatus systematically, and cure its diseases. Therefore, the Party advises: "Renew the Party apparatus systematically at every new election, and choose comrades and workers capable of carrying out the workers' democracy."

Cannot Permit Groupings.

In conclusion, I should like to put one more question to myself and to you: Here we have a resolution and a historical turning point, which are in themselves naturally not of such essential importance as the change of tactics involved in the NEP. We have afforded the guarantee that the change implied in this resolution is going to be carried out with the smallest possible detriment to the Party, and the question as to what is going to be done towards the execution of the Central's decisions can be answered perfectly clearly: "Party life is to be renewed from top to bottom, all questions of a political and economic character are to be submitted to debate among the broad lower strata of the Party; our apparatus is to be systematically renewed at the new elections; comrades are to be elected and not appointed. Thus the resolution of the Central can be carried out." But what must not be allowed to happen is the following: at this critical turning point no groupings must be permitted, whether factional or other groups; no one section of the Party must be incited against another; the evolution being performed by the Party must not be converted into a concealed struggle for power within the Party. Then we shall fulfill our task. If we prove too weak to offer resistance against those who are at present trying to play off the Party against itself; if we are not firm enough in this respect, then we shall be criminals in the eyes of the whole Party and of the next Party conference. I am profoundly convinced that the Moscow organization will not commit this error, that it will dare everything, will discuss the whole criticism thoroly in its nuclei, and will finally, with all determination and caution, and with due observation of the old Bolshevist discipline and the old Bolshevist ideology, perform the necessary evolution, and not permit anyone to hinder it in doing so.

U. S. BRICKLAYER IS SPEED MODEL FOR LEVERHULME

Australians Four Times Slower, He Says

SYDNEY, Australia, March 2.—Lord Leverhulme, the British soap-king, told members of the Employers' Federation at an entertainment in his honor that employers did not exploit the workers, but that the workers exploited the bosses. This raised thunderous cheers from the capitalists present.

He was again cheered when he asserted that in America bricklayers laid four times as many bricks as in Australia, and urged that local employers should not put up with what he called the dictation of Union officials.

No Profits!

He made the astounding assertion—though he was careful to add that he could not prove it—that if the profits of industry were set against the losses, the net return from industry would not do more than give mortgage rental on the capital invested.

He forgot, however, to advance a reason why the bosses continued to engage in industry when, according to his assertion, they could get the same return by simply investing their money in mortgages.

Another remark by Leverhulme that was roundly applauded by the bosses was that increased production did not benefit the boss alone. It merely helped him to buy more stock, increase his machinery, and give more employment. He added that his antidote for unemployment was more production.

Leverhulme, however, made one statement that did not meet with the approval of the local bosses. He said that it was necessary that governments should have control over industries, but that they must also see that human greed did not exceed human brotherhood. The local bosses did not cheer that remark, while the leading capitalistic news-sheets of Sydney failed to report it.

Union Organizer Nails Lie.

Jack Kilburn, organizer of the Bricklayers' Union branded Leverhulme's statement about the 4 to 1 speed of the American mechanic over the Australian's as a gross absurdity.

What reduced output does exist, Kilburn said, is due to the irritating tactics of employers. He added that if the soap king really wishes facts he should come to the Trades Hall and get them.

Quiet Dreamy Music Soothed Sensitive Ears at Symphony Orchestra

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Dreams, and a quiet, restful mood dominated the concert of the Chicago Symphony orchestra at Orchestra Hall last Friday and Saturday. The concert opened with an arrangement of a Bach toccata, which was almost the only bit of dramatic and brilliant music on the program.

The soloist, Claire Dux, sang a love song by Mozart, with a string bass obbligato played by Mr. Jiskra, the solo bass player of the orchestra. The aria is typical Mozart, the gentle music of a sensitive man. The bass obbligato did not seem particularly effective, not because Mr. Jiskra did not play it perfectly, but because the music itself, written high up in the range of the instrument, was not of the kind suited to the string bass.

Then followed Gustav Mahler's fourth symphony. One generally associates the name of Mahler with a deep, philosophical kind of music, but this symphony is delightfully different. It is a sort of glorified fairy tale in four movements. It has all the whimsicality and charm of a book of German folk stories. The second movement is one of the few bits of music that actually has a real hypnotic effect. And in the last movement is a soprano solo, sung by Miss Dux in a way that will long be remembered as one of the highest points in the season.

Two excerpts from Franz Schreker's opera "The Treasure Seeker" opened the second half of the program. The introduction to the third act is a grim study in musical horror, while the lullaby, which Miss Dux sang, is a quiet and lovely calm picture.

Two compositions by the Frenchman, Satie, followed. Eric Satie, tho a modernist in every respect, frequently takes an ancient Greek subject. The pieces played at this concert, called "Gymnopedies," deal with a Spartan war festival, the Gymnopedia, but there is little in them suggestive of a martial celebration. They are mystical and exotic compositions, like modern French nocturnes.

Claire Dux again displayed her wonderful voice in a aria from Bizet's "Pearl Fishers". Once more the music induced a revery, and a quiet mood.

The program wound up with a good and lively piece of operatic music called "The Harvest Festival", by Max Schillings, director of the Berlin opera, who is at present in America.

Jacques Gordon and Alfred Wallenstein, first violin and first cello respectively, of the Symphony orchestra, are scheduled to play a double concerto by Brahms on the program for next week. Besides this, there will be the "Academic Festival" overture of Brahms, a Negro rhapsody by Goldmark, and selections from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde".

Labor Man Goes to Hungary.

BUDAPEST, March 2.—Thomas Hohler, British minister to Hungary, has been recalled by Ramsay MacDonald and is to be replaced by a labor man. This move is said to be a gesture of protest against the white terror still obtaining in Hungary. Hohler is said to be an intimate friend of the usurper, Admiral Horthy, who in his reports to London systematically denied the existence of a white terror.

VICE REIGNS IN MISSOURI REFORMATORY

Dope Sold to Inmates; Abused by Officials

By MARTIN A. DILLMON.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, Mar. 2.—The youthful inmates of the Missouri state reformatory at Boonville "are the victims of a system as rotten as hell itself." The institution "is so seriously hampered and handicapped by a spoils system of administration that the condition of the institution, from the standpoint of effective work in the reclaiming of wayward and delinquent boys and young men, is far below reasonably attainable standards." Such is the indictment contained in the annual report, state board of charities and correction.

Commenting on the report, Homer Talbot, former secretary of the board who resigned recently, says: "The reformatory is so rotten now that it is hard to see how it could be worse. These unfortunate boys are being used as pawns on a political chess board. The administration of the institution is being prostituted for political purposes."

Talbot, a Republican, charges that Superintendent Harrison of the reformatory has dismissed efficient employes because they were Democrats, and in their stead employed incompetents because they were "good Republicans." A. C. Blackey, former superintendent, who it is alleged, was removed because he was not "right" politically, supplements Talbot's charges with the following:

An employe made wine from grapes taken from the reformatory's vineyard, but denied any of the wine was used. Others testified 20 gallons were drunk before the plant was discovered. The housekeeper said inmates periodically carried large sack-fulls of empty whisky bottles from officers' rooms. An officer (a Republican) of the institution said 20 boys inmates had confessed they were given "dope" and then subjected to abuses by the older inmates.

Inmates roamed the streets of Boonville after dark, insulting women and girls and robbing stores and residences.

"These are only a few of the things that are wrong with the reformatory," Blakey adds. "I think that political control of the institution is a damnable thing and should be fought as responsible for just such conditions."

The reformatory is largely under control of Governor Hyde. It is significant that Hyde made his campaign for election on a house cleaning platform. He won many votes on his pretenses as a friend of labor, and later sent state troops against the striking railway shopmen.

Workers Party Is Starting Polish Paper, March 8th

The Polish Section of the Workers Party will begin publishing a weekly newspaper "Trybuna Robotniczo" (Workers' Tribune), on March 8.

The subscription rate of the "Trybuna Robotniczo" is: One year, $2.00; 6 months, $1.25; three months, 75c. Single copies are 5c. Send all subscriptions and contributions to "Trybuna Robotnicza," 1009 North State St., Chicago, Ill.

"The Polish daily, 'Glos Robotniczy,' published in Detroit, which was considered as a fraternal paper of our party and of the Communist movement, has recently changed its policy and is printing attacks upon and slanders against our party," says a statement by the Central Executive committee of the Workers Party. "It declares itself in opposition to the principles and tactics of the party and of the Polish Section.

"Every effort has been made by the representatives of the Polish Bureau to have the persons now controlling this paper to refrain and come to some friendly agreement with the Polish Section and the Party. In view of the fact that these efforts have brought no results and the 'Glos Robotniczy' continues its campaign of slanders and misrepresentations of the Party, the Central Executive Committee declares that the 'Glos Robotniczy' is not worthy of any moral or financial support by friends of the Communist movement in the United States.

"It also calls attention to the fact that the persons controlling this paper are also the leading element in the organization known as the International Publishing Association, and that this organization has no connection with the Workers Party and its attitude is hostile to the Party."

Reader Thinks Dome Scandal Is None of Our Business

To the DAILY WORKER—Does it ever occur to you: That the great efforts now made to liberate prisoners of war out of the penitentiary of Leavenworth has an economic aspect, as hardy, developed bodies can be of great service to produce profits for some of the pals of these foremost citizens. That is a whole lot better than paying for their keep.

Does it ever occur to you that: The Tea Pot Dome oil exposure is none of your business, as it only concerns those who share in the booty. Does it not plainly show that officialdom represents only those who really control. Why don't they concern themselves with housing conditions? That is your business.

Does it ever occur to you: That the street car system of either elevated, surface or subway are to the people what the elevators in big office buildings or in department stores are to the owners thereof. To promote the general welfare of the people, no pecuniary profits should flow to anyone, or any set of men.

Does it ever occur to you: That our constitution was written for the purpose of protecting to us the rights of Life, Liberty and Pursuit of happiness, would it read Life, Liberty and undisturbed pursuit of dough by office holders, it would be just right.

ILLINOIS MINERS JOINING BATTLE FOR FOREIGN BORN

Davis Laws and Klan The Issues

(Special to The Daily Worker)

JOHNSTON CITY, [illegible] 2.—Councils for the [illegible] of Foreign Born are forming in the mining towns of southern Illinois where so many of the workers are of European extraction.

Johnson City's new council will hold a big mass meeting March 9 to protest against the selective immigration bills now pending in Congress. F. R. Sullivan of St. Louis will be the principal speaker.

To Fight K. K. K.

Another organization, called the Alien Protective League, has been organized for the purpose of resisting the attacks which the Ku Klux Klan makes on the foreign born. The new society will make the Klan a big issue in the April election. Bootleggers and gamblers are barred from membership.

The local Slovakian National Benefit Society has protested to Washington against the enactment of any special legislation against the foreign born and condemns categorically the bills in the interest of business on selective immigration. The national organization, with headquarters in Chicago, and with a membership of 50,000, is urged to send in a similar protest.

The Slovonian society points out that the Croation National Benefit Society, with offices at Pittsburgh, has sent in a ringing protest.

West Frankfort Council.

West Frankfort is forming a council for the Protection of the Foreign Born now. At a recent meeting a committee of six was chosen to arrange mass meetings and organize other protests.

Other mining towns are forming councils of this kind. The miners are aroused by the strike-breaking character of the Davis bills, which would compel every one of the millions of foreign born workers to register with the authorities who would work for his deportation if he stood up for the rights of his class.

Belleville German Relief.

The Central Labor Council of Belleville has formed a committee for the relief of the German workers. Relief will be sent in equal portions thru the Protestant and Catholic Church committee and the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers Germany. Most of the unions are assessing their members ten cents each. Contributions are also being made from local union treasuries and many individuals are giving generously.

Fight the Blacklist.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., March 2.—The iron trades unions have issued protests against the action of employers in ordering men seeking work to fill out questionnaire forms giving minute details concerning themselves, such as religion, membership in fraternity societies, unions, how many children, whether they own their own homes, what schools they attended as youngsters, what jobs they worked at, etc.

AMALGAMATED WON 44 HOURS FOR BELLEVILLE

A. F. of L. Council Is Glad for Aid

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BELLEVILLE, Ill., March 2.—Belleville one of the best organized cities in Illinois, suddenly woke up to the fact that the pants makers of that city were working under sweatshop conditions, working 12 and 14 hours per day for wages ranging as low as $9.00 per week.

The situation came to a climax when one of the girls failed to come home for supper. Her father went to the factory and found she had been locked in and was being compelled to do a certain amount of work before being allowed to go home.

United Fails.

This condition was brought to the attention of the Central Labor Council, which took immediate action, writing to the United Garment Workers, asking them to send in an organizer, assuring them the support of the council. No action was taken by the United Garment Workers, so they invited the Amalgamated Clothing Workers to send in their organizer.

Immediately the owner of the factory became alarmed and threatened to move the factory to another town. The answer of the Central Labor Council to this threat was to ask the unions of Belleville to give the Amalgamated Clothing Workers their moral and financial assistance.

Amalgamated Wins Men.

The Amalgamated sent in a number of organizers, who held a meeting with a few of the leaders in the factory. The next day a lock-out was declared. The Amalgamated on behalf of the girls, put in a demand for the 44-hour week, recognition of the union, and the adjustment of prices.

They gave all the workers strike benefits, whether they belonged to the union or not. The factory was tied up 100% and remained so until the settlement of the strike.

The last attempt to break up the united front of the workers was made by a representative of the Board of Trade who appeared before the Central Labor Council, and tried to get them to withdraw their support from the Amalgamated Garment Workers on the grounds that they were not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and did not carry the union label.

He was taken aback when one of the delegates showed him the A. C. W. union label, and capitulated completely when the Central Labor Council passed a resolution which will be sent to the Illinois convention of the United Mine Workers of America, asking them to use their influence with the American Federation of Labor to have the Amalgamated Clothing Workers recognized in preference to the United Garment Workers.

Union Conditions.

An agreement has been entered into by the Amalgamated, which establishes for the first time in this factory, the rights of the workers to have some say as to their wages and working conditions. The recognition of the union and the 44-hour week has been established.

From now on no one but members of the Amalgamated can be hired. An adjustment on prices has been made. The wages and conditions are by no means the best, but as one girl puts it, we did not win the world with our little strike, but we won the opportunity to develop and from now on watch our smoke.

The Day We Celebrate

The revolutionary workers of the world whose minds are set on the achievement of a change from the present system of exploitation of the workers by the capitalists to one where all the people shall be producers and all class divisions disappear under the golden era of Communism, celebrate March 5th as the fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Communist International, the guiding hand and the inspiration of the world revolutionary movement.

Founded at a moment when the fires of revolt swept thru Europe and the working class, under the lash of necessity were ready to burst their chains and establish their own rule upon the ashes of capitalist imperialism, only to find themselves hampered and betrayed by their renegade leaders, the false prophets of socialism, the Communist International rallied together the scattered forces of the revolutionary proletariat and built up a real world power, cohesive and disciplined, that recognizes only one enemy, capitalism, and has only one loyalty, the emancipation of the working class from capitalist rule.

In every country of any importance a section of the Communist International today has its being. While demoralization has wrecked and shattered the ranks of the traitorous yellow socialists, the battalions of Communism are every day gaining in power. The Second International is no more. Ashamed to see its face in the social mirror it slunk away into a corner and emerged with a new name but with the same brand of Cain on its brow. The King's ministers and the murderers of the revolutionary workers who composed its leadership sit with the capitalist rulers and act as their shock troops in their efforts to salvage the dying capitalist order.

But the scavengers of capitalism are being exposed to the workers as betrayers, the new Communist leadership is coming into its own. The great Soviet Republic of Russia, covering one-sixth of the earth's surface, is under its banner, the masses of the workers in Europe are followng its lead. As the topheavy structure of capitalism sways on its rotten foundation, the masses look around for guidance thru the critical hour when evolution gives birth to a new order, and their eyes fall on the disciplined, determined Communist parties, that rally them under the slogan of the rule of the exploited workers and farmers thru the dictatorship of the proletariat.

The DAILY WORKER, the only Communist daily in the English language, greets the Communist International on its fifth anniversary and calls on the workers of the United States to celebrate March 5, which marks the day on which there came into existence the world force destined to lead the oppressed masses of the world to freedom.

Long live the Communist International!

"Our Government"

The dollar patriots and unadulterated Americans will soon celebrate another great victory. And they will have good cause to do so.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is about to issue an order, under Section 28 of the Merchant Marine Act, that all freight carried in United States vessels is to be granted lower railroad rates. Those who will ship in American bottoms will have to pay less for their railroad freight than those who don't choose to help American capitalist shipping interests. The latter will be penalized and will pay higher rail freight rates.

Let us rejoice now that this great boost will be given to "our" merchant marine! Once more the American flag of commerce will rule the waves—and also waive the rules. But before we do any rejoicing at this great glory to be garnered by our mighty Republic, it would not be out of place to ask a few questions.

Admittedly this is a roundabout way by means of which the shipping interests are to be given the fabulous bonus that Congress refused them last year. Apparently the centralization of government in this country has made such great headway that what the legislative department of our State, the nearest to the masses, refuses to do, the executive department, here the Interstate Commerce Commission, the furthest away from the masses, can do with ease and without incurring the opposition of the people.

Yet, where is all the noise about paternalizing that the capitalists usually emit when a request for help for needy workers is made upon the government?

Where are all the arguments against the destruction of individual initiative that are showered upon us when we ask the government to help workers who are out of jobs and out of hope?

Where are all the times of legal precedents going to be hidden, the ponderous law books that thunder against interference with the sanctity of freedom of contract? No one will deny that this ruling very definitely writes the shipping contracts and compels the acceptance of certain shippers in preference to others.

Why doesn't the government reduce the freight rates for the bankrupt farmers, but rushes to the rescue of the millionaire ship owners?

Why doesn't the government grant a bonus to the ex-soldier masses who bled and fought for the safety of dollar democracy, but, thru a back door, fills the coffers of our shipping lords with hundreds of millions of dollars?

Why is it paternalism, a menace to individual initiative, a violation of the sanctity of freedom of contract, and against the constitution when the government is called upon to help the needy workers, but not so and even declared to be in the interest of the country when the government squanders billions of dollars on the wealthy capitalists?

The answer is this: "Our" government is not ours. It is not owned by the working and farming classes. "Our" government is owned body and soul, outright, by our capitalist exploiters.

A Frank Confession

It is very seldom that the militarists and capitalist imperialists are frank enough to confess the guiding purpose of all their plans veiled by national honor, historical destiny and such other pure cant peddled by our rulers.

At the hearings on Philippine independence conducted by the House Committee on Insular Affairs, Secretary of War Weeks ripped the mask off his ugly imperial face and told the truth about our lofty interest in the "backward" islands. Mr. Weeks who is associated with Hornblower and Weeks, one of the biggest banking institutions in the country, told the Committee that America couldn't get out of the Philippines unless the scores of millions of dollars of Filipino bonds held by American investors are guaranteed payment.

We do not want to appear too suspicious. We do not want to inquire about the extent to which our Secretary of War and his banking clique own these bonds, tho we feel that a congressional investigation might shed some welcome light on this rather interesting problem. Still we do know that the farmers, the workers, and the great mass of people in general do not own one cent of these investments and haven't the slightest interest in maintaining American domination of the Islands. On the contrary, experience has taught us that the most fundamental interests of our exploited masses demand an immediate withdrawal from the Philippines of our military forces and imperial gangmen of the type of the labor-hating General Wood and his militarist cabinet.

This frank confession of our Secretary of War Weeks should inspire our workers to demand that Wall Street and its Coolidge government get out of the Philippines and allow the brave Filipino people to have their national freedom. This frank confession should serve as a lightning-rod to the farmers and workers to get into the fight to end the mad rush of our exploiters toward world domination. It is in our own interest, in the interest of our very security and peace, that Weeks and Wood and their whole coterie of imperialist looters should be driven to cover.

White House Pipelines

Many have been wondering when "Cautious Cal" Coolidge will be thrown into the oil well. In these days of uncoveries and discoveries it is a huge surprise to find the landlord of the White House not bedraggled with the national slime in the world's greatest oil center.

But now the surprise has been completely thrown over the brink of political ruin. Even so hard-boiled a waterfront politician as the Puritanic Coolidge could not long avoid the fatal shampoo now being administered to our political gods. At last the President has had his head washed. At last the Sinclair-Doheny pipelines to the White House have been discovered.

Of course it was commonplace for sometime amongst those who have had their hands on the pulse of our national body-politic that Coolidge was not as pure as the volume of his pretensions might tend to indicate to the innocent. For instance, Coolidge was a member of the cabinet when the leases were aired. The Chief Executive presided over the Senate when La Follette first introduced his now historic resolution that turned a tempest in a Teapot into a veritable earthquake. Yet, we held our breath and said let's wait. Our patience has been rewarded.

Let the chief explainer Coolidge explain why McLean sought "easy and quick access to the White House."

Let Coolidge do a bit more bluffing to befuddle the minds of the flock as to why Mr. Smithers, the chief White House telegrapher, was McLean's favorite operator—and why this chosen wire-puller "liked the job"? Above all, why did the first secret service man of the White House monkey around with McLean at Palm Beach?

The pipe lines of oil lead straight into Coolidge's chambers. Let Coolidge invite himself to the Teapot committee.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Last issue brings the startling news that Serezha Surikov, a chekist had been buried alive by counter-revolutionists, far out on the Steppes. Klimin and Stalmakhov talk of their friend who was too sensitive and tender hearted for the stern work of the revolution. In this issue, Klimin reads a farewell letter from Surikov, written before his capture by the enemy.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

"LISTEN, Aniuta" . . . for the first time he called her by her name and she blushed with happiness and emotion . . . "don't ask me, don't pay any attention. . . . It's stupid, but I feel as if something were hanging over us all. A fellow can work, work like the devil, but . . . you can't keep track of everything. With me it's just a feeling, but one Chekist, a very clever, sharp fellow, has been insisting all this week that there is some plot in the town which we have not yet discovered. And you know, to tell the truth, I am afraid of something. . . ."

She was already sitting beside him.

"Klimin, you have overworked, you have simply overworked yourself and are tired out. You want freshening up. When the fuel-getting is over, go off for a visit to Moscow. You'll come back and get to work again with new strength. I judge by myself. I dawdled about in Moscow for nearly two months, was at two congresses, talked with comrades from abroad heard Ilyitch (Lenin), Lunacharsky, and, do you know, I got homesick for our little town, for our litle work, and now am getting down to it again with satisfaction.

"You can't do what we have to do at a single sitting, and these moments of rest are inevitable. . . . I know, many think, there's Simkova, hard as flint, always full of energy and free from doubts. Not long ago a comrade from the Politdep said that to me, you probably know him . . . Martuinov.

"I said nothing, of course, because the weak should always know and feel that some one is stronger than they, but, inside myself, I laughed. If that Martuinov only knew how doubtful I can sometimes be. . . .

"On the way here, I travelled from station to station, and everywhere, on the station, in the wagons, everywhere the same picture, the same complaints, and you could not help seeing how the people are suffering.

"At one railway station there was a sort of big staircase, and from top to bottom it was covered with people. Men, women, children lying on the steps, together with their pitiable dirty belongings, and on all their faces thin spider's webs of wrinkles of care and misery, under a veil of many days' dirt. And close by in the buffet there was a speculator eating cakes while a hungry homeless little boy watched his mouth greedily, and, when he was given something for charity, went down on the floor to count the dirty scraps of paper money to see if he had enough for cigarettes. And down that terrible staircase, stepping carefully, squeamishly . . . . squeamishly is the word . . . came some smart Commissar or other with a Communist star glittering on his breast, and he put down his lacquered boots so carefully among those weary, dirty bodies, and came down and ate cakes with the speculators. And in that crowd there were louse-ridden, starving children . . . I looked at the picture: it was snowing outside and there was a biting wind . . . and then a child, altogether naked, ran out on the cold granite steps, and made water like a little wild beast, on the shining asphalt of the station front. Just think how many of them must catch cold and die at the station!

"And while I was looking at that staircase, down which, so squeamishly choosing the clean places among the heaps of living dirty bodies, came the fat speculator and the elegant Soviet worker, suddenly the idea dawned on me that it was so in Ancient Rome, in Judea at the time of Christ, in the Middle Ages and, not long ago, under Capitalism. And I felt so wretched . . . I felt I should like to lie on that staircase, beside those people, be covered with their everlasting dirt, take their lice on my body, and lie there till I died, moving now and then, to make a way for polished boots.

"But sometimes, suddenly, you'll notice a face in the crowd and on it such a proud, human anger against the possessors of clean clothes and shining boots, and it's clear at once that that very anger is a guarantee of our victory. . . . Not now, but some time in the future. . . . So long as such faces are to be found in a crowd of beggars, it means that the time will come, and we shall win."

She was silent for a minute.

"Yes . . . I talked a great deal with the peasants on the stations. I know how to talk to them in such a way that they never guess that I am of the Party, and talk quite straight. It's amazing how hard, alien and incomprehensible life is for this working, human being, the peasant, in our workers' and peasants' republic. . . . They live side by side with us, see the Revolution with their own eyes, hear it with their own ears . . . and understand nothing at all. If one could only arrange a sort of meeting of all Russia and in simple words, like Robeiko knows how to talk, tell them about everything."

Klimin smiled at her.

"Tell them. . . . They won't understand. Haven't these same working peasants killed enough of our agitators and political workers simply because they preached Communism too openly and directly? They don't read our books and they make cigarettes of our newspapers. No, Aniuta, it's all much more complicated than that. We have to rebuild their lives. They are savages, living side by side with us but still in the Middle Ages . . . they believe in sorcerers and for them we are only a special sort of sorcerers, benevolent at best. We must destroy those drab villages, those groups of dirty nests in which they roost and put in a museum their primitive plows and harrows. . . ."

Both were silent; he took her hand and looked at her, saying nothing, and for her it was as if the whole of her were collected into the little bit of her that touched his hand, and she replied to his caress by pressing her cheek to his hot hand. A painful, powerful ecstasy rose from the depths of his being; he pressed firmly to himself this beloved, desired body, and kissed again her hands, cheeks and lips. . . .

Suddenly there was knocking at the door, and they heard the sugared voice of the landlady:

"Comrade, here's some sort of peasant asking for you! He wants to know if Comrade Klimin is here. Says it's on important business. . . ."

"Call him here," said Simkova.

The door opened and a human figure came into the dark room. Klimin snapped a benzine cigarette-lighter and with its uncertain light lit up the absolutely unfamiliar face of a bearded mouzhik standing before them.

But before Klimin could ask a question, before he had time to wonder at the unknown man, a familiar voice said quietly and hurriedly:

"Comrade Klimin, I have had a job to find you. There is a revolt in the town. . . ."

"Revolt?" both exclaimed together. Simkova took a Mauser pistol from the wall, loaded it quickly and hung it on her belt.

Klimin caught the mouzhik by the hand.

"It's you, Gornuikh? Tell me what has happened."

"It's a long story. I disguised myself as a peasant, made up my face, joined the crowd and accidentally learnt the whole thing. . . . I know that there is a revolt today, that bands are coming, probably have already arrived. I wanted to telephone, but the field telephone has already been cut, and you know what the town one is like. . . ."

Simkova put on her shawl and jacket. They went out into the street. A soft warm wind was blowing. The earth was rejoicing in the Spring. The gutters murmured in the darkness. And the bent peasant, with a big beard and Gornuikh's voice went on to say:

"We are three, and we'll do what we can. Klimin, you go to the Cheka and get together as many of the lads as you can find. Comrade Simkova had better go to the Communist Company. I'll go to the way station. The town is probably already surrounded, but looking like this I'll be able to get thru the lines and rouse the railway men. The main thing is not to lose the station. Quick. . . ."

Gornuikh shook hands firmly as a farewell, and then he was already walking away, no longer Gornuikh, but a tall peasant with a long beard. Simkova also said goodbye, shook hands and went off, but then turned and ran back and kissed him with warm lips.

Klimin walked with quick light strides towards the Commission, pressed his revolver with his hand, and, as always in time of danger, was calm and collected, watched everything with a vigilant eye, listened carefully to every sound, but, all the same, it was just as if a vital part of his own body had been torn away from him, torn out with blood and nerves. . . .

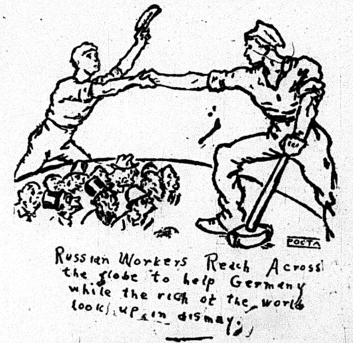
German Workers Gain Confidence in Workers of Other Lands



Russian Workers Reach Across the Globe to help Germany while the rich of the world look up in dismay

(By F. S. R. Press Service.)

That the German workers are fully conscious of the difference between aid rendered by workers of other countries and aid given by capitalists becomes more and more apparent daily. They bring the soup kitchens maintained by the Internationaler Arbeiter Hilfs Komite (Committee for International Workers' Aid), of which the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany is the American branch.

The American workers are anxious to keep these kitchens supplied and functioning. From all parts of the country comes word of tag days, house to house canvasses, benefit entertainments—all for the benefit of the German workers. From different corners of the land come letters from workers, themselves skimping along with the bare necessities of life, yet sending something for their German brothers.

It is time to send the second month's maintenance of the American Soup Kitchen opened in Germany on January 29th. The amount required is $2,000. All contributions should be sent to the National Office, Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany, 32 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Edits Paper from Cell When Jailed in Contempt Case

WAUKEGAN, Ill., Mar. 2.—Ralph L. King, assistant city editor of the Daily Sun, was doing business as usual today in his cell in the county jail here. Undaunted by a sentence of 30 days for contempt of court, King last night moved his typewriter to the cell, installed a radio outfit and is pounding out his stories. An office boy has been attached to the cell to run King's copy to the office. King said his salary had been doubled for the jail period. He was sentenced for contempt when he refused to divulge to a grand jury the source of information of a story.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

There is no danger of revolutionary ideas capturing the bulk of American citizens, declared S. S. McClure, north of Ireland Orangeman in a speech delivered before the Executives Club in the Hotel Sherman a few days ago. The speaker is the publisher of McClure's magazine. The circulation of standard American magazines is forty millions a month he informed his hearers, while that of "Red" periodicals is only 100,000. McClure is much more modest in his estimate of the number of "red" periodicals in circulation than the the American Defense Society which sets the figure at several millions. Anybody with a brain adjusted to read McClure's truth is proof against radicalism. Absolutely!

How little capitalists care about agreements is again demonstrated in the case of the milk distributors of Chicago. They recently made an agreement with the producers of Lake County and the Chicago milk producing district to pay the farmers $2.67½ cents per hundred pounds for their milk. They are living up to that agreement, but—they are also bringing in milk in large quantities from southern Wisconsin and purchasing it for $2.10 per hundred weight. Not alone are the milk distributors violating the strike agreement but they are also violating the health department regulations of the city of Chicago in bringing in milk without having passed inspection. The health department could stop this smuggling on the part of the Bowman and Borden Dairy companies if it was not partial to the trust as was demonstrated during the milk strike. Another instance of capitalist politicians favoring their owners.

His Holiness the Pope is getting quite excited over the shimmy. So great is his anxiety lest his celibate agents should glide away from his spiritual sezeraintv to the strains of a jazz orchestra that he caused to be published in the Osservatore Romano, organ of the Vatican, an article endorsing the recent stand taken by Cardinal Begin, archbishop of Quebec against the Jazz peril. If the Pope suggested that his flock should use their heads rather than their feet some justification might be found for his ukase but he fears that the use of either in any except forms supplied by him might result in financial difficulties for the great religious opium joint on the Tiber.

The Ku Klux Klan is sure making a record for itself as a cleansing element in American public life. A Ku Klux Klan candidate was declared elected in Texas a short time ago. His name is Earle B. Mayfield. It now appears that he worked his election just the same as John L. Lewis works his. A recount shows that Mayfield's opponent George E. B. Peddy actually received in one precinct 229 votes tho he was credited by the Mayfield Kluxers with 77 votes. The Klan certainly stands for law and order and the constitution!

Those of our readers who may owe a friend a ten dollar bill and are worrying their heads off as to how they may be able to scrape enough money to pay it back should take heart from the fact that the United States government, the richest and most powerful on earth owes over thirty billions. How this country has made progress since 1912 is shown by the fact that in that year the debts of all governments in the U. S. national, state, county, city, etc., were only $6,814,955,000. But do not feel so bad about it, our bankers are drawing over One and a Quarter Billions of Dollars a year on it.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt has changed her church after more than a 57 year attendance at the fashionable St. Bartholomew's in New York. She has applied for seats in St. Thomas's another Protestant Episcopal church. The reason for the change is the doubt in the mind of the rector of St. Bartholomew's of the virgin birth theory. Dr. Leighton Parks, the rector, challenged Bishop Manning to try him for heresy. Religion is a good deal like wine; it grows better with age. No doubt Mrs. Vanderbilt likes her wine when it is ancient, also her religion. She has the price so she can have her choice.

Governor General Leonard Wood has received from Pope Pius, the medal of peace in recognition of the governor's "services to humanity."

This leaves us somewhat up in the air. What has the general done for humanity aside from acting as the tax master of the American capitalists in the Philippines? He tried to lead an army into France to fight the Germans and was diagnosed unfit by Woodrow Wilson. Too fat in the body. Next he tried to run for president of the United States on an Ivory Soap platform. He failed. Too fat in the head. Being fully qualified, mentally and physically he was rewarded by the Republican Party for his services to the money power by being made governor general of the Philippines. His son recently figured in an $800,000 Wall Street financial scandal but was shoved off the front page by the Teapot Dome. We are curious to know what favors he conferred on the Pope in return for the medal. What is the graft between himself and the Vatican?

State's Attorney Crowe:

Millionaire's Son Goes Free In Murder "Mystery" While Your Dicks Arrest Garment Strikers

Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney of Cook County, is a vigorous defender of the clothing manufacturers of Chicago who exploit the dress makers in their sweating dens and unsanitary shops.

His police and detectives are on guard in front of the scab shops intimidating the pickets who are endeavoring to compel the greedy bosses to grant decent living conditions to their slaves.

Robert E. Crowe has gained the esteem of the open shoppers and enemies of labor by his efficiency in jailing union men and in breaking strikes. He is a cog in the Tribune-Daily News-Brundage-Chamber of Commerce republican machine. He is their candidate for state's attorney for Cook County.

* * * *

Robert E. Crowe is efficient in "bringing union organizers to justice." The quoted phrase is often used by his Chamber of Commerce backers. But murderers can kill with impunity in Cook County provided they have sufficient money to make justice look the other way.

At last Sunday's meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor the charge was made by union men that the office of the state's attorney was used as a headquarters for detectives who under Robert E. Crowe's direction are assigned to the shops of the scab manufacturers to protect the sluggers who were beating and intimidating union pickets.

These detectives, under Robert E. Crowe's direction, attacked representatives of the union and arrested Meyer Perlstein, strike leader, took him to the state's attorney's office and held him there as a prisoner for several hours.

* * * *

John Fitzpatrick sent a letter to State's Attorney Crowe, charging him with using his office as a strikebreaking agency and accusing him of being an enemy of organized labor.

As a result of the attitude of Robert E. Crowe and the thuggery of his detectives several girl strikers are now in hospitals suffering from injuries, inflicted on them by the agents of this scabbing state's attorney.

The DAILY WORKER asks Mr. Robert E. Crowe, capitalist lackey of the Chicago Chamber of Commerce, why murderers in this city can practically slay with impunity—particularly if they have the money—while union organizers and rank and file union members cannot picket or perform the duties assigned to them by their organizations without being subject to the brutal attentions of his hired finks?

We ask Mr. Robert E. Crowe to answer the charge made by Acting Detective Chief Shoemaker that "politics, wealth and gang rule" have blocked him from getting evidence necessary to an indictment of the murderers guilty of the recent Duffy slaying.

* * * *

Who are the "wealthy politicians" protecting the underworld gangsters and millionaire murderers? Are these gangsters necessary to the state's attorney's office to break strikes? To support the Landis Award Committee in its strikebreaking career? To enable the Tribune and Daily News to keep posted on underworld happenings?

Robert E. Crowe, we want you to explain why Julian Kaufman, millionaire's son, charged with the murder of John Dougherty, alias Duffy, is free on $35,000 bail? When did murder become a bailable offense?

A month ago two employes of the William J. Burns International Detective Agency were identified as highwaymen who robbed theatre patrons of $75,000 worth of jewelry. After the story appeared in the press, William J. Burns arrived in Chicago and not a word has appeared in the papers about these two criminal employes of the director of the Intelligence Bureau of the Department of Justice.

* * * *

Several men were murdered in a beer war in the city of Chicago. But Robert E. Crowe, who is so efficient in securing convictions against union men, has never secured one conviction against the beer war killers.

Robert E. Crowe is a candidate for re-election, on the Brundage-Chicago Tribune-Daily News-Chamber of Commerce ticket. He is running on his record as a union smasher. Employers whose shops are guarded against the presence of union men by detectives from State's Attorney Crowe's office at every election place slips in their employes' envelopes telling them which way to vote. They are always instructed to vote for the Crowe gang.

Crowe's men tell the pickets at the shops who pay political tribute to the state's atorney's office that they can do what they want to the little fellows, the small manufacturers, but that they must lay off the big fellows. "If you don't you will get your God damn heads broken." This is the impartiality of Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney of Cook County!

* * * *

What is Robert E. Crowe's political past? He was formerly a part of the Small-Thompson machine in the Republican Party of Illinois. In those days he used to praise Governor Small as the greatest governor the American sun ever shone on and language failed him to properly extol the political virtues of William Hale Thompson.

Now Mr. Crowe digs into the cesspool of guttersnipe journalism for epithets to hurl at his former political friends and saves all his smiles for the most notorious group of anti-labor capitalist robbers that ever hoisted the pirate flag over a plundered city.

Robert E. Crowe, you may be the darling of the Chicago Chamber of Commerce, but you cannot wreak vengeance on the organized workers of Cook County while the slayers, robbers and dangerous morons who make life hazardous for the citizens smoke the pipe of peace between murders.

* * * *

The workers of this city will camp on your political trail and send you back to the seclusion of a private law practice where you may sell yourself to the enemies of labor as you see fit.

But the workers will see to it, if the DAILY WORKER can help it, that you will not be able to use the office of state's attorney to crush organized labor at the behest of the big bankers of Chicago.

Crowe, Defiant, Says He'll Not Answer Fitzpatrick's Protest At Aid to Bosses

State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe admitted to the DAILY WORKER that he had received the letter sent to him by John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, protesting against the way special police officers attached to Crowe's office have treated union pickets of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. Crowe said that he did not intend to write a reply to Fitzpatrick.

"This office is going to enforce the law," he opened up. "Neither John Fitzpatrick or anyone else can break the law in Chicago and get away with it while I'm in office."

"Has John Fitzpatrick broken the law?" he was asked.

"No, but he is defending people who do," said Crowe.

"Has Chief of Police Collins asked you to send your police officers to the strike district?" the reporter queried.

"No, but this office has received numerous complaints that people were threatened with slugging. In some cases people have been slugged."

"Have any persons been arrested by your officers for slugging since this strike began?"

"No, they have not yet made any arrests," said the man whose officers have made 20 arrests in this strike.

"Why do the police officers who are attached to your office arrest people for peaceful picketing when you say they are on duty to prevent slugging?" demanded the interviewer.

"They break the law. They try to break the law," Crowe squeaked. "They can't do that while I'm in office."

"How many of your men are assigned to strike duty?"

"Eight or ten. Yes, eight or ten. Thats all I want to say. Nobody can break the law while I'm in office and get away with it. That's all."

"Why do the officers from your office arrest girls; then hold them at police stations without booking them? That is not according to law, you know."

"I have said all I intend to say in this matter. That's all," said Crowe, abruptly closing the conversation.

Queen of Coca-Cola Escapes Charges in Atlanta Police Court

ATLANTA, Ga., Mar. 3.—Mrs. Asa G. Candler, pretty young wife of the multi-millionaire Coca Cola king, was freed of charges of being an occupant of a disorderly house when her case was called in police court today.

W. J. Stoddard, prominent business man, who with G. W. Keeling, was in a fashionable apartment with Mrs. Candler when the police raided the place, took full responsibility for possession of a bottle of liquor found on a table and was ordered held for state court on a $300 bond.

The cases against Keeling and Mrs. Candler were dismissed.

Drunken Premier Expels Communists From Saxony Diet

DRESDEN, March 3.—Two Communists were expelled from the Diet by force when they called attention to the drunken condition of the capitalist prime minister. Ink bottles, books, canes and everything of a movable nature were hurled by the deputies at each other, when the radicals, disgusted with the inebrity of the capitalist chief shouted "you are drunk."

The dignity of the Diet was immediately offended so the police were called to remove the Communists by force. It was necessary to adjourn the session for two hours.

GARMENT BOSSES ASK INJUNCTIONS AGAINST STRIKERS

Crowe's Friend, Taylor, Pleads Case

Two groups of boss dress and waist manufacturers have applied for injunctions which would prohibit the International Ladies' Garment Workers from carrying on any strike activities or picketing the shops of the employers applying for the injunctions.

One group of emloyers who have their shops along S. Market street have retained Dudley Taylor, attorney for the Illinois Employers association, the Chicago Employers association, the Citizens Committee for the Enforcement of the Landis Award and good friend and political henchman of States Attorney Robert E. Crowe.

Hearings This Morning.

The hearing on this injunction will be heard before Judge Charles Foell, room 807 of the Equity court in the County Building at 10:00 o'clock this morning.

The other injunction has been applied for by a group of manufacturers who formerly had agreements with the union. They will be represented in court by Leo LeBosky, attorney for the Chicago Skirt and Dress manufacturers association.

The hearing on the application for this injunction will be heard before Judge Benjamin Sullivan of the equity court in the county building.

Clarence Darrow and Jacob Sisman will represent the union in the injunction hearings.

Industry Crippled.

Officers of the union said that the application for injunction proves conclusively that the strike has completely crippled the dress and waist industry. They say that an injunction has never been able to do work striking workers refused to do and that they do not expect this one to be an exception.

Strikers will report to their strike headquarters as usual this morning. The strike committee will instruct them what to do and they will be expected to follow instructions.

CALL BURNS BEFORE OIL PROBERS TODAY TO TELL OF MISUSE OF D. OF J. CODE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Senator Walsh, Montana, today verified thru a war department code expert the translation previously given the Senate Oil Committee of the McLean code telegrams and immediately ordered the appearance before the committee tomorrow morning of William J. Burns, head of the Department of Justice Secret Service.

Walsh said the War Department's experts had deciphered the messages "substantially" as they appeared in a previous translation and that he had established the fact the messages were in a Department of Justice code.

The expert will be put on the stand as the first witness tomorrow to tell these things and Burns will then be called on to explain how McLean got the department's secret code.

Also Question Burns' Aid.

Walsh will also question Mrs. W. O. Duckstein, reputed author of the "Mary" telegram, which as deciphered showed that Burns had sent word indirectly to McLean that he was being investigated by the Department of Justice.

Mrs. Duckstein, now an agent of the department, was formerly Burns' confidential secretary. Her husband, W. O. Duckstein, is one of McLean's secretaries.

Burns will be asked to tell whether McLean is, as reported, on the rolls of the department as a "Dollar a Year Man" with a secret service operative's shield and a copy of the department's secret code.

Try To Get Something On Walsh

Elaborate efforts have been made by certain parties to "get something on" Senator Thomas J. Walsh, the leading investigator in the oil scandal, his colleague, Senator Wheeler, of Montana, declared today on the floor of the Senate.

Wheeler offered two letters in substantiation of his charge and they were read into the record.

The first letter was addressed to E. C. Shields of Billings, Mont., and was signed by Fred R. Marvin, editor of the searchlight department of the New York Commercial.

Fears Association With Dunne.

In it Marvin asked for "the low down on Tom Walsh and whether he is associated with Bill Dunne and that radical bunch."

The reply of Shields stated that "you can bet your hat Walsh is like the granite of our hills.

"No one could give you the dope you desire and remain within the realm of truth," Shields stated. "Walsh is not and has never been a Socialist."

Daugherty Probers Plan Inquiry.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 3.—The Senate Committee named to investigate Attorney General Daugherty's administration of the Department of Justice, met today to plan its inquiry.

Regarding the investigation as a trial of himself, Daugherty, thru counsel, has demanded that it be conducted exactly like a court trial and that he be permitted to subpoena defense witnesses.

Congressional committees never permit persons being investigated to summon witnesses in their own defense and in most cases refuse even to permit cross examination of committee witnesses. Daughtery has demanded the right to do both.

The committee may reply to him that the senate has not authorized the committee to try him, but merely to investigate his whole administration of the department.

In mapping a course of investigation, first place will be given to a scrutiny of the activities of the bureau of investigation of which William J. Burns is head. The progressives have wanted to subject that agency to a shake up ever since the war and now that they have the chance, they will lose no time.

Next on the program so far as it has been decided on by the committee will be an inquiry into the complaints of the Federal Trade Commission that the Department has not followed up anti-trust cases.

Daugherty, who is in Florida will not appear personally in the early stages of the investigation.

File Suit Against Oil Leases.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Suit to cancel the Sinclair and Doheny oil leases will be filed soon by presidential counsel, Atlee Pomerene, one of the counsel, announced today.

In addition to suing for cancellation of the leases, the counsel will ask the court to restrain Doheny and Sinclair from withdrawing any more oil from the naval reserves pending final decision of the suit.

Thus the first definite step to recover the valuable government oil lands, set aside as a naval reserve, will be taken. And with the establishment of the civil case, criminal actions will be instituted against Albert B. Fall and others who turned these lands over for private exploitation, it was announced today. The announcement was made by Atlee Pomerene, one of the special prosecutors appointed by the president.

The Senate committee investigating Attorney General Daugherty's conduct of the Department of Justice will refuse to accede to requests of Daugherty's counsel that they be admitted to the hearings on parity with the investigators, it was learned today.

Daugherty's counsel asked that they be furnished with a full record of the proceedings, be permitted to subpoena witnesses, cross examine the committee's witnesses, call for documents and in general conduct Daugherty's cases as if it were being heard before a court.

"We will remain the investigators," Senator Brookhart, chairman of the committee, said.

A report that President Coolidge has been asked to grant immunity to certain persons involved in the oil lease investigation in exchange for information that heretofore has been refused, was denied at the White House today. No such request has been made to the President, it was said.

Miners in Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Hold Wage Confab

(By The Federated Press.)

PITTSBURGH, March 3.—Districts 14, 25, and 21, United Mine Workers of America, which comprise Kansas, Missouri, and Arkansas, will meet the Southwestern Interstate Coal Operators' Association to negotiate a wage scale the last week of March. A preliminary meeting has been held and no trouble is anticipated. It is a custom for the three districts to negotiate agreements jointly.

BRITISH NOTES VEILED THREAT TO POINCARE

Ramsay MacDonald in Open Diplomacy

LONDON, March 3.—Ramsay MacDonald and Premier Poincare have made public correspondence dealing with the strained relations that now exists between the two former allies.

France has the most powerful air fleet in the world, the largest army and is bending every effort to build a fleet of submarines for the purpose of blockading England in the next war which is considered here to be brewing.

England knows that France is building her armament against her. Ramsay MacDonald the pacifist, before he came into office is now Ramsay MacDonald the militarist, building warships, increases his King's air forces and supplementing this preparation for war with France by a diplomatic barrage with which he seeks to put France in a bad light as his predecessor Lord Grey did with Germany in 1914.

MacDonald Backs Lords.

France and England are quarreling over the bleeding carcass of Germany. England fears Germany may finally surrender to France and that the economic masters of both countries may come to terms thus forming a combination that will put an end to England as a world power. But Britain does not intend to let the mastery of Europe and of the world slip from her grasp. The old lion is now growling at France as she growled at Germany before 1914. Ramsay MacDonald the pacifist is now the mouthpiece of British capitalism as Lord Grey was before the world war.

It was said here before MacDonald assumed office that his job would be to arouse the workers of England against France, the opinion being that the Tories and Liberals could not win the masses to their side for another war. It now appears that MacDonald lost no time in carrying out the wishes of the imperialists.

It is believed that the reformist laborites will be allowed to remain in office so long as they can be found useful in pulling the chestnuts out of the fire for the employers of Britain.

MacDonald has already lost fifty per cent of his popularity with the masses since his assumption of power. He has jettisoned practically every principle that he ever gave lip service to. Without the backing of the workers he cannot last long.

MasDonald Suspicious of French.

Premier Ramsay MacDonald has written to Premier Poincare about British suspicions of France, of the vast aerial fleets and of French intentions "to gain what she failed to gain during the peace negotiations."

Poincare, in a personal letter equally outspoken, defended France's militaristic policies.

The correspondence is to continue. Two letters, MacDonald's to Poincare of February 21, and the French Premier's prompt reply a few days later were published today. Previous letters were exchanged in January.

Altho the correspondence constitutes a blunt statement by MacDonald that the British are growing suspicious of France and explains the reason why the large French air force is not understood across the channel, it was Poincare who suggested publication, according to a semi-official announcement from Paris.

MacDonald's letter of February 21, is in part as follows:

"My Dear Premier:

"I am encouraged by the friendly nature of the reply which you returned to my letter of January 26 to try and carry to a further stage the exploration of points that have raised some difficulties in the relations between our respective countries.

France Spills the Beans.

"It is widely felt in England, that contrary to the provisions of the treaty of Versailles, France is endeavoring to create a situation which gains for it what it failed to get during the allied peace negotiations. The view of this section of my countrymen is that the policy can only perpetuate the uncertainty and dangers of a condition not of peace, but of war and that in the end it will destroy whatever temporary security France can gain.

"To my mind the question of security is not merely a French problem, it is a European problem.

"The position of this country is entirely different. Our security on land and sea remains unmenaced, but our economic existence has been grave owing not to the inability of Germany to pay a certain sum in reparation, but to acute and persistent dislocation of the markets of Europe occasioned mainly by the uncertainty in the relations between France and Germany. The continued economic chaos in Germany and the ultimate uncertainty of the relations between France and ourselves."

Finally, MacDonald said, the British people are disturbed by France's attitude towards her debts.

Strike-Breaker Daugherty Must Go, Labor Defense Council Cries

War on Harry M. Daugherty had been declared by the Labor Defense Couneil long before his oil spots were bared. The Defense Council fought him as the supreme strike breaker of the nation and the arch persecutor, for the employers, of the labor movement.

There must be no delay in casting him out of office the Council says in the following demand:

Burns, His Defender.

For once Congress is voicing a popular demand, Daugherty must go! Everybody wants the oil-bespattered Harry M. Daugherty to resign from the cabinet except Harry M. Daugherty . . and, of course, Super-dick William J. Burns.

The Democrats are calling loudly for the head of the Republican attorney-general. The Republicans themselves are anxious to get rid of him. Daugherty grimly hangs on, sticking his fingers up to his nose at enemies and friends alike. He is innocent, he protested! But alas, such is the reputation of the exalted attorney-general that none will believe him.

Made System Stink.

Aside from the strictly Party purposes of the coming presidential campaign, the principal reason why the capitalist politicians of both Parties want Daugherty to go is that he has "contributed to the public disillusionment," as the New York Times puts it. As a result of the notoriety brought on by his exploits the whole stinking rottenness of the federal Department of Justice has been exposed to public smell.

Working men and women all over the country are also demanding that Daugherty be removed from his present position, but their reasons are not quite those of the old-party politicians. The workers object to Daugherty on fundamental class issues.

But the workers have a deeper quarrel with Mr. Daugherty—which is at the same time a quarrel with many of the gentlemen who are now hurriedly endeavoring to disassociate themselves from him. From the very beginning, Daugherty has personified the fundamental class character of the so-called Department of Justice. He has devoted himself whole-heartedly to the task of shielding the ill-gotten gains of capitalism on the one hand and persecuting labor on the other.

Broke Shopmen's Strike.

The old-guard Republicans have been blocking every move to investigate the conduct of the attorney general's office under the regime of Daugherty and Burns.

If a fair hearing is given the evidence, the Defense Council Bulletin points out, "the country will learn how Daugherty happened to break the railway shopmen's strike by his injunction and propaganda; why his stool pigeons were discovered here and there and everywhere in American industry, plotting and intriguing with big corporations. The gunmen in industry will be reviewed and their relations with Daugherty's office will be traced."

Brushing aside all legal considerations of state jurisdiction, he permitted his "Department of Justice" agents to direct the famous raid on the convention of the Communist Party of America at Bridgeman, Mich., in the summer of 1922. Not only did the "Department of Justice" cause the Berrien County officials, to undertake the raid, but notorious federal stool pigeons actually participated in it. Joseph Spolansky, the leader of these stool pigeons, betrayed the ulterior purpose of the raid by admitting that it probably would not have taken place if it were not for the railroad and coal miners' strike, then in progress.

Foster-Ruthenberg Frame-Up.

"Department of Justice" men took an active part in preparing for the trials of William Z. Foster and C. E. Ruthenberg, which followed. They did everything in their power to "get" Foster. Now they are exerting every effort to defeat the Ruthenberg Appeal, which is to come before the Michigan Supreme Court this spring.

Record Too Rotten.

Daugherty's record is so rotten that even the members of his own party are afraid of a hearing. The workers' memory is not so short, however, that the issue can be obscured so easily. Whether or not there is an investigation, the monstrous career of Harry M Daugherty is known to all. Daugherty must go! And not only Daugherty but everyone responsible for his regime . . not forgetting President Coolidge.

Those who might be inclined to damn the Republicans and this a little more highly of the Democrats have only to call to mind the name of A. Mitchell Palmer!

HEARST JOINS OLD GUARD AID TO DAUGHERTY

Sex-Angle Publisher in Sweet-Smelling Crew

William Randolph Hearst has joined the old guard of Harry M. Daugherty's defenders.

It is a sweet smelling company: William J. Burns, Daugherty's right hand man in breaking the shopmen's strike and himself involved in the oil scandal since the leased wire disclosures; Senator Willis, Big Business man's representative from Ohio who admitted that he had advised the defendant attorney-general regarding the personell of the senatorial jury that was to try him, and now Hearst.

The sex-angle publisher advances the same argument that his hireling Brisbane put forward several days ago,—that the foes of Daugherty are the friends of the war profiteers whom Daugherty was alleged to be prosecuting.

In the name of baby foolishness what big profiteers is Daugherty attacking? Has he touched the billion dollar graft of the Aircraft Production Bureau; the fabulous prices for copper, which advanced three times over the pre-war figure. Or was there one hint of prosecution for the well named "Hog Island" steal.

Art Young's old cartoon of the fat trusts applauding the prosecution of peanut venders comes to mind. The six million dollars which Daugherty's friends boast that he and his predecessors recovered for the government from war profiteers is peanut like to the billions which Brisbane himself admits were stolen during the war.

In his support of Daugherty Hearst is again revealing himself in his true reactionary light. The publisher of sensations at the crucial moment is found lined up with the worst crooks in the capitalistic world.

Hearst supports Daugherty, the Rockefellers, Hiram Johnson, enemy of free speech in California and tacit supporter until now of the steal of Naval Oil Reserve No. 1.

The question arises: how deeply is Hearst's own foot bogged in this oil mess? What pressure, financial or otherwise, has Hearst brought on administrations towards a coercive policy in Mexico where he has immense interests?

There's a reason for the support of Daugherty, his former enemy, and for the oil companies, whom he assailed in the days when he was publishing the Archibald correspondence.

JOE DANIELS, DRY LAND GOB, IN OIL TALK

Another Dome May Come to Judgement

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 3.—Josephus Daniels, former secretary of the navy who is here writing a book on his former master Woodrow Wilson had something to say on the oil scandal.

The gentleman with the biblical cognomen seems to think that in the difficult search for an honest man in the ranks of the donkey party to carry the Democrat banner to victory in the next election, that party may have to pick on Mr. Daniels who has not yet been convicted of selling the navy to a junkman tho nothing positively meritorious seems to have appeared on the record to his credit.

An honest man today, however, appears to be the noblest work of God and should the army of Diogenes now scouting the country for a Democrat politician who never wore the striped uniform of a penitentiary or who was an accomplice of thieves fail to land anybody else Daniels is holding himself in readiness.

It is true his ambition is badly handicapped in having William Randolph Hearst as a friend. That, with his intention to write a book about the greatest failure in American history should prove unsurmountable obstacles, but a politician is hopeful if anything and the very fact that his name is even mentioned for the presidency will enable his publisher to put a little more kick in the advertising.

"The deplorable truth about the present situation is," said Daniels, "that the people have lost all faith in their government. The government itself has been shamefully involved thru the use of confidential government codes, the secret service, the very men that should be used to run down the crooks."

Jap Police Disarm Workers Resisting Fascisti Assaults

TOKYO, March 3.—The workers of Japan are highly indignant over the dastardly action of the police in Kyoto recently in disarming the workers when they were defending themselves against a pogrom made upon them by Japanese Fascisti. When the workers were disarmed the marauding Fascisti could burn and murder at their will. This action of the police is in keeping with the general attitude of the reactionary Japanese government which encourages such massacres of the workers the moment that these oppressed workers show any signs of dissatisfaction with the frightful conditions in which they are held by the ruling class.

FEAR SULTAN MAY ESCAPE WITH HAREM

Eunuchs Who Guard Wives in Hysterics

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 3.—Guards surrounded the palace of the Caliph Abdul Medjid Effendi and supervised the household and the imperial residence today, under orders from the Angora government. The purpose was to prevent the Caliph from carrying out his reported intention of fleeing into Egypt, with the palace treasures.

Eunuchs Excited.

The activities, which are said to have caused consternation among the odalisks—commonly called wives—of the caliph and to have startled the chief eunuchs of the harem followed word from Angora that the National Assembly soon will vote to suppress the caliphate and expel the caliph and his considerable family. Mustapha Kemal, president of Turkey, has determined that as a step towards modernizing and westernizing his country, religion must be entirely separated from the state.

The sultan of Turkey united the temporal and spiritual headship in himself in the sixteenth century. The title of caliph indicates a successor of Mohammed.

Abdul Hamid was the last sultan to enjoy full autocratic powers. Since his time, the imperial harems, about which the western world has wondered for centuries, have lost much of their charm.

Must Have Heavy Laundry Bill.

The bill before the National assembly at Angora provides for exiling and depriving of Turkish citizenship all members of the caliph's family. Just how many wives Abdul Medjid has is not known. The ex-sultan Mehmed IV, who died towards the end of the world war, had 300. A press correspondent was informed concerning life in this harem by Gulfen Hanoum, one of the ex-wives of Abdul Hamid and by a palace doctor who treated Mehmed Rechad in his last illness.

The harem was divided into djariah (slave women) and odaliska (concubines).

Had an Eye to Beauty.

Novices or virgins were known as adjamis. These were gathered from afar by many of the more aged women of the harem, whose particular function it was to select beautiful wives for the sultan.

When one of the adjamis attracts the sultan, she becomes a guesdeh (near to the eyes, is the closest English translation) and is favored for a while. If the sultan's love dies, she is relegated to the position of ikbal.

The same principles and methods apply to the households of the sultan's sons, altho the latter have less women at their disposal.

Sultan Was Independent.

Women of the harem who bear the sultan children are known as cadines, or legitimate wives, being married to the master by the "nikiah" or moslen marriage ceremony. Polygamy and the perpetual inferiority of women, are established by this ceremony.

Outside the harem, leaders of the new Turkey attempted to reform this marriage ceremony recently, but it exists within the walls of the caliph's palace.

Minnesota Leads in Contracts for Co-op Marketing of Potatoes

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 3.—Minnesota has far exceeded all other states in contracts for co-operative marketing of potatoes.

Aaron Sapiro, co-operative marketing expert, said the Minnesota exchange, just organized, has four times as many members and three times the acreage of the Maine Potato Growers' Exchange, which heretofore was the largest co-operative potato marketing body in the world.

Minnesota has 12,000 growers signed up with more than 155,000 acres under contract. The goal of the campaign which started four months ago was 120,000 acres or half of the commercial acreage of the state.

Crowe Aids Bosses By Arresting Expelled Militant On Picket Line; Young Workers League Pulls Shop

Continuing their efforts to break the strike of the dress and waist makers the special police of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe's office arrested Israel Litwinsky yesterday morning.

Litwinsky, who is one of the expelled militants, was taking part in the picketing on S. Market street, near Jackson Blvd., when three members of Crowe's strike-breaking squad seized him and took him to the criminal court building where he was questioned and threatened.

Again on Picket Line.

When Litwinsky refused to answer questions the dicks let him go, after an hour, angrily warning him that he would be arrested again if he went back to the picket line. Litwinsky went back to the picket line in spite of their threats, but no further attempt was made to arrest him that day.

Exposures of the methods employed by State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe's police, in their attempts to break the garment strike, which have been made at the meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor and in the DAILY WORKER, has forced Crowe's police to change their methods slightly.

They try to avoid making the actual arrests. They ask the regular police to arrest the people who they want removed from the picket line. The lawyers of the union have forced the police to book persons arrested as soon as they are brought into the station

No arrests were made during the day on either the north west or west sides. More than two dozen pickets were arrested in the strike district along S. Market street.

Attorney Arrested.

The police in their anxiety to do all they could to bother the union pickets became indiscreet and told Martin Gordon, an attorney with offices at 127 N. Dearborn street, to "move on." Gordon told the policeman to mind his own business and was arrested. It was not till he was taken to the S. Clark St. police station that it was found he was not a striker. Gordon was very indignant and threatened to see that Judge Trude before whom he will be arraigned today is told just what the police are doing in this strike. Gordon has no connection either with labor organizations or with the strikers.

Will Ask Jury Trials.

The following pickets were arrested and released on bonds when they were taken to the S. Clark St. police station: Dorthy Schukman, Goldie Tessel, Marya Nachel, Ben Silver, Sidney Weiner, Rose Luxomborg, Minnie Wilbohn, Bessie Finkle, Lizzie Green, Lena Moritz and Kate Schenski.

They will all be arraigned before Judge Trude today in S. Clark St. police court and will demand jury trials.

All the union pickets who were arrested Saturday and who were arraigned in court yesterday demanded jury trials and were released on $400 bonds each.

Members of the Young Workers League who are on strike with the dress makers were busy all day yesterday selling the DAILY WORKER to the strikers.

Y. W. L. Pulls Out Shop.

Several members of the Y. W. L. went to a shop at 26 W. Quincy street and convinced about 15 workers that they should come out on strike with their fellows. The new strikers were led from their shop to the strike headquarters at 180 West Washington street where they were registered and given strike cards.

As the Y. W. L. members led the new strikers into the strike headquarters they were heartily cheered by the other strikers. One of the Leaguers who was too modest to give his name said that the Y. W. L. who were on strike were going to consider themselves the shock troops of the strikers. They were ready to do any work assigned to them by the strike committee he said.

Workers from the fifteen shops which settled last week returned to their work after holding shop meetings where the representatives of the strike committee gave them instructions on how to conduct themselves in the shop till after the other shops have settled with the union.

Mass Meetings Continue.

Enthusiastic mass meetings were held at 180 W. Washington street and 20 W. Randolph street. Meyer Perlstein told the strikers about the settlements made with the fifteen shops last week and urged the strikers to stick until the victory which was sure to come.

CROWE FLAUNTS LABOR RECORD IN NEW PAMPHLET

Boasts He Convicted 42 Workers

State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, arrester of girl strikers, is flaunting his anti-labor record in the face of the public in a pamphlet which he is issuing to voters under the title "Winning the Fight Against Crime."

The pamphlet, unfortunately, went to the printer before the close of the trial of union upholsterers who were convicted on the sole grounds that they had urged building tradesmen to refuse to work with scab upholsterers during a strike.

42 Labor Convictions.

Had they been included in the record of labor convictions Crowe could have boasted of 47 unionists successfully prosecuted. As it was he has to content himself with 42.

Crowe's own part of the pamphlet pats himself on the back for "suppression of vice and gambling," "gun-toting" it is to laugh), "delinquent tax collections" and so on.

The hurrahing for the labor convictions fills a large part of the back of the pamphlet in the section reserved for quotations from persons and newspapers praising him.

Only Shaffer Praises.

Here we find seven quotations from the Chicago Evening Post, paper of oil-stained Shaffer. Four, or a majority of these boosts, are for his prosecution of union labor—"a remarkable record"—the Post proclaims. The Herald and Examiner hails "the greatest record in the number of convictions of labor conspiracy charges ever obtained by any prosecutor in the history of Cook county.

Scab Herder Donnelley, of strike breaking printing trades and Citizens' Committee fame joins the hurrah crew. Railroad officials, clergymen, manufacturers and psycophantic politicians say amen.

It is a record of sweet savor to the open shop employer but one that will encourage the DAILY WORKER, the Chicago Federation of Labor and all other workingclass forces to work for his speedy return to private life.

Girl Stunt Performer Killed.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., March 3.—Mrs. Bertha Horchem, "stunt" performer with an airplane circus owned by her husband, was killed here during a circus Sunday when a wing of her plane broke while she was going into a nose dive. Horchem collapsed after seeing his wife's lifeless body removed from the wreckage.

MCADOO RIVAL APPEARS IN SAINT JOHNS

Gets $250,000 from Notorious Besco

By ROBERT SCHAEFTER.

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

ST. JOHNS, Newfoundland, March 3.—While the United States has its oil scandal, this province is being shaken by a political graft expose of its own which is now before the legislative council.

Sir Richard Squire, former premier of Newfoundland, is charged with accepting approximately $250,000 from various industrial corporations, in return for which he misused his official position in favor of those firms. Outstanding among the corporations concerned is the notorious anti-labor British Empire Steel Corporation.

In December, 1921, Squire is said to have sent a mediator to obtain "campaign funds" from the president of the British Empire Steel Corporation amounting to $100,000 in addition of $51,000 paid on previous occasions to Squire. Squire pledged himself to bring about modifications of a contract of the Dominion Iron and Steel Co. with the Newfoundland government. This firm was a subsidiary of Besco and the contract called for the expenditure of $3,500,000 in Newfoundland in a specified period.

The same mediator testified that he was commissioned to negotiate with the Commercial Cable Co. of New York "on matters affecting the company's cable system in Newfoundland" and that his instructions "included a request for a $15,000 fund which was to be used in connection with the Newfoundland general election in 1923."

The exact amount of money received in this way by the premier probably will never be known.

Altho this graft probe, still in process, has already uncovered overwhelming evidence against Squire, the public here fears the grafter will not be prosecuted and that big business will be able to hush up the scandal.

Verra Verry Sorry to Share Ellis Isle Fleas with Rabble

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 3.—James Royce-Garrett, alleging that he is a Russian baron, and his wife, Mme. Verra Loorra, a singer—both of whom arrived here on the steamer Antonia from Hamburg—are illustrations of the old adage that a rolling violet usually gets pelted with mossy stones.

Royce-Garrett, who wants to become a hyphenated American, believes he has strong claims to American citizenship. He says he used to be one of the richest landowners in imperial Russia. He flicks the ashes non-chalantly from a cigarette, as he mentions casually his former palatial home in Leningrad—pardon, Petersburg—and his summer estate in the Crimea, near the royal domains. When the Russian revolution began to interfere with his pleasurable pursuits, Royce-Garrett joined the forces of General Wrangel, the White Hope who scorched his fingers. When Wrangel scurried from the sinking interventionist ship, Royce-Garrett scampered away and didn't pause until he reached the coast of Africa. Later, he returned to Europe.

A Tsar's Darling.

His wife, Verra Loorra, describes herself as an operatic star. She also tells us that she was a social favorite in the days of Tsarist monarchy. Verra was not accompanied by her operatic press agent upon her arrival in New York harbor. She deemed him a luxury.

A vigilant search of chronicles of titled personages fails to disclose the name of "Baron" Royce-Garrett, who states that his English forebears emigrated to Russia. But perhaps he merely tossed in the "Baron" for good measure, feeling assured that his political record as a Tsarist counter-revolutionary would entitle him to honorary citizenship in the United States.

They Gave Good Qualities.

The Russian immigration quota being filled, the noble Russian couple are being detained at Ellis Island, where they are confronted with deportation. They complain bitterly that Ellis Island lacks the comforts of their lavish Petrograd home, and that they are obliged to rub elbows with plain Russian working men and similar riff-raff. They have appealed to the American authorities to make an exception to immigration rules in their case, in view of their glorious sacrifice on behalf of civilization. It is believed that their chances of entering the United Statts are excellent, considering the leniency of the Hughesian State Department towards its Tsarist sympathizers.

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Mar. 3.—A suggestion here by Acting Prime Minister of Australia Page, that the public utilities be handed over to private enterprise has met with a storm of protests from all sections of the Australian people. All public utilities in Australia are government-owned. Run for use and not for profit they are cheaply conducted. Railway fares and freights, for instance, are the cheapest in the English speaking countries, while the government owned steamers act as a check on the privately owned steamers.

Coming! The Teapot Special!

The DAILY WORKER announces it will issue a Special Teapot Edition, dated Monday, March 17th. This will be the first attempt on a large scale to get the real meaning of the oil scandal before the American working class. Hundreds of thousands of copies of this issue should be distributed. Party members and sympathizers, alike, must join in this effort.

This special edition of the DAILY WORKER will contain articles analyzing the investigation that is taking place in Washington. The facts will be marshalled in orderly array, so that all labor will clearly understand the meaning of this far-reaching political explosion. There will be smashing cartoons and sketches by Robert Minor, Fred Ellis and our other artists. This edition will be the biggest effort we have yet put forth. Send in your orders today for this special issue to THE DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.

VETERANS GRAFT QUIZ BRINGS NEW THRILLS

Gives Teapot Dome Close Run

When the special grand jury investigating charges of graft in the connection with the expenditure of large sums of money by the Veterans' Bureau indicted former Director Col. Charles R. Forbes, Harding's favorite appointee, brought in an indictment of that official and of J. W. Thompson, millionaire builder for accepting and giving a bribe, the curtain was raised on what promises to be one of the snappiest exhibitions of robbery ever staged in this country to a capacity audience.

The crooks are now getting so excited that there is no longer any talk of honoring "gentlemen's agreements" to hang together. It is now "every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost." Col. Forbes knows that he is in bad shape but in his desperation he is willing to drag others down with him.

Had the Teapot Dome not been before the public the scandal in the Veterans' Bureau alone would be more than enough to wreck the Republican administration. The worst of it is as far as the capitalist parties are concerned that every scandal appears to be shared equally by both Democrats and Republicans.

President Harding's sister will come to the defense of Col. Forbes, it is reported. People are now asking if the relations between Forbes and the late president were not more than friendly.

Two Congressmen Involved.

Two congressmen are involved in the graft of the Veterans' Bureau. Who are they? Others high up in government circles shared in the loot that was supposed to take care of the wounded veterans. Will Calvin Coolidge be as silent about these "high government officials" as he has been about those involved in the Teapot Dome scandal?

The Boston Post declares that the revelations of Teapot Dome and Veterans' Bureau scandals are not near so fruitful a soil for radical propaganda as the activities of millionaires whose illicit love affairs with women of the underworld are causing the working class to lose confidence in the masters. The Post thinks the sex angle is the most important.

Even that is not lacking in the Veterans' Bureau scandal. In fact the story might not have been told but for the attentions paid by the gallant hand shaker and shoulder slapper Mr. Forbes to the wife of Mr. Mortimer, his associate in the looting. Mortimer resented the attentions, and the expose followed.

Forbes claims that other crooks higher up than himself in government circles framed him. "I know the exact day the plot was laid and the individual who directed the frameup. He is a high individual unofficially connected with the government."

Accuses Sawyer.

This individual may be Brigadier General Charles E. Sawyer, physician to the late president. Forbes charged that Sawyer had more to do with the prevention of the proper administration of the Bureau funds than any other individual.

Referring to the freedom from arrest of Elias H. Mortimer, Col. Forbes states:

"Why has he been at large on bail nearly a year, under an indictment for conspiracy to violate the prohibition law, returned in the United States District Court in New York, with no action taken in the case since he gave bond June 3, 1923, Col. Tom Felder, Daugherty's associate in the Morse pardon case, appearing as his counsel?

"Why has not the Department of Justice taken action against him and certain officials for conspiracy to violate the liquor laws, based on documentary evidence furnished by me to the Department of Justice eighteen months ago, the discovery of which was the first intimation I had of Mortimer's real character?"

The grand jury report will be turned over to President Coolidge. Harry M. Daugherty hinted that the disclosures in the Veterans' scandal may provide him with a club to use over his enemies. But it is significant that the jury reported, "Money was accepted by certain individuals for the purpose of obtaining clemency from prisoners thru their intimacy with officials."

This is supposed to refer to charges by Senator Wheeler that Daugherty's chum, Jesse Smith, sold Federal pardons in Washington up to the time of his suicide last year.

Meanwhile reactionary congressmen are bewailing the fact that the workers are losing confidence in the government.

Poisin Liquor Brings Suit.

TAYLORVILLE, Ill., March 3.—Suits for $50,000 damages have been filed in circuit court here against John Tokoly, proprietor of a Pana soft drink parlor, by Mrs. Lucy Baldwin, whose husband died from the effects of poison liquor said to have been purchased in the defendant's establishment.

Garment Workers! Tell Your Story

The DAILY WORKER invites the striking garment workers in the city of Chicago to use its columns in bringing their working conditions to the attention of our readers and the workers in other industries. Thousands of dressmakers are on strike. The bosses say their employes receive high wages and that the strike is caused by agitators. Write in and tell us how long you work and how much you get for your work when you do work. Here is a letter from a "home worker":

* * * *

The DAILY WORKER: I was working for Samuel Goldstein, 1384 Milwaukee Avenue, doing "homework" and I still had work unfinished on Wednesday last when I read in the DAILY WORKER that a general strike in the dress industry was declared and that the dressmakers of the North West side would meet in Schoenhoffen Hall that morning.

I went to the hall and asked the comrades what I should do. I had not finished beading a dress so they told me I had better fetch it back to the shop and when I did the boss told me if I join the strike that I will never get any more work from them. He said I was a rebel.

Now I want to tell you about the wages we are receiving: It takes twenty-five hours to bead a dress for which I receive $3.50. Other dresses are paid for in proportion. Now is the time to discuss this matter. I think some more of the Home Workers will bear me out in this.—R. P., Chicago.

FRENCH PARTY'S CONGRESS SHOWS RISING STRENGTH

United Front Offered to Socialists

(Special to The Daily Worker)

The Congress of the French Communist Party just held at Lyon showed a strong closely knit party, purified of its opportunist and reformist elements, with a growing membership, with close contact established between itself and the German workers. The party's record is one of great accomplishment in the trades unions, with no internal conflicts or differences with the Communist International.

At the beginning of the Congress Albert Treint, one of the leaders of the French Communist Party, was shot at as he passed a local of the Anarchist organization at Lyon. Luckily he was not harmed.

Urge Workers' Bloc.

The Congress decided to call upon the Socialists to enter into a united front with the Communist Party in the coming elections with the lower middle class against the National bloc. The Communist Party would form the united front with the Socialist Party only on the condition that the Socialists renounce all collaboration with the middle class. Instead of the "Left Bloc" of the Socialist-Middle Class elements, it is proposed to form the Block of Workers and Farmers.

It was decided to put forth every effort to unite the trade unions which are now split. The Party is also to start immediately to reorganize on a shop nuclei basis.

Clasp German's Hand.

On the question of the Ruhr occupation, the Congress proclaimed the utter incapacity of the capitalist government of France to solve any of the international questions, and pointed out that only the common action of the French and German workers against their governments can bring about a solution.

The Communist Party of France, the Congress has shown, is constantly advancing, and will soon become strong enough as a revolutionary party to bring about the downfall of the French capitalist government.

Charged Australia for Keeping Junk; They Must Now Destroy

(By The Federated Press)

MELBOURNE, Australia, March 3.—The Australian government has ordered the breaking up of the submarines donated to it by the British government at the close of the world war. The submarines were obsolete at the time they were donated.

The Australian taxpayers have been saddled with the cost of their upkeep, and are now to be saddled with the cost of their destruction. Incidentally, Britain is saved that cost.

Under the terms of the Washington treaty, Australia is now dismantling her largest battleship—the "Australia." Protests have been made by the jingoes.

Coal Miners of New South Wales Take Action for Big Union

(By The Federated Press)

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—Representatives of all unions connected with the coal mining industry—miners, engine drivers, firemen, engineers, blacksmiths, carpenters, bricklayers—held a conference at Sydney to bring the various craft unions into one organization as an integral part of the mining section of the One Big Union. Preliminary difficulties were overcome, and a further conference will be held in a few weeks' time to draft a new constitution and rules.

Flat Janitors Get Stay of Sentence Despite Crowe Lies

The nine men convicted with W. F. Quesse, of the Chicago Flat Janitors' Union, for conspiracy were granted a stay of sentence by the Illinois supreme court yesterday. The stay will be effective until the United States supreme court rules on a motion for a writ of certiorari made by Quesse and the other defendants.

On Feb. 6 the state supreme court refused to grant the men a new trial and they were ordered to prepare to go to prison. The defendants at once took their case to the United States supreme court.

The capitalist press is continually saying that Quesse and the other men convicted with him were convicted for extortion. This is not true. They were indicted and tried on nine counts. The jury dismissed eight of the counts and convicted them on one count. The count on which they were convicted charged conspiracy. All the counts charging bribery and extortion were dismissed by the jury. Robert T. Crowe, states attorney, has been chiefly instrumental in spreading the lie that the men were convicted of extortion.

Convicted with Quesse and linked with him in subsequent litigation are Eugene Fosdick, John D. Sullivan, Claude F. Peters, Robert Osterberg, Frank McWaters, George Waters, John Mattis, Peter Lagy and Gus Anderson.

House Committee Goes On Record Today For Philippine Freedom

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The house insular affairs committee decided today to report a bill providing for Philippine independence.

The Philippine press bureau made public a cablegram from Manila stating that the Filipinos were boycotting American goods and American papers owing to the suspension of Ben F. Wright, insular auditor of the one million peso independence fund. Wright is said to have the backing of the American press and American business.

The Philippine nationalists replied to the suppression of their fund by launching a nation-wide campaign for voluntary subscriptions which promises to soon pass the two million mark.

Herrin Grand Jury Called For Probe of Klan Shootings

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HERRIN, Ill., March 3.—A special grand jury is being sworn in to investigate and bring indictments for the shootings that have taken place in Herrin since the Ku Klux Klan disturbances began.

Membership in the Klan or the Knights of the Flaming Circle are the only reasons outside of sickness sufficient to bar jurors from service, City Judge Bowen declared in his instructions. The shooting of Deputy Sheriff John Layman, an anti-klansman; Constable Caesar Cagle, a pro-klansman, and the attack by klansmen on the hospital are among the things which will be probed.

Yellow Socialists of Pennsylvania Defeat Lenin Condolence Vote

HARRISBURG, Pa., March 3rd.—The state convention of the Socialist party of Pennsylvania today by a vote of two to one defeated a motion to send condolences to the Russian workers and government on the death of Nicolai Lenin and to pledge the party's efforts to bringing pressure to bear on the United States government for the immediate recognition of Soviet Russia.

This places a section of the Socialist party on record in one of the most contemptible acts that the contemptible S. P. has ever been guilty of.

Belgian Socialists Beg King Albert to Let Them Take Office

BRUSSELS, March 3.—The socialists of Belgium, in conjunction with the Flemish party, are trying to persuade King Albert to imitate Great Britain and entrust the government to the socialists and the Flemish group. They have a complete cabinet ready to submit to the king.

Workers Party Throng Will Make Teapot Bubble at Cooper Union

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 3.—The Workers Party of Greater New York will hold a monster mass meeting Thursday evening, March 13th, at Cooper Union where nationally known speakers will tell about the part both the Republican and Democratic parties took and are taking in the Teapot Dome oil scandal.

Dozens of local unions in New York have bought blocks of tickets to enable their members to attend the meeting.

LORE, NEARING, TRACHTENBERG, SPEAK IN BOSTON

Good March Schedule by Workers Party

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., March 3.—Ludwig Lore, Scott Nearing and Alexander Trachtenberg will be among the speakers appearing at mass meetings here this month, Robert Zelms, secretary of Boston local of the Workers Party announces.

The first big meeting at Scenic Auditorium next Sunday, will be a protest against the Davis laws and is called by the Boston council for the protection of foreign born workers. Lore will speak. Admission is free.

Moscow Art Film March 11.

The next important affair comes Tuesday, March 11, at 2:30 and 8:15 p. m. when "Polikushka," the Moscow Art Players' film, will be presented at Symphony Hall, in behalf of German relief. Tickets are 85 and 55 cents.

The Young Workers League will hold its Second Annual Dance Friday evening, March 14, at Scenic Auditorium. Admission 55 cents.

Friday, March 21 at 8 p. m.

Booze-Backers Form Bloc to Put Over Rum Amendment

WASHINGTON, March 3rd.—The "beer bloc" now being formed in the House, expects to get a 2.75 per cent beer law thru the next congress.

As the first step towards this goal, each member of the "bloc", which it is claimed, now numbers 60, will introduce a beer bill in the House this week.

No claims are being made of victory in the present congress, altho Representative John Philip Hill, Maryland, organizer of the bloc, said today favorable reaction thruout the country has followed formation of the bloc.

The sixty beer bills will be identical, They will provide for legislation of the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer, cider and fruit juices.

The new movement comes as the result of many conferences of the wets at Hill's Washington home. Under the present plan, with each wet sponsoring a beer bill of his own, he is actively working for the "cause."

The wet leaders believe they have selected the psychological time to push the movement. Shooting of Senator Greene of Vermont during a fight between dry agents and bootleggers has resulted in a strong reaction in Congress against prohibition enforcement.

German Police Aid Fascisti in Assault on Communist Workers

BERLIN, March 3.—Two hundred Communists, including two deputies, were arrested at Jena when they clashed with a Fascisti mob. The Jena police, reinforced by men from other towns, used their weapons indiscriminately on the Communists.

Attempt to Assassinate Zogul.

ROME, March 3.—A fresh attempt has been made to assassinate Premier Zogul, a dispatch from Soutari said today.

A young student fired six shots at the premier as he was entering the hall of the national assembly, wounding him slightly in the right arm and left foot.

Henry Ford, Flivver Maker, Rushes to Aid of Mellon, the Savior of Rich Tax Dodgers

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor.)

Henry Ford shows his solidarity with the multi-millionaire clique which dominates the country in an interview with Samuel Crowther for Colliers Weekly in which he lends the weight of his name to the propaganda for Mellon's help-the-rich tax reduction scheme.

In an argument characterized by misstatement and bad economic reasoning he cleverly appeals to the common man to support the program on the ground that it will bring lower living costs and higher wages.

Ford's premises, that high taxes add to the cost of living and that the reinvestment of profits makes possible cheaper production and higher wages, are broadly correct.

But his idea that Mellon's plan to reduce the taxes on large incomes is the road to the desirable results and that opponents of this plan favor higher general taxes is unwarranted by the facts. While his conclusion that high surtaxes stand in the way of the reinvestment of profits is completely refuted by the actual history of the United States Steel corporation, not to mention the development of his own Ford industry.

Some Ford Bunk.

Ford says: "It is time we started to think of taxes in terms of the cost of living. Any administration or any set of legislators that advocate high taxes ought to be run out of office because they are really advocating the high cost of living. We have to pay some taxes but the greater part of what we pay ought to go for productive purposes—for good roads, for schools, for better health and all those things which make life easier. But we ought to pay as we go and not attempt to have things we cannot afford to have."

Now Ford should understand that the outstanding burden which the people are carrying as a result of failure to "pay as we go" is the war debt of some $24,000,000,000. If the country had heeded the advice of economists and paid for the war out of current income by much higher taxes on large incomes the present tax burden would be lower by at least a billion dollars. Instead the advice of financiers was followed to their enormous profit and as a result the country is raising each year by taxation a billion dollars to pay the wealthy classes interest on this loan. Those who oppose Mellon's plan propose that the country ask not lower but higher taxes from the rich in order to retire this debt and get rid of the huge interest burden as soon as possible. That sounds like a more sensible road to lower taxes, doesn't it?

Another Ford Fake.

Dealing with the reinvestment of profits in the building up of the Ford industry, Ford says: "If the present income tax had been in force we should have had to pay most of what we earned to the government." This is a plain misstatement of fact. The present tax law takes only 12½ per cent of a corporations net income unless it is paid out in cash dividends to wealthy owners. But Ford continues his argument on the basis of that fallacy. He says: "We did not have to do that and so we were able to put that money into more and more machinery which enabled us not only to bring the price of the car down but also to raise our wages first to a minimum of $5 and then to a minimum of $6 a day."

This is a clever appeal to the man of low wages, but it is entirely at variance with the plain facts of industrial history. The development of the modern plant of the United States Steel corporation did not come from the investment of large personal incomes but from the reinvestment by the corporation itself of $1,100,000,000 of its undivided profits which would not have been touched by the personal income tax or surtax. When the steel corporation was organized in 1901 it was overcapitalized by more than $720,000,000. That is, its entire common stock and part of its preferred stock represented no real investment at all. As a result the reinvestment of $1,100,000,000 out of surplus profits in new construction has increased the property account by only $306,311,623.

Built by Surplus Profits.

Similarly the great Ford plants were not built up out of huge personal incomes reinvested but out of surplus profits retained in the industry instead of being paid out in dividend checks.

The interesting thing is that to the extent that high surtaxes discourage the taking of excessive personal incomes out of industry they actually encourage directors to reinvest profits in the improvement and building up of the industry itself, just the reverse of Ford's proposition.

When it comes to relieving the tax burden of the ordinary man it is universally agreed among careful students of the problem that of all taxes those on unearned incomes are the hardest to pass on to the under dog. Here lies the real reason why rich men favor Mellon's plan.

Unskilled Workers Given Wage Raises Thruout Australia

(By The Federated Press)

MELBOURNE, Australia, March 3.—Increased rates of pay have been granted to unskilled laborers in the building trade, by the federal arbitration court. All such workers thruout Australia are affected.

In New South Wales the casual rate has been increased from 51 1-2 cents to 55 1-2 cents an hour, and the rate for continuous workers from 41 1-2 cents to 44 1-2 cents an hour.

South Australian casual rates have been increased by 4 cents to 53 1-2 cents and continuous rates by 3 cents to 43 cents; Victorian casual rates by 5 1-2 cents to 57 cents and continuous rates by 3 cents to 46 cents; Tasmanian casual rates have been increased by 4 cents to 55 1-2 cents, and continuous rates by 3 cents to 44 1-2 cents an hour. Similar increases have been made in Western Australia and Queensland.

Fall Certainly Was Good to His Oily Pals When in Office

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Shipping board records reveal that former Secretary Fall cancelled the contract between the Shipping Board and the interior department, on the one hand, and the Midwest Refining Co. on the other, whereby the board secured its oil fuel at 75 cents a barrel. Then he had a new contract made with Sinclair's Mammoth Oil Corporation, at about $1.60. The loss for one year was $10,900,000, at the present rate of consumption of oil by the government fleet.

Work Daily for "The Daily!"

48-HOUR WEEK OPPOSED BY BOSS'S LOBBYIS

Mrs. Dudley Malon Wants Non-Sex Laws

(By The Federated Press)

ALBANY, N. Y., March 3.—heated debate ensued before the N York state senate and assembly co mittees here, when bills proposing 48-hour week and the establishme of a minimum wage commission we discussed. The bills apply only women and minors.

Three divergent attitudes emerg during the argument in the assemb chamber.

Intransigent opposition to the bil was expressed by the employers' r presentative, Mark A. Daly. It wi be remembered that Daly's role the paid lobbyist of the Associat Industries was exposed recently du ing the bosses' unsuccessful attac upon State Labor Commissione Shientag. On that occasion, it w shown that the Associated Industri have been expending immense sum to maintain a lobby, devoted to sabo taging every measure of social economic progress. In the presen hearing, the employers' spokesma again stood for the factory owner profits as against a living wage an decent working hours.

Mrs. Dudley Field Malone, N tional Woman's party, an oppone of the bills—for very different rea sons—declared that she would vigor ously indorse them, if the contem plated laws were applicable to me as well as women and minors.

"Legislation fixing hours of labor, asserted Mrs. Malone, "should be o a non-sex basis. It is gallant enoug of the legislature to offer wome special privileges, but we are con vinced that in the end it will do th women more harm than good."

Others who identified themselve with this opinion stated that the pas sage of the bills would mean whole sale dismissals of women from fact ories, since men would be retained t perform a greater quantity of wor during the same hours, or by over time.

Sponsors of the bills included re presentatives of the State Federatio of Labor, the Consumers' league, th Women's Trade Union league an other labor groups. Their policy i advocating the measures was gener ally that half a loaf is better than n bread at all. Governor Smith had already recommended the bills in hi annual message, and the Democrati senate has lent them approval.

In 1923, both the minimum wag commission and 48-hour week bill were defeated, but it is considered that the latter stand fair chances of being passed this year.

THE BIG THREE RELIGIONS IN UNITED FRONT

To Force Public Schools Teach Religion

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 3.—Chapter Theta Pu Alpha Pi, a rather long name that does not mean much to the average Poor Fish was the vehicle which brought about the unity of three warring religious creeds for the purpose of defending the Virginity of Mary of Bethlehem against Dr. Perry Stickney Grant and other clergymen with a progressive turn of mind.

At least that is what the organization of Catholic women under the fancy title had in mind when they called the conference which was held in the Waldorf Astoria recently.

Among those present were Archbishop Hayes, Mgr. Michael J. Lavelle representing the Catholics, the Rev. Dr. D. De Sola Pool, rabbi of the Spanish and Portuguese synagogue and Walton S. Moore, president of the New York Federation of Churches, representing the protestants.

This aggregation issued a greeting to the citizens of New York announcing that they had formed a committee that would guarantee a religious training, to every child going to the public schools.

How the citizens of New York who know the hostility of the Catholic Church to public schools will take these self-appointed saviors is not yet known.

Catholic Teachers Applaud Rabbi.

Over 3,000 Catholic school teachers packed the grand ball room of the Waldorf Astoria where the meeting was held. The Rabbi spoke for the Jews. Dr. Walter M. Howlett, head of the Daily Vacation Bible School association spoke for the protestants. The archbishop and Mgr. Lavelle spoke for the Catholics.

The judiciary was there of course. Supreme Court Justice Thomas C. T. Crain represented the Episcopalians and Judge Alfred J. Talley spoke for the Catholics. Edward W. Stitt, assistant superintendent of public schools and four district superintendents sat on the platform.

The program began with "The Star Spangled Banner," and ended up with "Holy God We Praise Thy Name," a Catholic hymn. It seems the Catholics had the best of the United Front.

The advantages of religion as an aid to government were enumerated by Archbishop Hayes. Religious people have reverence for authority, he declared. He might add that is 95 per cent of the value of religion. It is a very good thing for those in high places.

Clerics Forget Sectarianism.

The doors of our schools are closed to God he declared. All the speakers emphasized the need for all religious denominations to get together in defense of their common graft. At the rate contempt for religion is growing in the country, another generation might see most of the clergy writing poetry for a living. The scandals of clergymen whose principal activity seems to be running away with their female choristers, the high death rate among kitchen maids in the houses of priests and the general moral decline among the rabbis combined with the passing of hair as a desirable decoration for the human countenance, combine to make the life of the clergy anything but happy. A desperate effort must be made to inject the opium into the immature minds of the children and the Catholic Church is leading the way as usual.

Average Hourly Wage of Workers in 1,700 Plants Shows Decline

NEW YORK, March 3.—The average hourly pay of workers in 1,700 manufacturing plants in the United States during December, 1923, was 55.9 cents, according to the report of the National Industrial Conference board. This compares with average hourly earnings of 56.1 cents in November.

Part-time work in a number of industries was reflected in the fact that these workers averaged only 47.4 hours a week in December as compared with an average of more than 49 hours in December, 1922.

St. Louis Enjoying Little Private Graft Scandal of Its Own

By MARTIN A. DILLMON
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, March 3.—An investigation of tax books here has revealed frauds by which the city of St. Louis has been swindled of $85,781 by erasures and alterations of real estate tax records during the last five years. Tax payers favored by the doctored records are high in the councils of St. Louis politics and big business. Those who profited by the frauds will be called upon to pay up, according to city officials.

William P. Etling, former chief deputy assessor, and William P. Caufield, Jr., former clerk in Etling's office, have been indicted on charges of bribery and alteration of public records. One beneficiary of the tax reductions testified he bribed Etling. Etling was thereupon removed from office.

Fears are expressed that the strangle hold of the republican political bosses on St. Louis city affairs may be broken in the approaching campaign as a result of the wholesale frauds at the city hall.

During 1923 Mayor Kiel and his board of estimates and apportionment kicked aside several requests from city employes for better pay on the allegation that the city was broke and could not stand improved wage standards. The board of aldermen recently passed a bill providing for a flat increase of $30 a month to city firemen, this being one development in a two-year fight of the union firemen for better wages. But that ordinance must yet survive Mayor Kiel's estimate and apportionment board.

SOVIET ENVOY HAILS BRITISH RECOGNITION

Russia Now Stands on Equal Terms

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BERLIN, March 3.—Recognition of Russia by the British Labor government was hailed with satisfaction at the Russian embassy here. A prominent official of the embassy made the following statement to the Federated Press.

"Recognition means that Russia can now negotiate with Britain on equal terms. People who try to pick a flaw in the situation by pointing out that long negotiations may yet be ahead before an agreement is reached simply don't know what they are talking about. The Russian point of view has been thruout, 'first recognize us, then negotiate.' The Baldwin government wanted us first to negotiate and then they would say whether they would recognize us. That would have put us in an unfavorable position; we should then not have been recognized as equals in the negotiations.

"Others have tried to interpret the fact that for the present there won't be an exchange of ambassadors, but merely of charges d'affaires, as an indication that, after all the recognition is not a full one. These people, again, simply don't know diplomatic usage. No country sends an ambassador to another until a so-called agreement has been reached. America, for instance, after the war took up diplomatic relations again with Germany, but no ambassador was sent until after a treaty regulating all affairs had been established. That did not mean that the two countries continued their enmity. Americans came to visit Germany, passports were vised, and in general life between the two countries developed as in pre-war times. The sending of an ambassador was merely a question of time and formality.

"The same situation applies with reference to British-Russian relations. The charge d'affaires will be followed by an ambassador as soon as the details have been settled.

"British action will have a profound influence upon other countries, as has already happened in the case of Italy. We can now afford to wait until France and America make up their minds to climb onto the loaded bandwagon."

Convict Evangelist, Who Hated Reds, of Crime Against Girl

(By The Federated Press)

TACOMA, Wash., Mar. 3.—Three Fingered Jack Godwin, an evangelist who specializes in converting radicals to the true faith, will confine his religious attentions exclusively to political prisoners for some time to come.

Jack has been found guilty by a jury of a sex offense against a little girl. When arrested in California at the request of the Tacoma police he received much space in the daily press for his claim that he was being framed up by the radicals because of his effective work against bolshevism. His claims were not presented at the trial to counteract the evidence of statutory crime on which he was convicted.

Meeting to Limit Families Coming Despite Preachers

SYRACUSE, N. Y., March 3.—Ministers of the gospel in Syracuse disagree with the waggish fellow who insists upon calling the baby carriage a blunderbuss.

When it was announced recently that the state conference of birth control advocates would be held here, a meeting of clergymen demanded that the city council pass a special ordinance, prohibiting the discussion of birth control in public. The aldermen passed such a bill, but Mayor Walrath vetoed it. An attempt to pass the ordinance over the mayoral veto was defeated by two votes. The meeting will, accordingly, be held as scheduled.

Mystery Contestant Forging Ahead

City on Lake Michigan Not Making Chicago Leery or Weary.

"NOW, I suppose you have been wondering where I have been since the Chicago Subscription Contest started? Well, for various reasons, I couldn't get on the job until a few evenings ago." This from Comrade Plav, the "Mystery Contestant," as he handed in subscriptions for the DAILY WORKER, totaling 78 points—the result of three evenings' effort. There apear to be good reasons for this booster not revealing his identity. The City Subscription Committee has no special desires to delve into spheres of the so-called "Unknown," especially in a contest of this kind. But if this mystery helps Mr. Unknown to get more "subs" and serves as further stimulus to the campaign, it will not be ruled out of order.

The N. W. English Branch is out for the lead. And the way subs have been coming in from that direction during the past week is an indication that the Englewood Branch must keep going to retain its present position in the contest. With only a little more than a week to the close of the contest, these two Branches are in a favorable position. The order has been changing constantly during the past ten days, however, and several of the other English Branches deserve watching. This is particularly true in the case of the Irving Park Branch, one of the smaller branches, which is threatening the leaders.

The Lake View Scandinavian Branch is leading the foreign language Branches at the moment, followed in close order by the Karl Marx Scandinavian, German, 1st South Slavic and N. W. Russian Branches. The 1st Czecho-Slovac is increasing in its point score, and the last few days show that the Lettish Branch is striving to get into the running.

One of the Scandinavian comrades has been studying the English language, and in a way that is bringing results in more ways than one. He has been reading the DAILY WORKER since its inauguration, and while reading it, one of his shop mates became interested. The latter is now a subscriber. The Scandinavian comrade is now convinced that language difficulties are not such serious barriers to getting subs after all. He is out for more.

The John Reed Branch of the Young Workers League is leading in the contest for the Y. W. L. branches. The members of this Branch are sure that the Nicolai Lenin Branch is not the one to get the picture of the recently deceased leader whose name it bears. Going out for subs for the DAILY WORKER, and at the same time getting subs for the Young Worker and Young Comrade, is a method which can be pursued and give good results.

Chicago is not complaining about handicaps. (It might justifiably mention a few). Nor is it feeling leery or weary over the fact that the city on Lake Michigan has found it necessary to put on a full time City Subscription Agent to keep on the map.

THE THEATRE

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK CITY, March 3.—Never has Mr. Bernard Shaw been more impressive than in "Saint Joan," which is enjoying its first presentation on any stage thru the Theatre Guild here. And a sterling production, at that. One feels that, in this play, G. B. S. has unleashed the pent-up, hot emotions which, in his most successful works, he has subordinated to cold intellectuality.

Not that "Saint Joan" does not abound in satire. But this is the weakest aspect of his powerful stage chronicle. The jibes at the English in "Saint Joan" often verge perilously close to the slapstick; and of the blows at the Catholic church, a few are telling, while many are overstressed. In the second act, wherein the Archbishop of Rheims unveils the shams of his cult, one wishes that his deceptions were rendered less apparent and that the dramatist had left us to do more of our own "debunking." But these vulnerable passages serve to magnify the mature wisdom and beauty of the play as a whole.

Mr. Shaw leaves the traditional story of Joan virtually intact. Joan is merely shorn of the superstitions woven around her legend. Her behavior is rationalized, and she stands before us, the unripe girl, obedient to her conscience, courageously defying Church and State in her resplendent faith.

The eternal price of heresy is the recurrent theme. Last century's iconoclasm becomes the sanctified respectability of today. And when, in the epilogue Joan reappears before her inquisitors, who are now her humble worshippers, we are made to realize that they would avidly burn her again at the stake, were she to return in the flesh. We are reminded that, because men possess so little imagination, a new saint must be crucified for each generation.

Only the shabby English soldier, a reincarnated Henry Dubb, reveals something akin to genuine understanding of Joan's spirit—and he, of course, is merely on furlough from hell.

Right to Picket Is Issue in Trial of 170 Shoe Workers

NEW YORK, March 3.—Labor's right to picket during a strike is the issue on which 170 shoe workers of Brockton, Mass., are resolved to go to jail in a body if necessary in connections with their trial on appeal before the Massachusetts Superior court. The men were arrested during the shoe workers' strike last July, when the Brockton city attorney ruled that picketing by strikers is illegal.

The Civil Liberties Union and the Labor Defense Council announce that they will grant full support to the shoe workers in their legal struggle.

Apparently, the local authorities decided that the anti-picketing decree could not be sustained, so the 170 laborers were arrested in tenuous charges of loitering, intimidation and assault. Judge William Rowe imposed jail sentences ranging from ten days to four months and fines amounting to $3,500. A change of venue was demanded during the first trial on the plea that Judge William Rowe is a brother of Frederick Rowe, superintendent of the Chester Eaton shoe works, where the strike had been called; it was further alleged that Judge Rowe personally held stock in that concern. The change of venue was refused.

When the appeal is heard District Attorney Williams, who prosecuted the case against Sacco and Vanzetti, will represent the state.

Why Not Put the Capitalist System Out of Business?

(By The Federated Press)

SEATTLE, March 3.—Echoes of the Teapot Dome scandal were heard across the continent in addresses before the Seattle Central Labor council when T. C. Robbins, representative of the railway employes department, American Federation of Labor, appealed to workers to clean out reactionaries in the national administration.

Edwin Denby, deposed cabinet member, promised railway employers at the height of the shopmen's strike that even the navy, if possible, would be used to help break the walkout by aiding in transporting goods between coastal cities, Robbins declared. H. M. Daugherty, attorney general whose fall is believed imminent, struck a black blow at labor in his permanent injunction against the shopmen.

The Esch-Cummins act repeal is the acid test of candidates for congress, Robbins told the council. The railway labor board has to be put out of business if the railway brotherhoods are to survive.

Yellow Socialist May Be Polish Envoy to Court of St. James

WARSAW, Poland, March 3.—Joseph Rettinger, socialist of the yellow stripe, may be the next Polish ambassador to London, if the efforts now made by the socialist and Jewish parties are successful. He may be sent either to replace the present minister Constance Skirmunt or as a special envoy accredited to the labor government.

The socialists claim that Skirmunt is not capable of dealing with the present British labor government at the "court of MacD

BIRTH CONTROL CLINIC OPENS IN GERMANY

Information Given Free to Workers

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

BERLIN, March 3.—The state of Prussia has received an unusual gift in the form of an institute for sex-science (sexualwissenschaft). It is to be known as the Magnus Harschfeld Foundation for Sex Science and is given by Dr. Hirschfeld.

One of the important departments of this institute, thru which press representatives were taken by the founder, is that in which free advice on sex matters is given to married people. This department is consulted most by men and women of the working classes, who for ecomomic and other reasons are worried over the prospect of additional offspring. Birth control information, otherwise usually available only to the rich, thus becomes available to the workers.

The subject of eugenics also comes in for attention at these consultations, and couples with bad family histories, which make it more than likely that their offspring will be defective or degenerate, are given the necessary information for preventing conception.

The institute also treats sadism, homo-sexuality, perversion and the like, and tries to find the remedy rather than merely condemning such unfortunates to social ostracism. A special research department is in touch with the physicians of prisons and houses of correction and is gathering valuable material for showing the connection between sex and crime. In the institute is a museum showing specimens of every type of sexual disease and irregularity.

Representatives of the various departments of the federal government as well as city and state authorities were present at the exercises marking the transfer of the foundation to the state. It was pointed out in the formal addresses that there is only one other city on the European continent that has a similar institute, Vienna.

Daugherty on the Run While Thieves Are Looting Nation

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 3.—President Coolidge has discovered the Northern Pacific lands fraud case, and has written Chairman Lenroot of the senate public lands committee that he hopes all necessary action will be taken to protect the public interest. Once more, nothing is heard from his attorney general, Harry Daugherty.

The forest land grab covers 3,000,000 acres of valuable forest lands claimed as part of its original grant from the government by the first of the Hill reads. The records of the government show that the full amount of the original grant of lands—which sold for about two and a half times the total cost of the road—have been given to the company.

Congress was heavily bribed, in the Civil war period, to give away these public lands to railroad promoters. The Union Pacific crowd were the first to get a princely domain from Congress. They "greased" their bill thru to passage in the week following the battle of Gettysburg, when the attention of the country was fixed on the fact that the Confederacy had been broken.

Minor Speaks at Detroit Sunday on 'Who Are the Reds?'

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Mich., March 3.—Robert Minor, editor of the Liberator, will be the speaker at the Labor Forum in the House of the Masses, 2101 Gratiot Ave., Sunday, March 9, at 3:00 p. m. His subject is announced as "Who Are the Reds?" His address will prove of particular interest at present on account of the fact that this is the fifth anniversary of the founding of the Third International.

International Women's Day will be celebrated in Detroit with a mass meeting, concert and dance on Saturday, March 8, at 7:00 p. m. The celebration will take place in the new home of the Finnish Branch of Detroit, which is located at 5963 14th St., near McGraw. Mrs. S. I. Johnson Knight of Toronto will deliver an address on "Woman In Industry and Politics."

The English branch of the Workers Party will hold its third annual ball in the auditorium of the House of the Masses on Sunday evening, March 9. The annual affair of the English Branch has come to be a social event of considerable importance in party circles in Detroit.

Reichswehr Sing Internationale.

DRESDEN, March 3.—When recently in Dresden soldiers of the Black Reichswehr sang the Ehrhardt song, other Reichswehr soldiers retorted by singing the "Internationale." At night there was a free for all fight in the barracks between the two sides. The soldiers who had sung the "Internationale" were punished.

A Conversation

"Why is the Third International so hated and maligned?"

"Because it stands for centralization, direction, discipline, and organic unity."

"Then how does it differ from the Second International?"

"Exactly as the Communist Party differs from a Socialist Party."

"But I don't know what the difference is between the two parties."

"Let me explain the difference. The Socialist Party is a debating society, a loose organization where one can obtain pleasing bourgeois entertainment, only it is decorated with radical plumes in order to make it seem different, make it, seem revolutionary."

"Well, if people are not ready for the real thing, an imitation of it is perfectly alright."

"It is evident that you still have the Second International ideology. There is no short road to Communism. You can't fool people into it. Half measures are worse than useless. They must understand what the really revolutionary spirit is. It seems that you, too, need a little enlightenment in that line"

"But how, where, can I find out just what is the function of the Third International? How it differs from the second, and so on. Recommend me some book"

"There is no book, no good book on that subject published But you can find out about it—"

"Find out about it? What do you mean? Where?"

"For the first time in the United States are lectures given not only on the functions of the Third, but also on the Second and First Internationals."

"But where?"

"At the Workers'. School, 127, University Pl., New York City."

"And who is the lecturer?"

"Ludwig Lore, editor of the Volkszeitung."

"What time does he give it?"

"He gives lectures each Thursday at 8 p. m. You had better come to hear him and bring your friends along."

"What school is that—"

"The Workers' School—whose sole purpose it is to give real communist education."

"This is the first time I have heard of it. I certainly will come Thursday night. Good-bye."

More Wind and Less Strings Is Alfred Frankenstein's Motto

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Harvey Noack, first flute player in the Civic orchestra, was soloist with the Chicago Symphony orchestra at the popular concert on Feb. 28, at Orchestra Hall. This is the first time in a number of years that a soloist on a wind instrument has played with the orchestra. The only other occasion in the memory of this writer was when Alfred Barthel, now first oboe in the symphony, played a concerto.

It is interesting to reflect for a moment on why our solo performances should be limited to string instruments, voice, and piano. It is not because there is no literature. Nor is it because there is no public interest, since wind solists have thrived in the past and there is no indication that they would get no support in the present. And only the musical jackasses declare that the stringed instruments possess some mysterious artistic quality that the wind instruments lack.

The most potent reason is that the music schools and societies that encourage musical endeavor take no cognizance of anything but singers, pianists, and violinists. Nowhere in this country is a scholarship offered in wind instruments, and only one organization of musicians has offered anything in the way of encouragement to wind players.

The Society of American Musicians, a Chicago organization, for the last three years has put on a contest for young American musicians. Last year the contest was opened to flutists. Next year it will be open for not only singers, pianists, violinists, 'cellists and flutists, but players of the clarinet, oboe and bassoon will be admitted also. We hope that next year the trumpet, French horn and trombone will be included as well. And more fervently we hope that other societies will follow the lead of the Society of American Musicians.

The digression is long but worthy. Noack, winner in the contest spoken of above, earned in this way his appearance with the Symphony orchestra.

J. Henry Walton, tenor, winner in the voice section of the same contest, sang an aria from Coleridge-Taylor's "Hiawatha" most beautifully.

Other numbers on the program were Karl Goldmark's delightful "Rustic Wedding" symphony, an overture by Smetana, a dance by George Schumann, and the selections from the Berlioz Faust that were played on the regular Symphony program last week.

For the next popular concert, to be played at Orchestra Hall on March 13, Olga Eitner, violinist, who came out on top in the contest that brought Welton and Noack also to the orchestra as soloists, will play the first Bruch concerto, and the orchestra will play a march by Saint Saens, the Mignon overture of Thomas, a suite by MacDowell, Borodin's famous "Sketch of the Steppes of Central Asia," and Chaykovski's "Nut Cracker" suite.

Ask Quarantine Be Lifted.

OAKLAND, Calif., March 3.—Personal appeal will be made to the governors of various states to modify the quarantine against California's livestock as a rosult of the hoof and mouth disease epidemic.

NEGRO PAPERS SEE LABOR ISSUE SINCE SANHEDRIN

Radicals Got Results Comment Shows

That the result of the Negro All-Race Congress or Sanhedrin which the DAILY WORKER reported at length during its sessions in Chicago was to put the labor issue squarely before the Race is evident from the comment of the Negro press.

The Negro press comments at length on the part taken by delegates from the Workers Party and the African Blood Brotherhood in showing the necessity for an alliance of black and white workers and it notes that the social welfare type of leaders at the Sanhedrin such as Dean Kelly Miller were unable to keep the labor issue off the floor.

Crusader Reporting Fine.

Most important of all the Negro press agencies is the Crusader Service, published by the African Blood Brotherhood and distributed to Negro publications particularly and to labor papers generally, regardless of race.

This service had splendid reports of the All-Race Congress and emphasized the same significant features that were brought out in the DAILY WORKER'S reports. The Crusader Service scored the reactionary real estate sharks, who sabotaged the fight against segregation, and the chamber of commerce interests that sabotaged efforts to place the Sanhedrin on record for solidarity between the oppressed of both races.

Quotes Daily Worker.

Just at hand is a copy of the February 29 issue of the Pittsburgh American, a Negro paper that is not radical or of a special labor character. But it found the labor issue at the Sanhedrin of sufficient news importance to reprint nearly half a page from the DAILY WORKER'S reports.

The American gives special attention to the DAILY WORKER'S reporting of the personell of the governing committee, consisting of Dean Kelly Miller, F. B. Ransom, J. L. Neil and R. N. Hawkins, showing the professional and business connections of each which prevent their championing the cause of labor. And it gives the labor newspaper's account of Miller's efforts to sabotage labor at the conclave and his failure to cover up this vital issue.

Pleads For Bourgeoisie.

The Pittsburgh Courier, a rival Negro paper, managed by Editor Vann, who took a prominent part in the Sanhedrin, argues with the DAILY WORKER and with Lovett Fort-Whiteman of the Workers Party who had an article therein. The Courier fears for the Negro bourgeoisie, that Fort-Whiteman criticises, fears frankly, pleads that the progress of the race is dependent on the prestige of the Negro leadership drawn from the ranks of this new bourgeoisie and wants radical labor to handle them more gently.

This at least shows that radical Negro labor is no longer ignored; that the old line Negro leaders are on the defensive.

Numerous Negro papers commented on the part radical Negro labor played in the convention, some hostilely, some favorably.

Labor Issues Before Race.

The mass of comment shows that the labor issue is before the Race; it will not down. The labor issue was put before the Race by the radical workers present at the Sandhedrin in spite of the efforts of the conservatives to make it just a nice Sunday school social service sort of affair.

This means that the campaign for the elimination of the color barrier in the remaining labor unions will be waged with more and more intensity and the time is brought nearer when the workers will show undivided solidarity, regardless of race, creed or color.

Ford's Benevolence Looks Rather Thin to Luigi Scopana

By STANLEY BOONE.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

DETROIT, March 3.—If there is anything more important in Detroit than human life, or the much-heralded right to work, or the seldom-mentioned right to have suitable food, it is the naturalization law.

With Luigi Scopana, 24 years old, the "right to work" had little to do. With him it was the necessity to work. He needed a job, didn't have one and couldn't get one. There were jobs at the Ford Motor Co. But he had been discharged from there previously.

He erased his own name on his naturalization papers and wrote in the name Angelo Ferrari. But he made the alteration in pencil and the tampering was detected by the employment agent at the Ford Motor Co.

Much propaganda has been written of Ford sociology, of the benevolent despotism of that employer of 140,000.

What the Ford Motor Co. employment office did, however, in the case of Scopana, was turn him over to immigration officials. What immigration officials did was turn him over to Judge Charles C. Simons in the United States district court.

Judge Simons sentenced him to 30 days in the Detroit house of correction for violating the naturalization law.

CHILD LABOR IS REAL MENACE IN UNITED STATES

Infants Working Eleven Hours in the Fields

Capitalist greed not alone exploits the adults in the mills, mines and factories of the nation but it takes the child out of the cradle and twists its little bones out of their sockets in the mad rush for profits.

The oldest inhabitant has an early recollection of movements to prohibit child slavery. But it still goes on. When congress passes a law prohibiting it our supreme court declares it unconstitutional. Sam Gompers passes resolutions against it but the capitalists pay no attention. They know their Sam.

This curse of child slavery is taking place here in "free" America and not in the so-called benighted countries of Europe. American tourists visiting Lithuania or some other state on the borderland of Russia return to tell sorrowful tales of how women there are used to draw the plow while the husband plods along behind smoking his pipe and urging the woman along with curses and blows. This is, of course, an exaggerated picture but granting that it was true such a condition would be humane compared to that which consigns little children of from eight to twelve years into slavery. This is done here under the Stars and Stripes.

The capitalist press tries as usual to blame certain manufacturers for it rather than the system. But that excuse will not hold water. Children are employed wherever the bosses can get away with it.

Child welfare workers declare that conditions existing on farms today are worse than those that prevailed years ago in the mining regions. In Baltimore, Maryland, padrones recruit whole families from the tenement districts. They are herded into narrow pens six feet long and four feet wide, without privacy or sanitation. There are as many as one hundred in each shanty, separated only by boards ten inches high. Men, women and children are indiscriminately huddled together on bare boards for sleep.

How futile and hypocritical is the "moral" crusade of the religious organizations of Chicago to protect the eyes of burlesque patrons from the nude or semi-nude forms of chorus girls, while the immoral conditions under which these unfortunate victims of capitalist greed live are ignored. But that is the way organized virtue and religion always looking for the mote and ignoring the beam, in the social body.

At the Mississippi Valley conference on industrial legislation now meeting at the Hull House, Taylor Frye of Wisconsin said that since the supreme court declared the federal child labor law unconstitutional the individual states should be forced to pass their own child labor laws. He did not say how the hands of the supreme court could be kept off after these laws were passed.

Miss Jeanette Rankin declared that despite the idea that child labor conditions in the south were the worst, Rhode Island had the largest percentage of child labor of any state in the union. Two Massachusetts cities had the largest proportional number of children under 14 working.

The conditions in Maryland as revealed by an investigation made by the childrens' bureau at Washington beggars description. In May every year trucks laden with household goods can be seen moving from Baltimore into the country to pick strawberries, beans and peas. The padrone tells them they are going to have a "nice vacation in the country with good pay."

The following excerpt from the report of the children's bureau is shocking:

"Most of the camps contained but one building, known as a 'shanty,' which serves as sleeping quarters for the workers. This building, usually two stories high, was erected on piles or rough stones. In most camps it was weather beaten or unpainted and the windows usually lacked either glass or shutters, or both.

"As a rule there was but one room on each floor, with stairs on the outside leading to the upper room. On each side of a narrow aisle down the center of the room the floor was divided into pens by boards ten or twelve inches in height. Each pen was about 6 feet long and four to six feet wide and covered with straw for a mattress.

"Each family was allotted one of these pens, the larger families sometimes securing those six feet in width. At night, men, women and children, partially clad, one family separated from the next by the plank ten inches in height, lay side by side.

"Many of the shanties containing two such rooms often were used for sleeping purposes by thirty to fifty persons of both sexes and all ages.

"Little attention was given to sanitation. More than one-half the families had no toilet facilities. Many families described the way in which they lived as 'like hogs,' 'like sheep,' and 'like cattle beasts'."

The survey found that the wages of entire families were seldom over three dollars. On a sample day only ten families earned as high as five dollars while forty families earned less than two dollars. With few exceptions the children of eight and ten years of age worked the same hours as their parents. Children of tender years not alone picked berries but plowed, harrowed, worked machine cultivators and transplanted.

Samuel Gompers is too busy saving the capitalists who exploit those children from the horrors of Bolshevism to do anything to even curb this menace or even modify its evils.

The Concluding Speech by Kamenev Before Moscow Communists

Today we publish the concluding speech by Chairman Kamenev before the Moscow Soviet on the problems now facing the Russian Communist Party. Tomorrow we begin the publication of the views of Stalin, one of the foremost spokesman of Russian Communism. Kamenev spoke as follows:

* * * *

IN my address I have dealt with with the most essential and important questions of Party life at the present time. I believe that you must come to a decision today, and that this decision is not only determinative for the Moscow organization, but for the general opinion of the Party in the provinces as well. Therefore, I beg you to set aside that feeling or nervousness now prevailing, and to draw the balance of the present discussion meeting.

Comrades, everything which has been said here is not quite in accordance with that demanded or desired by Comrade Zinoviev. Mention has here been made of a monopoly, and this is not right. It is not right, because there has been no monopoly against the discussion. During the whole of the time that the discussion has been going on in Moscow, not a single circumstance has occurred enabling the much condemned apparatus to be reproached with having prevented any Party nucleus from carrying on the discussion, and there is no power which could act contrary to this, under the present resolution of the Central, or could prevent anyone from bringing up any desired question for discussion.

Is the Central Factional?

We must come to some decision or other, or our discussion will appear to be nothing beyond a jest.

It is not a question of whether this or that comrade is satisfied with the Central or not; it turns upon the Theses, upon the fact, that, if the leaders of this Central bring about a split in the course of the evolution which they are calling upon the Party to perform, this will be a disaster. And the second question: Does that democracy which we proclaim include the liberty to form groups—that is the essential question which must be answered.

Perhaps it is true that a certain monopoly exists, the monopoly which the Party has placed in the hands of a certain group of persons, and the duties attendant on it which we have to fulfill so long as the Party exists; upon this monopoly we have to keep a firm hand, or we should be criminals, and other workers and leaders would have to be chosen for the Central. It is our duty to defend this monopoly, and we shall defend it, or we should not be the leaders of the Central, but old women.

And the question to which the Moscow organization must receive a reply is: Does the Central really represent that which it is whispered to be in the Moscow organization—a group faction? The statement that the members of the apparatus are mobilized at this meeting, is nonsense. When Comrade Zinoviev stated in his address that we members of the Central make it our endeavor not to bring up questions relating to differences of opinion—then this signifies that we have none.

No one can say that the majority of the Central has become transformed into a group, into a faction. Comrades, have you not at the head of your Party a Central elected by the Congress, and which is no accidental formation, for the elections at the Congress are not carried out by accidental majorities? The Central, as constituted at present, has been formed during the course of decades by gradual selection. How many have been members of the Central!

Central Not Accidental Grouping.

Do not tell us that the Central is an accidental grouping of people who have come together from motives of personal friendship and have usurped power.

The Central is something which has been formed by the Party by a slow and lengthy process of selection, it has been created from the elements which the Party has found it necessary to place in the foreground. Comrade Preobrashensky observed that he had heard something of a triple head.

I should like to ask Comrade Preobrashensky if he knows of one single political document, or of one single enactment or resolution which has emanated from this triple head? Does he know of any document in which the policy of the Central is not carried out in the name of the Central?

Does this imply that there exist no differences of opinion whatever in the Central? By no means. We were not chosen because we all agreed with one another. We disagree with one another in the Central, we have our majorities and minorities, as every nucleus has.

It would only be possible to speak of a faction if some decision were arrived at and carried out behind the back of the Central, or when members of the Central who were not agreed with the line adopted by the Central were deprived of the possibility of mutually discussing the decisions arrived at. So long as this is not the case—and you have no right to maintain that it is the case—you have no right to maintain that the Central is a faction center.

Necessity of Apparatus.

You have either to believe the Central or the others; the Central cannot work differently. And you must reply straight forwardly to this, even tho Comrades Preobrashensky and Sapronov allow that on the whole the Central acts correctly; for even if only one-tenth of the Party were to believe that the Central is leading a muzzled Party, then this Central is worth nothing. And if you yourselves do not face this question clearly, we shall demand the convocation of the extraordinary Party conference.

And now with regard to the Party apparatus. This question must be viewed from the political aspect.

Comrade Sapronov has asserted that the Party apparatus has become converted into a factional apparatus. A narrow factional spirit has been spoken of. This is what you have asserted, and not that the apparatus is decayed, and can be compared to a certain extent with the apparatus of German social democracy. This is utter nonsense, and it is difficult to see what is meant by it.

In Germany the apparatus is preventing the development of the revolution. But what conclusion is there for us to draw from this? Decidedly none whatever.

It is simply obvious that German social democracy possesses an apparatus worthy of it.

But for us the question is whether we have an apparatus which efficiently serves our Party. In our opinion, our apparatus needs freshening up; it has made mistakes. The reasons for the attack on the apparatus must be examined into. Is it because it is bad? Is it not flexible enough? Does it gag the mouths of the workers?

Then drag into the light of day, by the hair of their heads, all those who do not permit the workers to speak, who forbid discussion, and substitute the muzzle for leadership. But you have gone even further; you have asserted that the Party apparatus has become converted into a factional apparatus, and this means that nine-tenths of the policy pursued by the Central does not please you.

Apparatus Must Be Renewed.

But the policy of the Central will not please you any better when it consists of Sapronov and Preobrashensky, and the Central apparatus puts into practice some resolutions not agreeable to you for some reason.

What is to be said about the factional spirit? Have we not exterminated the Menshevist party? Have we not annihilated the "work" of social democracy in Germany? But we know the political background justifying our actions.

We succeeded in our efforts to destroy an apparatus hostile to us, and belonging to a faction pursuing a shameful policy. And when you speak here of a factional apparatus, you are saying indirectly that the policy of this apparatus is disagreeable to you because it is not in your hands, and because it is pursuing a policy which you attack.

I repeat that the apparatus must be renewed, and to do this lies in our hands. We can hold fresh elections.

Dare we dream for a moment of loosening the bands which bind us together, not only as a Party, but as a military formation?

When you can prove to us that the formation of groups is no longer dangerous, that the influence of the New Economic Policy is not dangerous, that we have conquered an international position ensuring us power and strength; when you can tell us that our democracy occupies a different position, and that the position of our apparatus has become so secure that groupings within the Party can exercise no influence upon it, then we shall reply: "The time has now come for liberty for discussion." But until it can be proved that this point has been arrived at, we prefer to say: "Discuss and consult, go from one nucleus to another, but do not form factions, which will lead to the disruption of the unity of the Party and of the Soviet power."

No Sign of Split.

In conclusion, I should like to touch upon Comrade Radek's address. He spoke of a split, and delivered a passionate speech against this split.

I cannot tell where he has found this talk of a split. If he had only desired to repeat the words of Comrade Lenin: "Be on your guard against schism, fear it, and take measures to prevent it," then he need only have taken Lenin's article and read it aloud.

Why did Radek speak as he did? If facts actually exist which prove schism, then it was his duty to bring them forward, for such a speech as his can only sew doubt and alarm. We cannot preserve calm when a responsible member of the Central comes and speaks of a split.

There is no split in the Party, and no sign of it, and there will not be any sign of it. Radek spoke of "both sides." What both sides? The two sides in disagreement—but he forgot that we are not a side. We are not in such a position that the Central Committee forms one side and some factional group another.

The Party has a Central which does not feel itself to be a side; this Central leads and carries out the policy, and accords all attention to criticism of its action. Were we not in possession of such a courageous organ, capable of undertaking responsibility in such decisive moments as that of the German revolution, we should possess no Party.

Two sides do not exist; there is only one whole—the Central, which estimates the criticism of its actions in accordance with essentials, and is willing to learn much from correct criticism.

This does not mean that we are bound to reject everything coming from any other source than our own camp, but it means that we have to subject everything we hear to a critical consideration, for on every occasion of historical turning points, these comrades have made us suggestions which would have driven our Party vehicle over the precipice.

Radek observed: "I regret that Trotsky, in this article, has permitted himself a comparison between the heads of our Party and the degeneration of Bernstein and other scolars of Marx." Radek is nine-tenths on the same road as Sapronov, but not quite.

Caution Needed.

At least that is my impression; yet he finds it necessary to express his regret that Trotsky has drawn this unnecessary comparison.

In this case I share Radek's regret and am sorry that Trotsky has formulated his views in such a manner as to allow his words to be seized upon by Sapronov as a weapon against the Central. It proves that greater caution should be exercised when formulating opinions. Here I have a note written by a workman: "Trotsky demands that the apparatus men be removed, how are we to know what to do!" It is obvious that the writer of this note has been induced to put this complicated question by Trotsky's formulation of his views. I do not speak of Trotsky's article, but of the manner in which his mode of expression is utilized.

Trotsky's article requires to be complemented and explained, or doubts may be aroused in the minds of the masses as to whether Comrade Trotsky demands that the apparatus men be removed.

Salvation lies in the strict adherence and execution of the resolution of the 10th Congress. If our Party carries out the impending change under the slogan of: "Away with these!" there is a danger that what is in reality a sound necessity may go too far, that it may overstep the line and destroy the essence of the apparatus.

If you will make up your minds that the Moscow organization accepts the resolution worked out by the Central, and undertakes to carry it out under the leadership of the Central, declining at the same time to take part in any attempt at forming factions, or in the incitement of any section of the Central against another, then we shall be able to perform the necessary evolution with ease.

But if we let the reins go at this turning, then within a month we shall have factions and sections being played off against one another. Above all, the Party must be preserved by the Central from internal schism. It has hitherto been customary to praise the Moscow organization.

We read in the newspapers, and we hear from Comrade Preobrashensky, that the Moscow organization is a living organization, altho it shows certain signs of bureaucracy. I fear that these comrades praise the Moscow organization because its first steps raised their hopes, and that they will cease to praise the Moscow organization when it lends determined support to the Central, and rejects this group.

Ludendorff Woos Fascisti with Warlike Speeches from Dock

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MUNICH, March 3.—Ludendorff, former warlord of Germany, came here to be tried but instead he has placed his accusers on trial and is a popular idol among the Fascisti elements who were rather demoralized since the failure of the "beer hall" rebellion.

It looks as if the court room scene was specially prepared by the general to win his way back again into popular favor. He lost most of the glamor with which his name was surrounded when he was caught cowering in a cellar after his futile revolt.

He expects to come thru the trial victorious, or at the worst with a small fine.

IMPEACH COOLIDGE!

BRANCHES OF WORKERS PARTY FORMED IN S. D.

Daily Worker Greeted by Farmers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CENTERVILLE, S. D., March 3.—Branches of the Workers Party have just been organized at Marion and Centerville, Turner County, S. D.

At the first meetings held by these party branches the new members were unanimously of the opinion that the farmers and the workers would not be able to get justice for themselves until they established their own political and economic system. The Workers Party was praised for its uncompromising fight against capitalism and the DAILY WORKER was hailed as the best workers' paper in the United States, several members handing in their subscriptions.

Seventy per cent of the farmers in this county are renters. These tenants pay from $800 to $1,200, or 2-5 of the crop, per quarter section, for the privilege of working the land. With price of land sky-high and low prices for farm products, the tenants have absolutely no chance of ever becoming owners. At present they have great difficulty in meeting necessary expenses.

The bonded indebtedness of the county is $70 per acre and the total farm mortgage debt is at least $6,000 per quarter section. Taxes run from $130 to $300 per quarter sections.

The local banks are prodding many farmers to put on auction sales in order that they may get money to pay what they "owe." Not a day goes by but there is one or more such sales in the vicinity of Centerville.

The farmers here are sick economically speaking and they are looking for a new deal.

Progressives Win All Offices in N. Y. I. L. G. W. Local

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 3.—A signal victory was won by the progressives in Cloak Finishers' Local No. 9 of the International Ladies' Garment Workers of New York when Louis Hyman was reelected manager of the local and all twenty-five candidates put up by the progressives were elected to the executive board at the elections held at the end of last week.

The business agent of the machine who has held his job for ten years ran against the progressive candidate Hyman, but was defeated, as were all the other 25 job holders who ran against the progressive candidates for the executive board. The vote for manager of the local was: 953 for Hyman and 672 for the candidate of the machine.

The reactionaries did a lot of electioneering for their candidates; they issued leaflets, they circulated all kinds of ugly rumors about Hyman and the progressives in general, they canvassed the shops for their candidates, they procured the help of that warm friend of all reactionaries, the yellow "Forward," but all this was to no avail. The cloak finishers would not let themselves be bluffed.

Workers of Paterson, New Jersey, Meet to Plan Action

PATERSON, N. J., March 3.—In Paterson, New Jersey, the provisional council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers is calling a conference for Wednesday night, March 5, at 8 p. m. at Workers' Hall, 7 Bridge St., Paterson, N. J.

The call has reached seventy-five organizations and a successful conference is expected, Paterson being one of the leading silk mill towns, with a mixed foreign population.

DANISH PUPILS TO SEE PLAYS IN SCHOOL THEATRE

Just Reading Drama Was Too Dull

By PAUL HOYER.

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, March 3.—The 30,000 school children and high school students of Copenhagen are to have their own theater soon.

Pupils will see plays in this theater just as regularly as they now have language lessons or gymnastics or arithmetic. The little theater in the Copenhagen Casino will be entirely rebuilt and will be known as the Skoleteater—school theater.

Teacher Originated Idea.

The idea originated with a Dutch teacher named Hejle, who realized that it is tedious for school children to read classical plays merely as literature, without seeing them dramatized. He therefore aranged for the pupils of his school to see a certain number of Danish classical plays by an arrangement with the Dagmar theater. His scheme, however, benefitted only about 2000 school children.

By erecting a special school theater it will be possible to give all the children of Copenhagen a chance to augment their studies of literature and history.

It is figured that a play can be produced 50 times before all the students have seen it. While this play is running, another one will begin at some other hour of the day, to which those who have already seen the first play will go with their teachers, and in this way a considerable number of plays can be produced in the course of a school year.

All Kinds of Plays.

It is contemplated that two categories of plays be given—the typically Danish plays for the children of the lower grades, and both Danish and foreign classics for the students of the higher grades.

A further advantage that is claimed for the scheme is the fact that new histrionic talent can be discovered. Ambitious young actors can win their spurs here. Stage managers will eagerly scan the boards of the school theater in quest of discoveries.

Abolish Illiteracy by 1927, Is Program of Russ Educators

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 3.—Intensified war on illiteracy has been ordered by the All Russian Congress of Soviets which approved Commisar of Education Lunacharsky's program for the complete elimination of illiteracy by 1927, that is in three years.

There are still 17,000,000 illiterates in Russia, Lunacharsky's report shows. This represents an immenso reduction from tsarist times, showing that illiteracy is now reduced to less than 13 per cent from the 75 per cent figure of the old regime.

Premier Rykov is giving earnest support to the educational program, declaring that it is the most important issue before the people.

Ludwig Lore Will Speak in Boston on March Ninth

BOSTON, Mass., March 3.—Ludwig Lore, editor of the New York Volkzeitung, will be the principal speaker at a meeting here on March 9, to protest against the registration of the foreign born workers. The meeting will take place on Sunday afternoon, 2 p. m., in the Scenic Auditorium corner Tremont and Berkley streets. James P. Reed of Providence will preside. It will be held under the auspices of the Council for the Protection of the Foreign Born. Admission is free.

N. Y. FEDERATED FARMER - LABOR PARTY CONVENING

March 23 Meet Will Outline Program

NEW YORK, March 3.—The New York branch of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party will hold its second convention Sunday, March 23, at the Central Opera House, 67th St. and Third avenue. The New York branch of the F. F.-L. P. has sent out letters to all the local unions of the city asking them to send delegates to the convention.

The convention will lay plans for carrying the work of the F. F.-L. P. on during the coming presidential campaign. The St. Paul convention will be one of the most important matters to come before the convention. Already many unions have signified their intention of sending delegates.

The first convention of the New York branch of the F. F.-L. P. was held last September with more than 200 delegates representing more than 85,000 workers present.

In the call for the New York convention the F. F.-L. P. announces that it is planning to take a big part in New York City during the coming campaign.

Whose Victory

By votes varying from 408 against 8 to 216 against 199, the Longworth tax proposals were adopted by the House of Representatives after a series of bitter debates.

The Mellon scheme to reduce the maximum surtax from 50 per cent failed. The democratic proposal to set 44 per cent as the maximum figure likewise failed. A compromise proposal placing the maximum surtax at 37½ per cent and taking 2 per cent off incomes under $4,000 carried.

It was only as a result of unity between the insurgents and the regular republicans that this measure secured enactment. There are some who maintain that Coolidge will veto this Longworth tax bill. But it is hard to believe that so practical a water-front politician as Coolidge will take a chance to appear before the country as responsible for vetoing any reduction in taxes at a time when so frantic a tax reduction cry has been raised by the kept press of the country. As to the Senate, nobody can tell what this scandal school will do to the tax bill. We might expect more jockeying and perhaps when the Senators get thru with this measure, it will be in a worse tattered condition than it is even today.

In considering the import of this legislation, one naturally asks: whose victory is this? Nowadays, when the casualties are so heavy on all sides in the political struggle, it is a rather difficult question to answer. All we can safely say at this time is that the insurgents have failed and failed miserably in the tax fight. Their voting for the Longworth measure was an outright surrender to the Old Guard and will be interpreted as such thruout the country.

The insurgents were the pivotal force in the whole tax discussion. In this strategic position the group led by Congressman Frear, of Wisconsin, could and should have held up all tax legislation to the limit in order to secure the passage of a tax program which would shift the burdens from the poor to the rich. Instead, Frear and his forces lined up for the Longworth bill and are now responsible for continuing the present burdensome taxation to which the great mass of workers are subject. If anyone can rightly claim victory in the tax fight in the House of Representatives it is the reactionaries. The whole episode is a monument to the helplessness and the wavering tactics of the insurgents in Congress.

The International

The International plunderbund today sits on top of a more or less active social volcano. The masses are in ferment. Their condition none too good before the world war, has since grown much worse. There is a growing feeling among them that it will never grow better under capitalism.

The capitalists seek to lull the human volcano into passivity by specious promises of golden days of plenty to come. They endeavor to satisfy the workers within their own nations by a policy of plundering their neighbors. The result is larger armies and navies than burdened down the workers of Europe even before the late war.

The Socialists of the yellow stripe represented by Ramsay MacDonald of England, President Ebert of Germany and others of that ilk are assisting the capitalists in holding back the wave of social discontent which threatens to engulf the capitalist class in a gigantic eruption. "Revolutions can't be made; they must come of themselves," parrot these betrayers.

The Communist International which will celebrate its fifth anniversary tomorrow declares that revolutions are made by men when the economic conditions are ripe for the bringing forth of a new order out of the womb of history. Therefore the Communist International has assumed the leadership of the revolutionary workers of the world and is organizing the most advanced battalions of the proletariat to lead the masses for the final struggle to victory.

The rebel workers of the world will celebrate March 5 as a momentous date in the history of the workers' struggle against their masters.

Two years ago William Randolph Hearst, it was rumored, sent a special writer to Washington to get the goods on Daugherty. The stuff was prepared and ready for the press when Arthur Brisbane appeared in the Capitol and thru William J. Burns secured an interview with Daugherty. The expose was buried. What about it, Mr. Hearst?

Now that William Randolph Hearst has come to the defense of Harry M. Daugherty the half dozen or so who still had doubts of the attorney general's guilt can join the majority.

Two Bankruptcies

Following our criticism of Samuel Gompers and the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, for their notable silence on the Teapot Dome scandal, Gompers states the A. F. of L. position in the March issue of "The Federationist."

Brother Gompers claims to have sounded the warning nearly two years ago, on May 6, 1922, to be exact, but this claim to precedence in denouncing the oil grafters was merely a protest against the legislation that made the thefts possible. It does not in any manner explain the sepulchral silence on the revelations concerning men high in the government maintained by the officials of the American Federation of Labor since the investigation was started.

Neither does it explain the weak statement on the oil scandal in the current Federationist, a feeble parody of the democratic press demanding punishment of the guilty persons and restitution of the loot.

No one, reading the official but belated pronouncement of the Federationist will get any inkling of the basic facts underlying the scandal; in the article is not one sentence hinting that the scandal itself would never have become public property if widespread economic changes, undermining the foundations of American capitalism, were not taking place; neither will one receive from the Federationist any confirmation of the belief that both republican and democratic parties are wings of the same bird or any direct information as to the extent to which both capitalist parties are involved.

That no changes have taken place in the mental attitude of the official family of the Federation by reason of the irrefutable evidence recently furnished that both old parties are steeped in oil is the unavoidable impression gained from the first statement by the Federation on the subject of the Teapot Dome since the capitol began to rock under the impact of the disclosures. There is not even one lone word connecting the oppressive agencies of the government, such as the department of justice and the bureau of investigation and their strikebreaking policy with the wholesale corruption.

Brother Gompers demonstrates once more in this article that he is more worried over stability of the government than he is over that of the labor movement. The oil scandal suggests to him no need for revising his hoary doctrines relative to the functions of a labor movement nor his theories as to the all-sufficiency for labor of punishing friend and rewarding enemies in the bi-partisan machines thru which oil and kindred interests maintain their parliamentary supremacy.

The bankruptcy of capitalism as shown by the Teapot Dome scandal makes clearer than ever the bankruptcy of the Gompers policy.

La Follette's Next Step

The force with which political events are developing today is best exemplified by the decision of Senator LaFollette to withdraw his name from the presidential primary contest in North Dakota.

This step on the part of LaFollette is of primary importance. It is unquestionably a step in advance for LaFollette to recognize and admit his powerlessness before the republican steam roller. The Senator from Wisconsin has been in politics for fifty years. Yet, this is the first time that LaFollette has acknowledged the uselessness of working within the republican party. The withdrawal is particularly significant under the circumstances in view of the fact that there has been organized a militant Farmer-Labor party in North Dakota to fight the reactionary clique controlling the Republican Party and Non-Partisan League.

An equally important phase of LaFollette's decision is the implied recognition of the Wisconsin Senator of the power of the Farmer-Laborites in the State. The farewell that La Follette bid to the Republican Party in North Dakota is an open acknowledgement of the strength of the real mass party in North Dakota led by "Dad" Walker. Nationally, La Follette's withdrawal means that the Wisconsin Senator is making an out and out bid for Farmer-Labor support as against any strength he might be able to corral by continuation of his fight within the republican fold. Of course, LaFollette knows that with practically 800 out of 1,109 delegates to the Cleveland convention being hand-picked for Coolidge, it would be suicide for him to split the remaining delegates with Hiram Johnson and thus tend to give the country an impression of weakness.

But this step is of as great danger to LaFollette as it is to the Old Guard. Unless "Battling Bob" follows up energetically this withdrawal on his part from North Dakota he will be stranded hopelessly in a political desert all alone. LaFollette has been too long in politics not to know that negative tactics alone are insufficient in a fierce political contest. Unless LaFollette forthwith takes concrete organizational steps to hold together his followers and help them organize themselves for national action against the Coolidge clique he will not only have read himself completely off the political map, but also have been guilty of demoralizing a great mass of his followers who are today bent upon waging relentless war on the Old Guard of both big capitalist parties.

LaFollette is today at the cross-roads. He can no longer tarry. He must go forward or sign his own death certificate in the political life of the country. The North Dakota decision is a milestone in LaFollette's career. It is of monumental importance as an index of the sharpening of class divisions in America today

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a pleasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. Klimin is skeptical.

CHAPTER IX.

MARTUINOV spent four hours on duty in the Communist Company, walked up and down with his rifle in the big, empty yard, and kept guard over the arsenal. There was a slight frost, but it was not cold, somewhere over the roofs the wind was breathing, diffusing thru the air the fresh sweetness of Spring. Martuinov spent the first two hours in thinking, remembering all his past life, punished and forgave himself for a thousand trivial acts, and thought of the Revolution, of the Party, of his work.

But during the last hour, Martuinov did not think of anything at all . . . he simply waited. Waited to be relieved. His toes were freezing, the cold was getting down inside the collar of his coat and up his sleeves, and to keep warm he went thru exercises with his rifle.

Twelve strokes rolled out from the belfry, and after that every minutes waiting seemed an hour, and he was wanting to blow a shrill whistle and call the sergeant and ask to be relieved, but the relief was already on its way, and two figures appeared from the direction of the guardroom.

They checked the seals on the doors of the arsenal, and Martuinov went off duty and did not walk but actually ran to the warm guard room. It was as if he were drunk with the Spring air, his face was red, and, as always after being relieved, he felt merry and careless and untroubled by anything of the outer world.

Everything was so clear and simple, everything had been thought out in the big dark courtyard of the Communist Company. He drank hot tea, nibbled sugar, broke bread in his fingers and listened to the talk of the comrades.

"Never in my life will I believe it," said the sergeant, an old non-commissioned officer, with thin, elegantly twisted mustaches. "Is there any sense in it? I ask you, man to be descended from a fish or a frog? Wonderful. From a monkey . . . that I've nothing against. . . . Even agree. . . But from a fish? . . . Sheer fairy story."

"But, Comrade, why from a fish? Not from fish particularly, but from creatures of that sort . . . of very simple form. They lived in water and then the structure of all their bodies was the same. But when they multiplied a lot of them started going off into the shallows. . . . And thence on to dry land. And their organisms began to adapt themselves to this new way of living. Lungs appeared instead of gills. And that not all at once but gradually, in thousands and thousands of years. The strongest survived and left descendants; in this way there was selection, just as in breeding domestic animals, and that's the struggle for life. Darwin discovered it and so . . ."

Martuinov listened to the clumsy words, watched the play of the broad rough face and tried to remember; where had he seen that face and heard that slow speech?

The man went on talking and stared at Martuinov, as if he too remembered him . . . but could not bring him to mind. And suddenly he broke off his talk with an exclamation:

"Comrade! Aren't you the son of Sergei Zakharitch? Martuinov?"

"I am," replied Martuinov, and blushed.

"Surely you know me? I am from your father's leather factory. . . . Surely you remember Andreev? At Slobodka they used to call me 'the chemist.' . . ."

And Martuinov recognized the face, the broad forehead, the plain rough features, the small, clear steady eyes. True, he had aged a good deal, his mustache had grown grey, wrinkles had come on his forehead, he seemed to have grown taller, and a scar cut across his face from eye to mouth. . . . It was nine years since he had last seen him, and only now he remembered the close workroom, the feeble light of a kerosene lamp, and Andreev, young, in a black shirt with an open collar, bent over a table, heating up some sort of crucibles full of yellow stinking fluid, which he poured over leather while Martuinov's father, a fat old man with a blood-shot face and malicious eyes, in a grey striped suit with a watch chain right across his stomach, sat very quietly on a bench, smiling encouragingly, stretching an inquisitive neck in the direction of Andreev's hands, and now and again quickly writing something down in his note book.

The elder Martuinov sometimes took his son with him to the factory, but did not allow him to talk with the workmen. Both in their presence and behind their backs he called them drunkards, thieves and ragamuffins, and only Andreev, "the chemist" as they laughingly called him at Slobodka, he visited himself, and took his son with him.

"Sharp fellow, Andreev," said old Martuinov to Volodya, "bitterly proud, but clever, clever. . . ."

And Volodya had seen that his father, strict and autocratic even with his family, even with the people of his house, yet bore with the rude and sometimes almost arrogant manner of Andreev, listened carefully to his explanations, full of the names of chemical reagents and technical terms. He had noticed that this young workman was allowed to call his father by his father's name (Sergei Zakharitch, his own and his father's Christian names, as between equals, instead of using his family name, like a stranger or inferior) which not even the very oldest of the workmen had the right to do. And Volodya had not understood the strange relations between them.

And then Andreev had disappeared; his father had had a great row with him about something, Martuinov had not known about what, but for several days his father had been very angry, and had sworn at all the servants, "with the strongest words," as the coachman had delicately expressed it. . . . Martuinov had grown up, had become interested in futurism, in theosophy, in the history of culture . . . then had come love. . . . Then the Revolution and work in the Party. Andreev had been forgotten altogether. And now here he was, alive, real, sitting there, filling his pipe with tobacco and talking slowly and with pauses:

"Well, Comrade Martuinov, I heard that you were a member of the Party. When I came here I had decided beforehand, I'd come and turn the son of the bourgeois out of the Party. I thought you had come in to serve your own ends. I came and made enquiries about you, where you worked and how, but everybody said you were a good worker and an honest one, and so, thought I, let him work then. . . ."

Martuinov blushed deeply at the praise.

"I broke with my people at the beginning of the Revolution. Broke off all relations with them. I had differences with my father. . . . A despot he was . . . there's no denying it."

"There's no question about it. The man was a flint, and had no pity whatever. My brother workmen had a pretty hard time, thanks to him."

"But with you personally, he somehow behaved decently?" asked Martuinov.

Andreev smiled.

"Of course, decently, he even gave me cigarettes. . . . Since it paid him to do so. Forgive me, Comrade Martuinov, but about your dad I must say he was a rogue, and a clever one at that. . . . You remember they called me 'the chemist' at Slobodka. That was because I was very fond of chemistry, and found a way of tanning leather by a more scientific and profitable method. But I was a fool then and did not take out a patent for my invention, and your father made use of it for nothing. . . . He gave me three roubles. I bought some books for myself.

"You remember the workmen of Slobodka, they were a rough lot at that time. The work was terribly hard, the pay small, and the only relaxation was to get drunk.

"I did not drink, as a matter of fact to this day I don't like vodka, I kept away from the lads, was busied with my chemistry and read books. I had nobody to talk with, so I talked with your dad. We talked and talked and behold he brought something new into the factory, and cut down the number of workmen by nearly half. It turned out that I was by way of being a construction engineer for him, and getting for that fifteen kopecks a day, with tips extra. Sometimes fifty kopecks, sometimes a ruble, sometimes three. At the factory they began to call me 'the cheap chemist,' and it was true enough that I was cheap.

"I was a fool but all the same began to understand a little. And so, said I, Mr. Martuinov, I want to take out a patent for my inventions. You will buy them from me, and I shall be able to study. I dreamed of becoming an engineer. At that time I knew nothing of politics and had no sort of class consciousness whatever. All I wanted was to study and read books.

"If he had only come to terms with me, perhaps I should have brought him great profit and been an engineer by now. But your dad was mean and his meanness ate him up, and in reply he began to swear at me. And I don't like it when people swear at me. Word for word we talked pretty straight. And he turned me off. I was very hard up after that. My mother died of hunger. And then I went to Ivanovo-Voznesensk, and met some good fellows, who began giving me Pravda to read, and opened my eyes, and I became a bit wiser.

"It's terrible to remember in what a state of oppression they kept us, and how they lorded it over us. . . . Well, anyhow, it's done with, now. There's no going back to the past. Sergei Zakharitch is in Japan now, perhaps, or perhaps in America. And in his factory I am all but master."

"But are you working there now?" asked Martuinov.

"Of course. President of the Factory Committee. Two months already."

"Well, and how is the factory working?"

"Of course—badly. The workmen sabotage, rations are poor and given out irregularly, the system of payment is idiotic, the machines are old and broken. I swore at your dad and dislike him heartily, but there would be no harm for us in taking a lesson from him. . . . To learn this. . . ." He was silent, visibly looking for the right word . . . "this managing. . . . He was hard and cunning and loved his power, but he loved the factory still better. Days and nights he spent in the factory. You remember him? He knew every machine in the place, knew how each workman worked. And, most important of all, he had imagination . . . managing, business imagination. That's what we lack just now.

"Take, for example, our director. He's an engineer, and they sent him from the All Russian Council of Public Economy, and he's a Communist. . . . But he never comes out of his office. And can't hold his own with the non-party specialists. Do you know him?"

He named a Party comrade, a member of the Party Committee, who often spoke at the Party meetings.

"But I am a bad politician," he went on. "In a word, I was a chemist and still am. Of course I understand it all, all his mistakes, but I cannot catch him out. One to one, I can still argue with him, but at a meeting he's all over me at once. I don't know when you can ask leave to speak and when you can't, and he at once, 'on the motives of the voting' and so on, and so on. I feel that he is lying and falsifying, but catch him I can't, and if I do try to speak, I talk as clumsily as if my tongue were tied in a knot."

"Well, and how is your chemistry going on?"

Andreev's face became gloomy.

"It isn't going on at all. . . . I married, and took up with politics. That was the end of chemisty. It hurts me . . . but it's impossible not to busy oneself with the workmen's cause. If we dawdle, the bourgeoisie will swallow us alive. That's as much as to say that there's an end to chemistry . . ."

"Go to sleep, Comrade Martuinov. I can see you are tired out, and it'll soon be my time to go on guard. I'll sit and read . . . 'The Economics of the Transition Period' . . . it's a good little book. . . ."

What Do You Think of Our First Story?

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have published many installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its character, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

Some Good Suggestions.

To the DAILY WORKER: You ask for views of "A Week." I can say I, for one, like the story and I think the time is ripe for a story of this kind. As I live two blocks from the book store that sells the DAILY WORKER I get it every day and never destroy it as I pass it along to others. But you must realize there are a great many Americans like myself not blessed with education, also not being familiar with the Russian language and say, when the name, Tansky, is useful, why not also use the name "Jones" or "Wilson" or "Jackson," for example Tansky (Jones).

I am sure it would help a great many Americans not familiar with Russian names to keep the story better in mind and, when the story is finished they will really understand the story and appreciate it more. I remain sincerely yours, J. P. Whidclau, Denver, Colo.

P. S. I hope that inside of 12 months there will be a DAILY WORKER published in every town of 5,000, or over in this so-called good old U. S. A.

Presents Bright Picture.

To the DAILY WORKER: You ask for opinions of "A Week." Well, here is what I can say so far about it:

It is doubtless the brightest picture of that great revolution that occurred in Russia, and that is still going on.

At last I want to say: Am waiting anxiously every day for my DAILY for you cut the continuations so short.—N. Kutisker, Boston, Mass.

A WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

BRIGADIER General Paul B. Malone is an eloquent Rotarian orator. He spoke in Houston, Texas recently. The General is blunt and truthful. He declared to the assembled Rotarians that war originated because of business or trade, that the first reason for war is trade. Now, this is just what we like to hear a general give forth. There is an old truth to the effect that if you call a man a horse thief justice demands that you submit proof to support the truth of your charge but if the accused admits that he is a horse thief, that makes your task ever so much easier, to say the least.

• • • •

Communists have been telling the workers that all capitalist wars are gigantic commercial enterprises, struggles between opposing capitalist groups for markets, spheres of influence, and territories to exploit. The workers did not believe us. They thought—most of them—that wars are fought for pure womanhood, clean religion and moral preachers, decent kings and chaste queens and such glorious issues. Now comes an honest-to-God general and bears out everything we have said. He then proceeds to lecture the rotarians on their duties. "The object of my visit," he said, "is to bring to the attention of the business men that national defense is part and parcel of your business. War originated because of business or trade. The first reason for war is trade."

• • • •

This is illuminating and instructive. Paste this little bit of information in your hat and pass it around—the information, not the hat—to every worker who still believes that wars are fought for beautiful ideals as specified in Woodrow Wilson's fourteen points. We like frank and stupid generals.

Col. Charles R. Forbes is such a jovial fellow that we are averse to saying an unkind word about him. He was also such a good friend of the late and dearly beloved Mr. Harding. But duty demands that we politely call attention to the fact that a suspicion of irregularity has been created by the conduct of the Veterans' Bureau by the said Col. Forbes. This in itself would not be so henious a crime in our opinion, but for the fact that rumor has it that the Colonel disappointed his benefactor, Mr. Harding, the American Mr. Honeyweed who expected so much of Mr. Forbes that he was almost broken-hearted when he heard that his favorite "son" actually shot craps with the wife of Elias Mortimer who was trying to share the good fortune of the Veterans' Bureau with Mr. Forbes.

• • • •

"He that steals my money steals trash; but he that abuses my confidence is a confidence man." Thus Mr. Harding must have reasoned if the good man ever reasoned. Now the wounded veterans who are dying of tuberculosis and shell-shock may say that Forbes' affair with the wife of another man is not near so reprehensible as the looting of funds appropriated for the relief of suffering heroes, but we fear that our heroes do not properly appreciate the honors that were conferred upon them by a proud nation, in being allowed the privilege of becoming heroes and wearing wounds as decorations. We fear the poison of materialism is sinking into their souls and we believe no better evidence can be offered to substantiate this assertion than that instead of protesting against the alleged moral lapse of the said Colonel Forbes, they raise the dickens over the disappearance of a few paltry million dollars. No decent capitalistically-minded Henry Dubb would put material gain before a nation's virtue and a nation's honor.

It is hard to say off hand whether the National City bank of New York is a financial institution or a bawdy house. No house of ill fame in any of our many underworlds has come in for so much unenviable publicity for the past few years as the great New York bank. Our readers may remember that Mr. James Stillman, he of Indian guide fame, was once president of the National City bank. Stillman had a first mortgage on the front pages for almost two years. Hardly had he turned over the premier position to Secretary Fall and the Teapot Dome when Beverly D. Harris, now head of that institution, broke into print and the divorce court simultaneously and startled the public with the charge that he was lured into marrying a prostitute, and only recently came to know that his wife was not up to snuff so to speak.

• • • •

We are half inclined to agree with the Boston Post that affairs of this kind are more fertile breeders of revolt than the most effective radical agitator. The moral equilibrium is disturbed. The workers lose faith in the capitalist class. They may even go so far as to withdraw their money from the banks with which the gay Lotharios are connected. It also knocks spots out of the capitalist gag that under communism the favorite indoor sport would be breaking up homes and those who had desirable mates were in deadly dread of any social order that would place their marital happiness in jeopardy. As it is now, capitalism has not a moral leg to stand on. Our bankers are striking at their own system with a two edged sword.

Notorious Judge Orders Strikers off Streets

10 MORE BOSSES YIELD, STUDENTS ON PICKET LINE, AS STRIKE SHOWS NEW PEP

Judge Denis Sullivan's injunction failed to prove itself the paralyzing blight that the bosses' association expected, for the strike was going along with increased vigor as the day closed yesterday and Vice President Meyer Perlstein, in charge of the strike, announced that ten more manufacturers had settled with the union and granted the 40-hour week, increased wages, maintenance of unemployed and all the other demands of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Nearly 200 workers are involved in this victory making more than 400 in all who have gained their ends since the strike started—15 shops having previously settled—and at this rate officials expect that the bitter end bosses will find the pressure becoming too strong for them to endure.

Spreads To Evanston.

The strike spreads today to Evanston where a headquarters will be opened today or tomorrow. There are several hudred garment workers in small shops in Evanston.

"Injunctions Make No Dresses."

Virtual admission of the futility and illegality of the Sullivan injunctions were made yesterday by the failure of police to arrest any unionists for violation of the writs. The five workers arrested on Milwaukee avenue, the three on Roosevelt Road, nine on S. Market street by the police and four more by the special strikebreaking cops of State's Attorney Crowe, were all held on disorderly conduct charges—as pickets.

"Injunctions make no dresses," is the phrase which ripples along among the strikers in the dressmaking zones.

Students Picket.

Four students from the Women's Trade Union League Training School and the University of Chicago, went on the picket line yesterday, aroused by the high handed action of Judge Denis Sullivan and did yeoman's service in the drizzle.

The issue is making the same dramatic appeal as did the famous New York garment strike of 1913, which brought dozens of pickets from women's organizations. One of the volunteer student pickets is a Chicago girl: Lulu Montgomery comes from Wheeling, W. Va., Alexia Smith, from Baltimore, May Bellock and Celia Chanowitz from New York City.

Challenge to Federation.

Unionists attention is now riveted on the Chicago Federation of Labor which promised the strikers last Sunday to give them every possible support. The Federation came thru in the Amalgamated strike of 1919 which unionized the men's clothing industry in spite of hundreds of arrests.

Crowe Aids Weiss.

The special strikebreaking police force attached to State's Attorney Crowe's office raided the striker's line near the factory of the Weiss company, his friends, on West Adams street, and arrested four girls, handling them roughly as they led them to the South Clark street police station.

"Why don't you use that injunction?" someone called out as the girls were being taken away.

The girls are Tillie Bransky, Esther Friedman, Anna Feldman and Rose Printz. They were bailed out by the union, at $400 each and will be arraigned in South Clark street court today.

Arrested by Police.

Those arrested by the police are Sophie Altschuler, Dora Sever and

ZINOVIEV SEES JAP AND GERMAN VICTORIES SOON

Hails Communist Work in America

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 4.—In a Pravda article that glows with confidence for the future of the world revolutionary movement Zinoviev hails the progress of the American Communist movement and declares that Japan is likely soon to be the scene of a great revolutionary uprising. He sees Communism triumphing in Germany in the near future.

The famous Communist leader directs attention to England as an enormously important factor in the world movement. When Communism gains sufficiently in England, he said, the workers in the suppressed East will free themselves.

Zinoviev says the centre of the international Communist organization can be transferred from Moscow to a more industrialized country after the first decisive victory over the European bourgeoisie.

The principal aims of the Communist International for the next five years, as outlined by Zinoviev, are as follows:

German Revolution.

1. To strive in the nearest future for a proletarian revolution in Germany, in which the Communists of Russia, Poland, Austria, Czechoslovakia and France should be ready to aid.
2. The creation of a strong Communist party in England.
3. All-around help to American and Japanese Communists.
4. Assistance to the Polish party.
5. Assistance to the Bulgarian Communists, where the events of 1923 are only preliminary to the general Balkan struggle.
6. More and still more attention to the East.
7. The attraction of a majority of the workmen to the ranks of the international, and those countries in which communism already is strong must prepare to direct the struggle.
8. Where the organization is complete it must organize into real Communist parties.
9. To improve the relations between workers and peasants.
10. Give attention to the problems of national minorities and colonial questions.
11. More attention to the Young Communist movement.

Red Trade Unions.

12. Full support of the "Red" trades unions.
13. The proposition of a united front of all the Internationals.
14. The consolidation of international discipline and order, saying: "Our policy may be directed a very short time from Moscow and afterward transferred to another central country with a greater percentage of the proletariat after our first decisive victory over the European bourgeoisie."
15. To assist the first proletarian State, Russia.

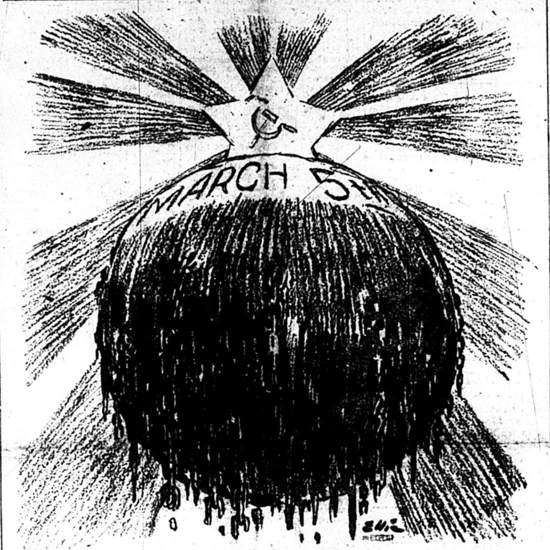
EXPECT UNION LABOR PROBERS OF CROWE TO BE NAMED TODAY

The executive committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor at its meeting today will act on the mandate of the federation requiring the appointment of a special investigating committee to probe the strike breaking work of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, during the present garment strike.

It is expected that the probe committee will be announced immediately after the executive committee's session.

The federation's meeting last Sunday not only ordered the appointment of a probe committee but pledged its full support to the strikers.

A NEW DAY IS DAWNING



The Chains Are Falling Away.

Forward Under Banner of the Communist International

THE Fifth Anniversary of the founding of the Communist International should be a day of rejoicing to the workers of the whole world.

The Communist International came into the world as the new rallying centre of the revolutionary workers fighting against capitalism in the hour of betrayal by the Second International and the parties of which it was composed.

During the past five years the Communist International has grown from the small group of men assembled in the Kremlin on March 5th, 1919, and their few tens of thousands of followers to an organization which has won loyalty and devotion of millions of workers.

Today the Communist International has its sections in practically every country in the world. Wherever there are men and women who fight against the exploitation and oppression of capitalism, there are the supporters of the Communist International.

On this Fifth Anniversary of the founding of the Communist International, the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party believes that it should make clear to those workers who do not know what the Communist International is, what it stands for and the ends it is seeking to achieve.

The Communist International declares that we are living in the period of the disintegration of the capitalist system of production. Conflicting forces within the capitalist system are destroying it. These forces expressed themselves in the World War, which was a direct outgrowth of the imperialist capitalist development. During the war the capitalist system generated new forces of destruction which are undermining the whole economic foundation of capitalist society.

The disintegration of capitalism is apparent in every European country. All the efforts of the statesmen and economists of capitalist Europe have been unable to restore capitalist production in Europe to the conditions of 1914. While there is an ebb and flow of capitalism the dominating tendency is downward to the disintegration of the entire capitalist system of production.

The forces which are bringing the downfall of capitalism in Europe are apparent in the United States. Since the war this country has experienced one bitter period of hard times and unemployment and in spite of all that the capitalist can do our system of production stands trembling on the brink of another period of breakdown.

This period of decay and destruction of the capitalist system, which may extend over decades of time, will bring upon the workers everywhere unheard of suffering. Already in Germany millions of people are starving because of the condition created by the disintegration of capitalism. In England unemployment of close to a million workers has been chronic since the end of the war because of the same causes. The conditions in other capitalist countries is only a difference of degrees. The same forces of disintegration are at work and threaten to bring the same conditions everywhere.

There is only one way in which the workers of the world can save themselves from all the misery, suffering and bloodshed which the dying capitalist order brings into the world, the Communist International declares. They must organize their strength. They must enter into a struggle against the capitalists and their government. They must wrench control of the hands of the capitalists and use that power to build a new social order.

The workers cannot establish their rule thru the organs of the capitalist government. They must create in the struggle against capitalism their own organs of the government—the Soviets. It is thru the Soviets and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat that the workers will mobilize their power and create the means of establishing Communism in the place of the dying capitalist order.

For all the workers of the world who enter the struggle against the decaying capitalist order the Communist International is the rallying point, the source of guidance and leadership.

The Communist International stands as the uncompromising enemy of the whole capitalist order, guiding and directing the struggles of the workers of every country to the goal of establishing their own rule in order to save themselves from the misery and suffering which capitalism brings upon them.

The Workers Party of America, on this Fifth Anniversary of the founding of the Communist International renews its declaration of acceptance of the leadership of the Communist International in the struggle against American capitalism.

HAIL TO THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL, THE LEADER OF THE WORLD REVOLUTION!

HAIL TO THE WORLD REVOLUTION AND THE RULE OF THE WORKERS OF THE WORLD.

Central Executive Committee
Workers Party of America
C. E. RUTHENBERG,
Executive Secretary.

WORLD'S WORKERS CHEER FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF WORKERS' INTERNATIONAL

Today is the Fifth Anniversary of the Communist International, celebrated by the awakening working masses in all lands. On this day all enlightened workers should render some service to the International Communist movement. It isn't enough to merely attend the great anniversary mass meetings. Workers should also get subscriptions for the party press. Get new readers for the DAILY WORKER. Get other workers to read this issue of your paper. Do something worth while TODAY in the struggle for your own emancipation.

Earthquake Does Much Damage to Costa Rica Town

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, Mar. 4.—Scores of houses and buildings were damaged by the series of earthquakes which began here at 4:09 a. m. today and continued with lessening intensity at this hour. The casualties resulting from the tremors are at present unknown.

DETECTIVE GAVE U. S. CODE TO TEAPOTTERS FOR PALM BEACH-WASHINGTON USE

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, MARCH 4.—Mrs. Jessie Duckstein, wife of E. B. McLean's private secretary, today told the Walsh investigating committee that William J. Burns furnished her with the Justice Department code which was used in transmitting telegrams to McLean at Palm Beach. Mrs. Duckstein said she is a special agent of the Department of Justice.

New Sensations Are Unearthed

Swinging thru a wide range of drama and thrills, the Senate Oil Committee today produced new sensations and new insight into affairs of officials and departments connected with the government.

Witnesses ranged from Mrs. Duckstein, first woman to appear in the investigation, who told of Burns giving her a Department of Justice code, to dapper Burns himself and Francis H. McAdoo, son of William G. McAdoo, democratic presidential aspirant.

But first Senator Walsh, chief investigator, stating he knew efforts had been on foot for more than a month to bring out testimony damaging to him, so as to hurt the investigation, himself revealed correspondence wih E. L. Doheny, regarding a suggestion that they become associated in Montana oil operations.

Walsh's correspondence showed that, while he had passed the suggestion to Doheny, he rejected overtures from the oil magnate inviting him or his brother John to join Doheny in the proposed Montana enterprise. Walsh explained that because of his position as a senator he would not enter any business involving receipt of favors from the government, such as oil leases. The letters and telegrams concluded with family greetings.

Burns Warns McLean.

Then a slight, pretty woman in a blue poke-bonnet, Mrs. Jessie Duckstein, told how at the request of William J. Burns, head of the government's secret service, she had notified her husband, secretary to E. B. McLean, that McLean's connection with the Department of Justice was being investigated. Burns, she said, gave her the department's secret code and told her to use it in sending the message. This was her explanation of the coded "Mary" telegram which the committee found among messages sent to McLean's party at Palm Beach.

Mrs. Duckstein said the message had been garbled in decoding and its meaning changed.

Burns then took the stand and admitted he had suggested to Mrs. Duckstein that she send the tip to McLean thru her husband. He did so, Burns said, as a hint to McLean to resign and save Attorney-General Daugherty embarrassment.

"Dollar A Year Man".

McLean, however, is still on the department's rolls as a "Dollar a year man," he said.

Burns also admitted the supposedly obsolete code used in telegrams between McLean and his employes was still in use by department of justice agents and that McLean had a copy of the code book.

"Has McLean resigned?" Dill asked.

"No he has not."

"In the light of the fact that evidence here shows McLean clearly committed perjury, why hasn't he been fired?" Dill asked.

"I don't know."

"Who has the power to fire him?"

"The attorney- general."

"But how can you commend your force to this committee when you have a man there who lied to the committee?"

"Oh, he's just a dollar a year man. He doesn't amount to anything."

"When did you first get the idea there was corruption in this matter?"

"When Doheny testified. That's the first information I had."

Burns was then dismissed from the stand.

Francis H. McAdoo was next. He testified that in 1919 the firm of which his father and himself were members, was retained by Mr. McLean, who "was having a controversy with the trustee of his father's estate."

"Why were you again retained in January, 1923?"

"For no particular reason. Mr. McLean just asked me if I cared to resume the relation."

The Hush-Up Gang At Work

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Powerful influences are already at work seeking to intimidate and "hush up" prospective witnesses in the senate investigation of Attorney-General Daugherty's administration of the department of justice, it was disclosed here today.

At the same time, a plot to discredit Senator Thomas J. Walsh, who opened up the oil scandal, was revealed.

Scores of investigators have been digging up every detail of Walsh's past life and have been prying into the affairs of members of his family.

Walsh's friends see in this a plan to discredit him so as to force him to drop the oil investigation, or to destroy the weight of his disclosures.

Wheeler Announces Secrecy.

Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, in whose hands the direction of the Daugherty inquiry has been placed by the investigating committee, today made known the efforts to hush up witnesses in that investigation when he announced that from now every move of the committee would be veiled in deepest secrecy.

"We know already that efforts have been made to hush up certain witnesses," Wheeler said. "I am fearful that efforts will be made to keep them from testifying. Because of this, the committee cannot reveal any of the "leads" on which it is working, nor make public the names of witnesses it has subpoenaed."

Wheeler made known that certain witnesses called by the senate oil committee in connection with department of justice matters had likewise had pressure put on them to keep them from testifying.

Prepare for First Hearing.

Wheeler today was hard at work with a legal assistant sifting the mass of material in the committee's possession. The committee appointed him as a sub-committee to draft a program of procedure, choose the matters to be investigated and set the date for the opening hearing.

At a private meeting of the committee today, Wheeler will make his first report and it is understood, ask for the issuance of the first batch of subpoenas. The first public hearing will be held late this week or the first of next week.

Translate More Telegrams.

Six of the McLean code telegrams, which figure in the Washington publisher's efforts to prevent the senate oil committee from getting at the secret of his connection with the oil scandal, were translated today for the committee.

Among the code telegrams was one hitherto not disclosed, sent from Los Angeles by "J. A. Y." to E. L. Doheny, in Washington, after he had testified before the committee. The committee will seek to determine authorship of this message.

code expert, who deciphered the messages, read them when the committee this morning resumed its hearings.

Here are the decoded messages, which hitherto have not been revealed. The contents of others already have been decoded and printed.

(Signed) "J. A. Y."

The Doheny telegram was sent two days after Doheny revealed to the committee that he had loaned Former Secretary of the Interior Fall $100,000.

Senator Thomas J. Walsh at this juncture read to the committee the correspondence he had with Doheny regarding a proposal that they become associated in a business venture in December, 1923.

Investigate Secret Intrigues.

Secret intrigues to keep E. B. McLean off the witness stand in the oil inquiry will have a further airing today before the senate oil committee.

The committee got one step nearer the full inside story of the purpose of these intrigues when it called Wm. J. Burns, head of the Department of Justice Secret Service, to explain how McLean got possession of a code formerly used by justice agents. Burns also was to be asked whether he sent word to McLean at Palm Beach that he was being investigated by the department.

The committee is interested in McLean's code messages and his unusual efforts to avoid testifying because it believes this indicates that he knows more about the oil scandal than he has told. McLean himself will be put on the stand later in the week and will be asked point blank why he tried so hard to keep out of the inquiry. All he has told about so far is a "loan" of $100,000 to Albert B. Fall, in the form of checks, which both McLean and Fall said, were never cashed. If that was McLean's only part in the matter he hardly would have expended such efforts to keep from telling about it, senators believe.

They do not disguise the fact that they do not completely believe the story of the $100,000 loan. Furthermore, information has been given committee members indicating that Fall did not use the $100,000 given him by Doheny to buy the New Mexico ranch where he now lives. They want to see if McLean can throw some further light on this.

Poisonous Painting Machine Protested by Workers in N. Y.

NEW YORK, March 4.—Employes of the City Destructor plant here are working with spray painting machines without any protection from the fumes. The destructor plant destroys refuse collected by the city garbage forces. Both the workers who use the paint spray guns and the other employes of the place are in constant danger of serious diseases from the use of the spray guns.

The Workers' Health Bureau has protested against the practice to the Board of Health.

Who Owns the Streets?

YESTERDAY Judge Denis E. Sullivan on the request of attorneys for the Dress Manufacturers' Association of Chicago, granted an injunction which prohibits the dress makers who are now on strike for better working conditions from using the streets of the city to peacefully picket the factories whose owners have refused them decent working conditions.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER believes that in issuing this injunction Judge Sullivan and the Master Class of Chicago have issued a challenge to the labor movement of this city which strikes at the vitals of trade unionism.

• • • •

To surrender to this abuse of the courts in behalf of the clothing manufacturers is to surrender the right to strike.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER calls upon the striking garment workers to continue the fight in face of the injunction.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER believes they should fight on until victory is theirs.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER further states that it is the plain duty of the Chicago labor movement to at once go into action and throw all its forces into the battle on the side of the striking garment workers and against the bosses and their injunction judges.

WHO OWNS THE STREETS?

Yesterday the DAILY WORKER charged State's Attorney Crowe with illegally using the powers of a public office in behalf of the dress manufacturers of Chicago and with having ordered his detectives and police to protect the professional sluggers recruited from the cesspools of the underworld, who are engaged by the clothing bosses to beat and intimidate the striking workers.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER charged State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe with using his office and the forces at his command to make the streets of the city unsafe for peaceful workers engaged in the legitimate task of peaceful picketing, while murderers, panderers and robbers roamed the highways and committed crime with impunity.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER, however, did not believe that State's Attorney Crowe would go so far in his desperate effort to smash the strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union as to forbid the use of the streets to citizens having no connection with the strike and furthermore to have them arrested, thrown into jail and held as prisoners in the factories of the scab manufacturers while waiting for a patrol wagon.

WHO OWNS THE STREETS?

The arrest of Thomas Holland, Labor Manager for Hart Schaffner and Marx, and of Attorney Martin S. Gordon, disinterested citizens who happened to be in the vicinity of the factories which Mr. Crowe's hirelings are guarding together with the injunctions issued by Judge Sullivan, indicate that the officials of Cook County from the judges on the bench to the police on the streets are in a conspiracy against the workers.

WHO OWNS THE STREETS?

"Injunction" Denis Sullivan prohibits the striking dress makers from picketing the shops owned by the clothing bosses of Chicago.

• • • •

State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe uses his office to arrest strikers, protect sluggers, drive citizens off the streets in the vicinity of the dress factories and arrest people who do not move quickly enough.

WHO OWNS THE STREETS?

The DAILY WORKER wants to know whether Judge Denis Sullivan, State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe and the dress manufacturers own the streets of Chicago or whether the workers have a right to walk on those streets.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER warns the entire organized labor movement of Chicago and the working class in general that unless they take action to stop this unwarranted abuse of power on the part of the elected officials of Cook County, the usefulness of labor unions to the working class will be seriously impaired.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER urges the president of the Chicago Federation of Labor to proceed speedily to the task of organizing the committee of fifteen which he was instructed to form last Sunday by the Chicago Federation of Labor and bring such pressure to bear on the state's attorney and all the other satellites of the capitalist class of Chicago that they will realize that labor cannot be crucified with impunity.

• • • •

The DAILY WORKER also declares that the action of the officials of this county who were elected by the votes of the workers is another argument in favor of a labor party and another damning indictment of the non-partisan policy which has placed the enemies of labor in office in Chicago on the tickets of both Democratic and Republican parties.

Coming! The Teapot Special!

The DAILY WORKER announces it will issue a Special Teapot Edition, dated Monday, March 17th. This will be the first attempt on a large scale to get the real meaning of the oil scandal before the American working class. Hundreds of thousands of copies of this issue should be distributed. Party members and sympathizers, alike, must join in this effort.

This special edition of the DAILY WORKER will contain articles analyzing the investigation that is taking place in Washington. The facts will be marshalled in orderly array, so that all labor will clearly understand the meaning of this far-reaching political explosion. There will be smashing cartoons and sketches by Robert Minor, Fred Ellis and our other artists. This edition will be the biggest effort we have yet put forth. Send in your orders today for this special issue to THE DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.

DENIS SULLIVAN OBEYS ORDERS OF GARMENT BOSSES

Grants Writs Without Hearing Workers

Injunctions written by Dudley Taylor, infamous anti-labor lawyer, and Leo LeBosky, attorney for the dress manufacturers, were issued by the nation's labor baiting judge, Denis Sullivan, before he had heard the defense of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, against whom the injunctions were issued.

One injunction petition was brought by the Chicago Dress and Skirt Manufacturers association thru Leo LeBosky and the other came from five firms represented by Dudley Taylor. Peter Sissman represented the union.

Right To Picket Denied.

The injunctions prohibit the union and its members from, "picketing or maintaining any picket or pickets at or near any of the buildings," of the firms who applied for the restraining orders. The injunctions also prohibit the union from picketing "along the routes used by persons in going to or from the places of business of the complainants," which means the streets where the shops are located.

The second count of the injunction prohibits the union or its members from "watching, following, stopping, assaulting, beating, threatening, menacing, intimidating, harassing, molesting, or interfering with anyone employed by" the firms named in the injunctions.

Talking To Scabs Forbidden.

The third count of the injunction forbids anyone connected with the union from "calling upon or talking to any of the employes of the complainants and from calling upon or talking to any member of the family of such employes."

The fourth and fifth counts of the injunction forbids anyone from "soliciting or inducing any person employed by any of the complainants to quit such employment."

Deaf Ear To Labor.

Peter Sissman for the union asked that the injunctions be not issued until the court heard labor's side as well as the employers'. Dudley Taylor and Leo LeBosky demanded the injunctions be issued at once. The judge asked if the union was interfering with the firm applying for the injunctions. Sissman said that since the union had called a strike and the strike had been effective he supposed that the firms asking the injunction would say the strike was interfering with them.

The judge then said that he would sign the injunction at once. Sissman asked that the injunctions which had been written by Taylor and LeBosky be changed to read that a single person be permitted to picket the shops. The judge denied the request on the ground that in the state of Illinois all picketing is illegal.

Blow At Unionism.

Sissman then asked that the fifth count of the injunction be stricken out on the grounds that it would be impossible to hold meetings and make talks on trade unionism without being in contempt of court. This was also denied and the motion of the defense to dissolve the injunction was put on the contested motion calendar. This means that it may be weeks before the union will have a chance to reply to the charges put forth in the affidavits on which the injunctions were issued.

The firms for whom the injunction was obtained by Taylor are Graceline Dress Co., Singer and Nudelman, Inc., Goldrich Franklin Co., University Frock, Inc., and Elias Mann.

Thomas Holland, Labor Manager, Hart Schaffner & Marx, Arrested by Crowe Officer; Case Dismissed

That the office of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe is entirely at the service of the clothing manufacturers of Chicago in their effort to break the strike of the dress makers, is further proved by the indiscriminate arrest of anybody seen standing in the vicinity of shops whose employes are on strike.

While Thomas Holland, Labor Manager for the men's clothing firm of Hart, Schaffner & Marx, was standing on the corner of Adams and Market streets on Monday evening, at 5 p. m., conversing with some friends from the Hull House he was approached by a man who rudely told him to move along.

Mr. Holland was not participating in any way in the strike, nevertheless he was promptly arrested by officer Gentile of Robert E. Crowe's office without warrant or charge and taken to the lobby of the Arthur Weiss & Company dress factory at 315 West Adams Street and held there for two hours until the patrol wagon came.

He was shoved into the wagon and taken to the South Clark Street police station, where he was again held for two hours until he was bailed out in the sum of $400.

Mr. Holland appeared in court yesterday morning and his case was instantly dismissed by the judge who declared there was not the slightest ground for holding him.

In a statement to the DAILY WORKER, Mr. Holland expressed indignation against the attitude of Robert E. Crowe.

"It is quite evident," he said, "that state's attorney Crowe's office instead of being concerned with punishing violations of the law has placed his officers at the struck factories to collect evidence against the striking dress makers. Mr. Crowe appears to be particularly interested in the firm of Arthur Weiss & Company. He uses the lobby of the factory as a temporary police station.

"While in court this morning another citizen had the same experience that I had and his indignation was intense. I request the DAILY WORKER to give this evidence of abuse of office on the part of Robert E. Crowe the widest publicity."

Chicago Workers to Flay Corrupt and Oily Government

"The workers of Chicago are going to have an opportunity to give voice to their protest against the corrupt, oil-be-spattered government of this country at the mass meeting this Thursday," said Arne Swabeck, district organizer of the Workers Party to a representative of the DAILY WORKER.

The mass protest meeting, under the auspices of Local Chicago, Workers Party, is to take place Thursday, March 6, at 8 p. m. at Wicker Park Hall, 2040 W. North Ave. The editors of the DAILY WORKER, J. Louis Engdahl and William F. Dunne, are among the speakers. By virtue of their position which places them in close contact with the actual facts of the oily scandal, a complete expose and analysis of the entire affair is assured.

Arne Swabeck, Chicago district organizer of the Workers Party, will present the viewpoint and program of the Workers Party. A prominent member of the Young Workers League of America, which is participating in the campaign of action on the Teapot Dome scandal, will also speak on the phase of the affair which exposes the world struggle for oil and the probability of the United States becoming involved in another world war in the interests of the oil and financial powers of this country.

Feeling against the present administration, against both the Democratic and Republican parties, has risen to a high pitch due to the exposures in the Teapot Dome scandal, and it is expected that large masses of workers will fill up Wicker Park Hall this Thursday to protest against the corrupt administration of the government by the Wall Street bankers and the oil and steel magnates.

Hear Miss Strong and Donate $130 to Starving Germans

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DENVER, Colo., March 4.—Anna Louise Strong spoke to a large crowd at the First Baptist church on "Russia Today," under the auspices of The Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany. All of the copies of Miss Strong's new book at hand were sold at the meeting as well as over 100 copies of Survey Graphic, which contained an article by Miss Strong. The sum of $130 was realized for German relief. The meeting was a success in every way and the members of the Workers Party in Denver feel elated.

Denver local has ordered 10,000 copies of the new leaflet entitled: "The Kept Government and the Teapot Dome," written by John S. Pepper, and will distribute them to the workers. Local Denver has secured a number of applicants for membership during the past month.

Camp Cooks Organize.

SEATTLE, Mar. 4.—Cooks in logging and construction camps are forming locals of the Cook's union. One local has been established in Portland, while organization is proceeding in Grays Harbor territory.

She will appear with other artists at the Concert Sunday, March 9, at 4 P. M., at Schoenhofen Hall, corner of Ashland and Milwaukee Aves. The Concert is arranged by the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia.

Machinists Reject "Co-operation."

SEATTLE, Mar. 4.—Metal trades unions here are discussing the Wm. H. Johnston co-operative plan, now being considered by a special committee. Under this plan union officials guarantee efficiency of workmen and product while the management guarantees a union wage and conditions. Machinists here rejected the plan, preferring to continue the class struggle.

Express Is Derailed.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 4.—Traffic on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad was delayed several hours today when the Broadway Limited, New York to Chicago, was derailed at Bellevue, just outside this city.

FRANC FALLS TO LOWEST RECORD, 24.75 TO DOLLAR

Slump Gains Headway During Day

PARIS, Mar. 4.—The franc fell to a new low record, 24.75 to the dollar, 106.80 to the pound, before noon yesterday.

The market opened with the franc at 24.10 to the dollar and 105.50 to the pound sterling.

A government financial authority declared the continued fall of the franc was due to world-wide speculation.

"Many are selling short of francs. They are likely to experience heavy losses soon," he said.

Other financiers claim the latest slump is due to the month-end need of industrialists for foreign currency.

Poincare's critics say his Ruhr policy is to blame.

North Side Workers Plan Novel Social on Friday Evening

The members of the North Side English Branch, Workers Party, will have open house in their headquarters, Imperial Hall, 2409 N. Halsted Street, on Friday evening, March 7.

The world is invited to come and partake of the mulligan stew. Besides this material refreshment, a unique program, the contents of which are to be a surprise to all those fortunate enough to attend has been arranged.

A varied and interesting evening is anticipated.

There will be no charge for admission.

Fur Workers Win Strike.

NEW YORK, Mar. 4.—A 14-months' strike by fur workers against the Gabbe Fur Works at Norwalk, Conn., has ended in a settlement. The agreement concluded stipulates a closed union shop, limitation and regulation of apprenticeship, reduction in hours, increased wages, adjustment of overtime and establishment of a board of arbitration. The agreement will be valid for 4 years, 9 months.

Stalin Discusses Tasks of Russian Communists

NOTE:—Today the DAILY WORKER begins the publication of the speech of Stalin, one of the most prominent of the Russian Communists, on the big problems now confronting the Russian Communist Party. This address was made before a selected audience of Russian party workers. There will be another installment tomorrow.

WHAT STALIN SAID:

COMRADES, I must above all emphasize that I speak here on my own behalf, and not in the name of the Central of the Party. If the meeting decides to hear my address, I am at its service. (Please go on!)

This does not mean that I differ in opinion in any way to the Central in this question—not at all. I speak here in my own name solely for the reason that within the next few days the commission appointed by the Central to work out measures for the improvement of the inner political situation will be submitting its results to the Central.

These results have not yet been laid before us, and thus I have not yet a formal right to appear in the name of the Central, altho I am fully convinced that that which I am about to say, will be at the same time essentially the expression of the attitude adopted by the Central in this question.

Discussion—A Good Sign.

The first question which I should like to raise here is the question of the meaning of the discussion being carried on at present in the press and in the nuclei.

What is this discussion about, and what does it signify?

Is it not a tempest which has broken into the peaceful life of the Party; is this discussion not a sign, as some say, of the disintegration and decay of the Party, or, as others say, a sign of degeneration of the Party?

I believe, comrades, that neither the one nor the other is true, there is neither a degeneration nor a disintegration. The fact is that the Party has grown of late, that it has unburdened itself of a considerable amount of ballast, that it has become more proletarian.

You are aware that two years ago we had no fewer than 700,000 Party members. You are aware that several hundreds of thousands of one-time Party members have left the Party or have been expelled.

The Party has further improved in its component parts, and has attained a higher qualitative level during this period as a result of the improvement in the material situation of the workers, of the uplift of industry, of the return of the old qualified workers from the country, and of the fresh wave of cultural uplift among the industrial workers.

In one word: all these conditions have tended to the growth of the Party, to its qualitative progress. Its requirements have become greater, its demands are higher, it wants to know more than it used to, and it wants to decide more than it has hitherto decided.

The discussion which has arisen is no sign of weakness in the Party, and much less of degeneration; it is rather a sign of strength, a sign of power, a sign of the improvement of the elements composing the Party, a sign of its increased activity.

Causes of the Discussion.

The second question with which we have to deal is the question of why precisely this moment, the autumn of this year, has happened to be the period in which the question of inner Party policy has assumed so acute a character? How is this to be explained? What are the causes?

I assume, comrades, that there are two causes at the bottom of it.

The first cause is the wave of ferment and strikes, in connection with working wages, which passed over some districts of our republic in August of this year. This strike wave showed that our organizations are faulty, that some of our organizations—Party and state organizations—possess inadequate contact with the events going on in the works and factories, and it also showed that some illegal organizations have been existing within the Party, anti-communistic in their essential character, and striving to divide the Party.

All these deficiencies thus brought to light by the strike wave have thrown such a bright light into the eyes of the Party, have flooded it with such a blaze of sobering illumination, that it recognized the necessity of inner changes in the Party.

The second cause rendering the question of the inner Party policy so acute at precisely this moment, has been the extensive leave of absence permitted by our Party comrades. We can well comprehend their doing this, but the mass character of the leave taken, had the effect that the pulse of Party life was considerably weakened just at the moment when fermentation began to be apparent in the workshops and factories, so that the manifestation of the defects which had arisen was greatly facilitated at this period, the autumn of this year.

Defects of Inner Party Life.

What are the faults and failings of our inner Party life? Is it that the line taken by the Party has been wrong, as some comrades think, or is it that the line was right in itself, but has been departed from in actual practice, and has been adjusted in accordance with certain subjective conditions?

I believe that the essential defect of our inner Party life consists precisely of the fact that tho the line of the Party has been right as expressed in the resolutions passed by its congresses, the actual practice in the provinces (not everywhere, of course, but in some districts) has been wrong.

Altho the proletarian democratic line held to by our Party has been correct, its execution in the provinces has created facts and experiences which are a bureaucratic distortion of this line.

This is the essential defect. The existence of contradictions between the fundamental lines laid down by the Party, as established at the X, XI and XII Congresses, and the actual practice of our organizations when endeavoring to act on these lines in the provinces. This is the substance of all the inadequacies evinced by our inner Party life.

The Party had laid down the rule that the most important questions of our Party work, naturally with the exception of urgent matters, or of affairs involving military or diplomatic secrets, have to be brought up for debate at the Party meetings. This is absolutely demanded by the Party. But in the provinces it has been the practice, tho, of course, not everywhere, to consider that there was no particular reason why a number of questions of inner Party practice should be dealt with at the Party meetings, as the Central and other leading organizations decided these questions themselves.

The Party has laid down the rule that the official persons of our Party have to be elected, and that this rule has to be unconditionally followed unless the nature of the Party membership, etc., offers some insuperable obstacle.

You know that according to the statutes of the Party, a secretary of the guvernements Party organization has to have been a member of the Party before the October Revolution, a secretary of the district organization has to have been a member for three years, a secretary of a nucleus one year. In actual practice the Party has not seldom decided that where a lengthy membership of the Party is necessary, it is not needful for an election actually to take place.

The Party has laid down the rule that the masses in the country must be kept informed of the work done by the economic organs, by the undertakings and trusts, for our Party nuclei are naturally morally responsible to the non-partisan masses for deficiencies in the works and factories. Nevertheless, the Party administrators have been of the opinion that since we have a Central, and this gives instructions to the economic organs, and these economic organs are further bound by these instructions, that the instructions thus passed on shall be also carried out without the control of the Party masses from below.

The Party has laid down the rule that the responsible functionaries of the various groups of work, whether Party workers, economists, trade unionists, military, are despite all specialization arising from their inseparable components of a whole, for they are one and all working for the cause of the proletariat, and this cause is an inseparable whole.

The actual practice of the Party has been such that where there has been a specialization in work, a division of work into that of the actual party workers, economists, military, etc., then the Party workers are not responsible for the economists nor the economists for the Party workers, so that alienation and lack of contact is inevitable among the different categories.

This is, in general, the character of the contradictions existing between lines laid down by the Party and their actual execution.

It is far from my intention to accuse the local organizations of being to blame for this deviation from Party lines, for, when the matter is regarded in its true light, it is not a case of anyone being to blame, it is rather a natural evil arising from our organizations in the provinces. The root of this evil, and the remedy for it, I shall refer to later.

I wish first to establish this fact, in order that the contradictions may be explained, and shall then attempt to propose measures for removing the evil.

And it is equally far from my intention to regard our Central as entirely blameless, for it has its small sins, like any other organization or institution, sins composed partly of faults and partly of natural evil. Some blame is deserved, if only for the fact that the Central, for some reason or another, did not observe the growing inadequacies and take timely measures for their removal.

But this is not the question at the moment; what is of importance at present is to get at the causes of the inadequacies of which I have just spoken.

WORLD'S YOUTH AND THE INTERNATIONAL

By MARTIN ABERN
Secretary, Young Workers League

THE Communist International has captured the minds and bodies of the exploited young workers of the world. The Comintern is the "friendly word" that unites the toilers of the earth against capitalism. The ranks of the youth, the Young Communist International, are unbroken in defense of the World Communist Party.

The young workers, the revolutionary youth, were the first to raise a cry and demonstrate against the imperialist war. The revolutionary youth, meeting at Berne, Switzerland, in 1915, revived the drooping class spirit of the workers, benumbed by the betrayal of Social-Democracy, by raising the battle-cry of "War Against Capitalist War!" It was the red youth who were in the forefront in aiding to build the revolutionary International, the Communist International.

The American Red Youth, the Young Workers League of America, greets the Fifth Anniversary of the Communist International. By organizing and educating the exploited American youth for and in the struggle against American capitalism, we will best carry on our work in the spirit of the Comintern.

FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL
Special Magazine Supplement
THE DAILY WORKER.

SECOND SECTION
March 5th, 1924. This magazine supplement will appear every Saturday in The Daily Worker.

The Communist International

By JOHN PEPPER

THE Communist International was born in March, 1919, in Moscow. Now, in March, 1924, it is celebrating its fifth anniversary.

The Communist International was born in bloody and stormy days. Kolchak from the east, Denikin from the south, were approaching dangerously near to Moscow. In Germany Spartacus received one bloody blow after another upon its body. In Hungary the proletarian revolution lifted its head, victorious and full of promise. Everywhere on the whole long front of the world revolution—clash of arms and bloody struggles. The capitalist class disorganized by the world war, and the working class awakened, stretching out its limbs everywhere.

Moscow itself, the capital of the first victorious proletarian revolution, was in danger in March, 1919; the dictatorship of the capitalist class was menacing Russia; but the Communist International blew mighty notes thru the trumpets of the world revolution and its bugle call was heard everywhere, wherever workers were struggling.

Mighty slogans came from the Communist International to the masses.

We are living in the period of the world revolution!

Upon the ruins of deceptive capitalist democracy we must establish the dictatorship of the proletariat!

The workers must employ the mighty weapon of civil war against the capitalist class!

The victorious working class must destroy the capitalist state and set up its own rule in the form of the Soviets!

The laboring masses can venture the final struggle only when they drive out of their midst the treacherous labor bureaucrats and yellow socialists, the agents of the capitalists, and choose a new revolutionary leadership!

The Third International was born in the fight against the Second International, and its first cry was the battle call of revolution, the cry against the socialist lackeys of imperialism, the outcry against the opportunism of the social traitors. The Third International took the name Communist International because the word socialist had become the word of shame, of betrayal, of selling out to the capitalists.

The Communist International can only be conceived of, as the successor and the contrary of the Second International.

The Second International was and is the international of words and phrases. The Third International is the International of action. Kautsky revealed the real essence of the Second International when he declared that it is only an instrument in time of peace, which means, in other words, that it sells itself to the various national capitalist classes in time of war, when the capitalist class has reached a crisis. The Third International is the revolutionary instrument of the working class in time of war as well as peace, and it seeks to utilize the crisis of the capitalists by converting imperialist war into civil war and victory of the workers.

The Second International was and is the International of the labor aristocrats of the various nations, and was always under the leadership of conservative socialist parties and trade union bureaucrats. The individual parties of the Second International had interests in common with their national capitalist classes, and betrayed the interests of the working class over and over again, not only on a national, but also on an international scale. The Third International is the organization of the real working class, the International of the lowest strata of the exploited and suppressed; and it is under the leadership of professional revolutionists. The Third International represents the total interests of the proletariat class as a world class, as against the special interests of individual occupations, regions, or nations.

The Second International was a loose organization. Every party in it did what it wished. The decisions of its international congresses were never binding. The Second International sailed under the slogan of "complete democracy." The Third International is a real, centralized and disciplined organization. It is not a conglomeration of parties, but is a real world party with forty-two sections in forty-two countries. The Communist International has unmasked the swindle of "complete democracy," and its slogan is democratic centralization.

The Third International is born from the womb of the Second International, but as its antithesis and as the direct heir of the First International of Marx. The Communist International is and could become the general staff of the world revolution because its strategy is nothing else than the application of Marxism to our present period. The real cementing stuff of the Communist International is not Moscow's money, as the caluminators say it is, and not simply the prestige of the victorious Russian revolution. The discipline in the Communist International is a voluntary discipline but an iron one, because the Communist International has proven its real leadership on the field of battle itself. Under the intellectual leadership of Lenin and Zinoviev the Communist International analyzes correctly the world situation and the situation in the various countries with the aid of the Marxist method, and proposed again and again the correct tactics.

The Communist International changed its tactics when the situation changed. But it never changed its correct Marxist, Leninist method and in every situation its tactics remained the revolutionary one.

We can see three big periods in the history of the Communist International.

The first period, from its foundation in March, 1919, till the middle of 1921. This period was the time of immediate, direct, advancing onslaught of the working class. The capitalists were disorganized. The laboring masses everywhere were filed with the will for power. The tactics and slogans of the Communist International, in keeping with the period, were the direct, revolutionary, armed fight for the dictatorship of the working class.

The second period began in the middle of 1921, and lasted to the summer of 1923. The collapse of the offensive of the Italian workers in September, 1920, and the failure of the March action in Germany in March, 1921, showed clearly that the offensive of the working class was at an end, and that a world offensive of the capitalists was in the ascendancy. The great masses of workers were no longer actuated by the desire for seizing power. They wanted to fight for a bigger piece of bread. The Communist International grasped the new situation immediately. It perceived that the vanguard of the working class, the Communist Party, would be lost if it dared to undertake the final struggle without the active support of the broad masses. The Communist International recognized that the new period called for new tactics, that the Communist parties must begin a tenacious, systematic fight to win over the majority of the working class.

The first period was the direct struggle for power. The second period was the struggle to win over the majority of the working class. The slogan of the first period was the dictatorship of the proletariat. In the second period there was born the transitional slogan of workers' and farmers' government. In the first period we conducted a direct fight against the Second International only from the bottom. In the second period we employed the tactics of the united front which aimed at the winning over of the majority of the working class, not only thru a direct attack on the yellow leaders from the bottom, but also thru negotiations and compromises with them from the top.

But they are greatly mistaken—those who believe that the tactics of the second period are a negation of the tactics of the first period. They believe that the "too stormy" Communist International had now become more "sensible," that it abandoned the revolutionary tactics and was employing opportunist tactics.

The Communist International in the second period was just as revolutionary as in the first period. The task of winning over the majority of the working class for the revolution is just as revolutionary a task as the carrying out of the revolution itself.

And the opportunists who were glad that the Communist International had become "sensible," and the sectarians who accused the Communist International of having become opportunist, both experienced bitter disillusionment as the third period began in the tactics of the Communist International.

The third period of the world revolution is marked by an ebb of the offensive of capital and new attempts at offensive on the part of the working class. The offensive of the working class makes its advent everywhere again. The events in the second period of 1923 in Germany, the armed fighting in Bulgaria and Poland are just as much stations of the advancing working class as are the growth of the Labor Party in the United States, the great election victory of the Labor Party in England, and the arming and increased consciousness of power of the workers in Mexico as a result of the De la Huerta counter-revolution.

In the first moment that the new wave of world revolution became apparent, the Communist International changed its tactics. As the Fascists in Bulgaria overthrew the peasant government, the Communist International immediately issued the slogan of armed alliance of workers and farmers, and criticized severely the Communist Party of Bulgaria because it had remained neutral during the civil war and did not take up arms. As in Germany the laboring masses awoke, as the Ruhr occupation by the French and the driving out of the Cuno government by the general strike created a new revolutionary situation, the Communist International issued the slogan of armed struggle, and criticized the German Communist Party severely because its tactics were not sufficiently aggressive. The lying opponents say that the Communist International is only an instrument of Soviet Russia, and that it buried the tactics of the world revolution long ago in the grave of the New Economic Policy. But the truth is that the Communist International in which the Russian Party plays, of course, the leading role risked every acquisition of the Russian revolution, and was ready to mobilize all the forces of Soviet Russia and of the whole International for the support of the German revolution.

The Communist International, in all three periods of the world revolution, has shown itself the real general staff of world revolution. Offensive or defensive, or again offensive, the tactics of the Communist International are always based on the correct concrete analysis of concrete situations. That is the real secret of the leadership of the Communist International. Fighting against opportunism and eliminating it from our own ranks, correcting sectarianism, the Communist International, the general staff of the world revolution, shows us the true road of revolutionary realism.

Foster Calls on All Workers To Follow Communist International

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER, Chairman of the Workers Party.
(By telegraph) New York City, March 4, 1924.

THE birth of the Communist International five years ago was an event of first magnitude in the historic struggle of the world's working class.

For many years the Second International had attempted to lead the international proletariat in the battle against capitalism, but its betrayal of the workers in the war, and in the revolutionary events ensuing, tore away its mask and showed it to be not an enemy of the capitalist system but its effective defender.

Then came the formation of the Communist International and the rallying of the scattered forces of revolutionary labor betrayed by the yellow leaders of the Second International.

The Communist International is now marshalling its forces for the final assault upon capitalism. Its advent marks the beginning of the end of the capitalist system. All revolutionary workers must and will support the Communist International.

For the World Soviet Republic

By BENJAMIN GITLOW
Editor, The Freiheit, Jewish Communist Daily

(By telegraph) New York City, March 4, 1924.

WORLD capitalism is tottering. The World War has completely demoralized capitalist society and has created unsurmountable difficulties for the ruling capitalist powers. The situation for the workers is continually becoming worse. In Germany alone 26,000,000 members of the working class are starving. Capitalism, unable to assure peace, is heading the world into another bloody catastrophe. Capitalism is bankrupt.

This capitalism with its bloody militarism and savage exploitation of the workers has given rise to the proletarian revolution in Russia and the establishment of the Third (Communist) International.

The Communist International was born five years ago out of the revolutionary struggle of the workers against the intolerable conditions of capitalist society. The Communist International is the revolutionary center of all workers of the world. It is the center from which is directed the world's struggle on the part of all workers to free themselves from the bloody, brutal regime of capitalism.

The Communist International is the guiding star to freedom for the exploited masses, poor farmers and workers everywhere. The revolutionary workers of America hail the fifth anniversary of the Communist International. May it live to welcome the union of Soviet Republics of the whole world!

The Communist International in America

By C. E. RUTHENBERG
(Member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International)

FIVE YEARS of work are behind the Communist International. What relationship has the Communist International had to the workers of the United States during those five years? What has been its contribution to the struggles of the workers here? What has it achieved in this country?

Has the Communist International been merely a name here, to be applauded by the revolutionary workers and hated by the reactionary labor leaders, or is it a living force, leading the struggles of the workers as it does elsewhere in the world?

These are questions which may well be asked on this Fifth Anniversary of the founding of the Communist International. It is a fitting thing that in celebrating the Fifth Anniversary that the workers here learn that the Communist International is not an organization of Russian, German, Italian, or even of European workers, but a world organization which is guiding the struggles of the revolutionary movement in the United States as it does elsewhere in the world.

To make this clear it is necessary only to review some of the main developments of the Communist movement in the United States. These will show, what every worker in this country should know, that the Communist International is the general staff, the leading organization of the struggle to free the American workers from exploitation and oppression of capitalism; that the American workers may look to it for help and guidance as to the workers the world over.

When the news reached the United States about the historic meeting in the Kremlin in March 5, 1919, at which the Communist International was organized, a well-defined Left Wing was already struggling for control of the Socialist Party. The manifesto of the C. I., calling upon the revolutionary workers in every country to unite under its auspices gave a tremendous impetus to the Left Wing movement. The Left Wing immediately initiated a referendum in the Socialist Party for affiliation with the Communist International, which received the overwhelming support of the membership. At least three-fourth of the close to one hundred thousand members of the Socialist Party supported this referendum, only to have their decision sabotaged by the ruling bureaucracy of the Socialist Party.

In the months which followed there came into existence the Communist Party of America, with over fifty thousand members, which openly announced its affiliation with the Communist International. At the same time the Communist Labor Party was organized, which, while it did not as directly state its affiliation, was equally a supporter of the Communist International. Only four months of open work were permitted these organized answers to the appeal of the Communist International, until the government loosed its terror against them in an effort to destroy them.

It Brings Unity.

In the bitter factional struggles which tore asunder the Communists organizations during 1920 and 1921, it was the Communist International which appeared as the unifying influence. It was the demand and influence of the Communist International which unified the United Communist Party and the Communist Party in 1921. It was the representative of the Communist International who in 1922 led back into the Party the opposition which split away in the struggle over the founding of the open party.

Had there been no Communist International, no deciding and directing body with authority to pass upon question of the principles and tactics for the revolutionary workers in the United States and to direct their movement into the right channels, the factional struggle might well have resulted otherwise than it did. It is not an exaggeration to say that if there is today in the United States one party—the Workers Party—in which all the Communist groups are united, it is because of the persistent effort and tactful guidance of the International.

Establishes Correct Policies.

The contribution of the Communist International, however, has not been limited to solving the problem of factional divisions. It was the guiding influence of the Communist International which helped the Communist Party in this country to formulate those policies which during the last year have enabled the Party to make such great gains in establishing its influence among the workers and farmers.

It was the Communist International which impressed upon the party driven underground thru the Palmer raids the need of again fighting its way into the open. The Workers Party was established and the underground Communist Party was liquidated with the aid of the International. That so fundamental a change in the policy of the Communist Party in this country was achieved without a split was due to the fact that the International clearly saw the need of the movement in this country and used its disciplinary power to establish what probably not a single member of the Workers Party now doubts was the right policy.

On the trade union field the Communist International was the deciding factor eliminating the dual union tendencies from the Communist Party in this country, and in securing the adoption of the policy of fighting within the existing unions for amalgamation and revolutionary tactics and leadership.

In the United Front policy adopted by the Communist International in 1922, it made its greatest contribution of the strengthening of the Communist party in the United States. During the last two years of work of the Workers Party, its guiding principle has been the United Front policy of the C. I. It is thru the application of this policy that it has won its successes in crystallizing the movement for independent political action by the workers and farmers, which in the present year will find its expression in the organization of a mass farmer-labor party—an event of the most vital importance in the development of class action by the workers and farmers of the United States.

In its letter to the Third National Convention of the Workers Party the Communist International called attention to a phase of work neglected by the party here—agitation against American Imperialism and for freedom of its colonies—work, which has since been begun.

Leads Revolutionary Struggle Here.

In guiding the Workers Party the Communist International is guiding the struggles of the American workers, for it is upon the principles laid down by the Communist International and policies it has enunciated as the means to win the support of the workers for those principles, that there will develop the mass movement of the American workers thru which the struggle against capitalism will be won in this country.

For the American workers, even today, the Communist International is not a far-away abstraction but a living, fighting organization which influences their struggles and guides them along the road to victory.

Today the slogan of the Communist International for the masses of workers and farmers of the United States is, a mass Farmer-Labor Party fighting for a Workers and Farmers Government. To this slogan hundreds of thousands of workers and farmers are responding. On the morrow, when the time is ripe, the Communist International will raise the new slogan of a Soviet Government and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat and lead the workers in their final struggle for power, even as it today leads them in preparation for that struggle.

Hail to the leadership of the Communist International.

Five Years of the Communist International

By EARL R. BROWDER

ON March 5, 1919, the Communist International was formed in Moscow by delegates of the Bolshevik Party, newly come to power in Russia thru the October revolution, and representatives of the left-wing factions of Socialist parties over the world. That date marked not alone the burial of the dead Second International, killed in 1914 by the treachery of Social-Democracy; it was also the symbol of the international proletarian character of the Russian revolution and a call to the entire working class of the world to turn from the corruption of death, embodied in social reformism, and engage in the struggle for the establishment of a working class society thruout the world.

Foundation of First World Party.

A profound cleavage took place thruout the labor movement from that moment. Almost all the opportunistic, power-seeking careerists at the heads of the working class parties, together with the timid and pacifist elements, rallied to fight against this "menace" to their comfortable positions as agents of capitalism; while the healthy revolutionary elements everywhere responded to the call of the Third International with tremendous enthusiasm. A bitter struggle began, with the class-conscious working masses everywhere as the partisans of the Bolsheviks. Fearful of the surging rank and file beneath them, and uncertain as yet whether or no they might not be able to turn the new-born Third International into a duplicate of the Second, and thus satisfy their followers while sabotaging again the revolution, many reformist leaders, Hillquit in the U. S., Dissman and Haas in Germany, Longuet in France, etc., formed "center" groups which broke with the Second International and temporized with the Third.

Meanwhile the first great wave of revolution was sweeping Europe. Communist parties were being formed in every land. In Germany the Spartakusbund united with the left Independent Socialists to form the Communist Party of Germany; in the United States the vast majority of the Socialist Party, faced by the disruptive expulsions of the right-wing reformists, split and formed two Communist parties, later united and merged in the Workers Party; in Italy and France the Socialist Parties, yielding to the mass pressure, affiliated to the Third International while retaining their reformist leadership intact; in almost every country of Central Europe, Communist parties were formed. Between the First and Second Congresses there was a mighty mobilization of the revolutionary masses of the world in response to the manifesto of the Congress of March 5, 1919.

Mobilization, Organization, Action.

If the First Congress mobilized the world party of the workers, the Second is equally memorable as firmly advancing the next step of revolution—organization. Within the parties and groups that professed adherence to the Third International were many reformists, opportunists, and careerists, merely carried along by the mass movement and but awaiting an opportunity to betray it. The Second Congress laid down the famous "21 points" as the basic principles of organization of the world party. A cry of rage went up from the yellow leaders everywhere; they were to be denied power to dispose of "their" workers as they saw fit, their sacred nationalism was violated; they must proclaim a holy war against the "Moscow dictators" or they were lost. So they began the campaign of slander against the Third International that continues unabated to this day. But the "21 points" against which they fulminate have proved to be the armour-plate of the world party against the treachery of the agents of capitalism within the working class. The Second Congress definitely broke the power of all the social traitors within the new international.

Again the Communist International proved that it embodied within itself the virility, intelligence, and iron will of the revolutionary proletariat, when the Third Congress met in 1921. Faced by the bitter fact that Social-Democratic treachery had gained a temporary breathing-space for capitalism, and that the International must prepare for a protracted and bloody struggle, the Third Congress clarified the strategy and tactics of the Communist movement; formulated the trade union program that has since, crystallized in the Red International of Labor Unions, shaken the labor bureaucracy; sealed the alliance between the revolutionary proletariat and the suppressed peoples of the East; and established the basis of the United Front program that has since penetrated the whole working class with Communist thought.

In December, 1922, the Fourth Congress of the Communist International found the world party mobilized, organized, and in action all over the world. No longer were there questions that threatened the fundamental solidarity of the International. The army of the world revolution was consolidated; the problems were the myriad questions of strategy and tactics to fit the multitude of situations facing the workers in the 49 countries where the Communist Party is established. And from the Fourth Congress went forth a great inspiration that, in the year 1923, carried the world party onto a new stage of struggle. The German Communist Party gained almost a majority of the German proletariat during 1923, for example, and in the tremendous strides forward of the Workers Party of America we see another witness of the vitality of the Communist International.

Now, on the fifth anniversary of the founding of the Communist International, it is hard to realize that it is but five years ago that a little group of hardened revolutionists, most of them exiles and some, like Boris Reinstein from America, Russian revolutionists returned to their native land after years of wandering, gathered in the Kremlin to found the World Party of the workers. Only five years—but what tremendous years they have been. Thru those five years the working class of the world has reached its maturity and prepared itself to govern the world.

The Road to Power

By LUDWIG LORE
Editor, The Volkszeitung, German Communist Daily

(By telegraph) New York City, March 4, 1924.

"THE International that will serve the interests of the proletarian cause can be born only out of the self-criticism of the working class, out of the realization of its own power, of that power which was broken and shattered on August 4, 1914, but which yet will be called upon to cut down the centuries-old oaks of gigantic growth and strength of social injustice. The road to this power is the road to the re-establishment of the International."

Thus wrote Rosa Luxembourg, February, 1915, and her prophetic eye saw the truth. The self-criticism of the class-conscious workers and their organizations made a new International possible. It created a new power. It builds the young, strong Communist movement with its International that will finally cut down those imposing looking trees of class privilege, class exploitation, oppression, social injustice, corruption, rottenness and misery untold, in order to make possible a new world of happiness and equal opportunity for all humankind. On this Fifth Anniversary of our International, we feel deeply the loss of the great founder and teacher of Communism in action, Nikolai Lenin. We send greetings of true comradeship to his co-workers, promising to work with all our energy for the happy realization of our common aims in these United States.

The Third Communist International

By NICOLAI LENIN

(From a speech on March 6, 1920 before the Moscow Soviet)

COMRADES, since the foundation of the Communist International a year has gone by. In the course of this year the Communist International won victories which we would have never expected, and it may be said that at its foundation no one expected such tremendous successes.

At the beginning of the Revolution many cherished the hope that the Socialist Revolution in West Europe would begin at the moment that the imperialist war would come to an end, for at that time, when the masses were armed, the Revolution could have gone ahead in a few countries of the West with the greatest success. This could have happened if it had not become evident that the split of the working class of Western Europe was deeper, that the betrayal of the former Socialist leaders there had taken on greater proportions.

If the International had not been in the hands of betrayers, who in the critical moment saved the capitalist class, there would have been many a chance for the revolution to follow very quickly in many of the warring countries and in a few neutral countries where the people were under arms, and then the outcome would have been entirely different. . . .

Comrades, before the war it seemed as if the essential division in the labor movement was the division into Socialists and Anarchists. And it did not only seem so, but it was actually the case. For a long time, until the imperialist war and until the revolution there was no objective revolutionary situation in the great majority of European countries. The task was to utilize this slow work for preparing the revolution. The Socialists set about this work, the Anarchists had no understanding for this task. The war created a revolutionary situation, and it became evident that this old division died away. On the one hand the elite of Anarchism and Socialism had become chauvinist, showing what it means to defend one's own capitalist robbers against other robbers of the capitalist class for whose sake the war snatched away millions of people. On the other hand, in the lower strata of the old parties new currents were formed—against the war, against imperialism, for the social revolution. Thus, as a consequence of the war the deepest crisis arose, and the Anarchists as well as the Socialists split because the elite of the parliamentary leaders of the Socialists proved to be with the chauvinist wing and only a constantly growing minority held back and began to go over to the side of the revolution.

Thus the labor movement in all countries entered upon a new road; not the road of the Anarchists and Socialists, but the way which led to the dictatorship of the proletariat. . . . This split had made itself felt and had made its advent thruout the whole world even before the creation of the III International.

If we have had success that was because we came when the situation was revolutionary and there was already a labor movement in all countries, and that is why within Socialism and Anarchism there has come a split. This leads thruout the world to the co-operation of the Communist workers in the creation of new organizations and their unification into the III International. This is the way the work can best be understood. . . .

If we take into consideration the present state of affairs we can say that the III International is dead and that the laboring masses in Germany, England and France are going over to the side of the Communists. . . .

The collapse of the capitalist governments is inevitable. For everyone sees that a new war is unavoidable if the imperialists and the capitalist class remain in power. . . . No one knows where and how the outbreak (of a new war) will come, but everyone sees and knows and says that the war is unavoidable and is being prepared anew.

This fact in the Twentieth Century gives us the assurance that there can be no thought any more of the old Reformism and Anarchism. They were killed by the war. To reshape capitalist society thru reformism—of that there can be no thought. Whoever speaks and thinks that way loses all significance for us.

The Communist International is strong because it is based on the lessons of the imperialist world slaughter. In every country the correctness of this stand is being born out thru the experience of millions of people, and the movement towards the Communist International is now a hundred-fold broader and deeper than hitherto. In the course of one year it has brought to maturity the complete collapse of the III International.

In the whole world there is not a single country so backward that all thinking workers in it have not entered the Communist International, have not adhered to it ideologically. Therein lies the full guarantee that the victory of the Communist International in the whole world will come after a not too long interval—that this victory is certain.

On the Death of Lenin

Dear comrade of the lowly ones of earth,
Today, upon your bier, you passed me by
With cold face upward turned to a cold sky,
The gilded trappings could not cry your worth
So surely as the tears that came to birth
In grief-clenched hearts and sprang from every eye.
The comrades that you loved,—they bore you high
On straining breasts, to give you back to earth.

'Twas so you bore upon your grieving heart
The sorrows of the toiling multitude . . .
They mourn your loss, who glimpsed the rosy dawn
Of Freedom thru the gates you flung apart.
Now, rest you for a gentle interlude,—
The love you loosed on earth flows swiftly on.

The Rise of the Third International -

By JAY LOVESTONE

IN ORDER to understand the historical significance of the Communist International, it is necessary to know the background of its development.

When the war came the Second International with its powerful national organizations collapsed. Except for the Italian and Russian parties, the leading national units of the Second International fell an easy prey to the capitalist imperialists.

For some time there was no sign of the Second International ever having existed, except for the occasional effort of the Belgian, Huysman, secretary of the bureau.

Then came the unofficial Zimmerwald conference in Switzerland. This gathering was almost exclusively pacifist and not revolutionary. It was the first cry against the war that assumed international dimensions.

The Kienthal Conference.

As a result of this conference, there was called the Kienthal Congress, in April, 1916. Here the master hand of Lenin was plainly evident. One need but read the Kienthal manifesto to find the first invigorating breath of Bolshevism in the stifling atmosphere of imperialist world slaughter. Here we have proclaimed the solidarity of the proletariat, a scathing denunciation of the great betrayal of the social-democrats and a rousing call for united working class action for peace and socialism. "The conquest of political power and the ownership of capital by the people themselves; the real durable peace that will be the fruit of triumphant socialism"—these were the essence of the proposals of the Kienthalists.

But the revolutionary and pacifist forces were still closely interlaced. Then came the first decisive battle of the mighty Russian Revolution, the overthrow of the Czarist regime in March, 1917. The collapse of the Czarist Government had an immeasureably wholesome effect on the international movement of the working class. Millions of working men in Russia and elsewhere were now advocating the peace program of the Kienthal Conference. The Second International itself thru its Bureau, was again making an attempt to hold a conference, but the French Socialists of the stripe of Thomas and Mr. Vandervelde of Belgium succeeded in preventing such a gathering.

The Stockholm Call.

The Russian Revolution, however, was not taking notice of these Thomases and Vandervelde. On May 9, 1917, the Petrograd Soviets issued a call for the convening of all socialist parties at Stockholm on July 8. A rift in the war clouds was noticed by the imperialist clique strangling the various suffering countries. Forthwith, the capitalist governments began to rush socialist jingoes to Russia to convince the masses of the war-stricken countries to remain in the war and discontinue their agitation for world peace.

Thru the interference of such social patriots as Renaudel in France and Thorne in England, the Stockholm Conference fizzled out. The imperialist governments of England and France, with the able assistance of these renegades, prevented holding of this convention. On Sept. 12, 1917, the Zimmerwald Commission met and decided that a new International was necessary. Soon the Bolshevik Revolution came and all this delay in the international organization of the proletariat was ended. The Russian Communists having conquered the state power of Russia immediately issued a call for the holding of an international congress of the revolutionary workers of the world on March 2-5, 1919.

The Third International.

At the first congress of the newly organized, the Third Communist International, there were gathered mainly the Bolshevik Party of Russia and the small communist groups of the nearby countries. One month before, Feb. 3, the Berne Conference of the Second International was held with all but the Italian and Russian Parties participating.

The differences between the two Congresses and Internationals at this early, formative period of working class reorganization after the war foretold the fate of the two bodies. At the Congress of the Third International there were gathered the revolutionary workers; at the Berne conclave the revolutionists were banned. Now that the war was over, the Berne social-patriots wanted peace and unequivocally declared themselves against proletarian revolution. On the other hand, the Communist International emphatically declared and pledged itself for the inclusion within its ranks only of revolutionary workers, and the substitution of relentless class war for the national imperialist capitalist wars.

Within one year the Second International became a "decrepit relic." All the parties, except the British Labor Party and the German Social Democrats, deserted it. The German Independents, the French Socialist Party and the Independent Labor Party of England detached themselves from this corpse. Then came the winning over of a large proportion of the masses of these centrist bodies by the Communist International. The desperate attempts of the Centrist leaders to hold their followers by an effort to maintain an International of their own, the Two-and-a-Half International, failed. The subsequent attempts to reunite all the social-patriotic groups into one international against the Communist world party of revolutionary workers and to galvanize the dead Second International into life once more have not succeeded. The Hamburg Congress of the Second International was more a gathering of the ghosts of the old association than of living groups in struggle against the capitalist class.

Significance of Communist International.

Today the Communist International is the mightiest political organization that the world has ever seen, the Third International counting its millions of adherents in practically every country on earth is based on the international mass action of the working class.

The Communist International, unlike the group still adhering to what is left of the Second International, bases its tactics on the fundamental recognition that capitalism has reached and is today in its final stage, the imperialist stage.

The tactics of the Communist International in the united front, the struggle of the Communists to organize the oppressed colonial peoples for a war against their capitalist imperialist oppressors, the insistent demand of the Communists International that the workers must unite with the expropriated, dispossessed farmers against the big capitalists dominating the gigantic basic industries of the country, the organization of the proletarian dictatorship thru the Soviet State—these are but a few of the outstanding features of the Communist International's tactics arising from its fundamental recognition of the imperialist stage of capitalism under which the workers of the world find themselves today.

It is these tactics that strike terror into the hearts of the imperialists. It is just these revolutionary tactics that have established the historical significance of the Communist International—its role of undisputed leadership of the exploited working and farming masses of every country struggling against capitalist oppression and for the organization of the Communist Society.

Sentiments on Fifth Anniversary

By ALEXANDER BITTLEMAN
Secretary, Jewish Section, Workers Party

(By telegraph) New York City, March 4, 1924.

PRIDE, happiness and unbounded determination to fight for the final liberation of the working class—these are the sentiments of every Communist on the Fifth Anniversary of the Communist International. On this day, the Workers Party takes an honorable position in the proletarian family of International Communism.

With intensified devotion and redoubled energy, we shall continue our activities until the working class of America has been won over to the ideas and principles represented by the Communist International.

LITWINSKY STILL PICKETS DESPITE CROWE THREATS

State's Attorney's Men Tried to Bulldoze

Israel Litwinsky, one of the expelled militants, is still active in the strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers in spite of the threats made to him by Milton D. Smith, assistant state's attorney, that if he was seen on the picket line or in a strike headquarters he would be arrested. Litwinsky was arrested and taken to the state attorney's office Monday for questioning.

When arrested he was not told by Robert E. Crowe's detectives what he was wanted for or whether or not they had a warrant. He was merely told that he was wanted.

"To Hell With That."

Litwinsky explained that he was out of jail on bond and that he would have to appear in the South Clark street police court within an hour or forfeit his bond. The detectives merely replied: "To hell with that, come on along."

When he arrived at the state's attorney's office Litwinsky was brought into the office of Milton D. Smith, one of the assistant state's attorneys. Smith began questioning him without telling him what he had been brought there for or what charges would be placed against him.

Legal Rights Ignored.

He was not told that he did not have to answer the questions put to him nor was he told about his other legal rights. Smith and the detectives shot question after question at him in an attempt to rattle him.

After he had been kept in Smith's office for more than an hour Fred Loesing, of the firm of Reback and Loesing Co., 228 S. Market street, came into the office and said that he wanted to prefer a charge against Litwinsky. He said that Litwinsky had cut the phone wires of Reback and Loesing last Wednesday when the general strike was called.

Litwinsky, who worked for C. H. Lowenthal in the same building as the Reback concern before the strike, said that he had not cut the wires and that Loesing could not prove that he had. Litwinsky said that if Loesing made a charge against him that he would make a charge against Loesing.

Boss Struck Girl.

Litwinsky told Assistant State's Attorney Smith that Loesing had struck a girl from his shop who wanted to go on strike with the other workers and that the girl had fainted from the shock of the blow.

When Smith questioned Loesing about the charge made by Litwinsky, Loesing backed down and admitted that he had lied about Litwinsky.

Smith then told Litwinsky: "Now we are letting you go because Loesing is a good fellow and he don't want to send you to jail. But don't picket or take part in the strike or you will be sent to jail. You can go now."

Litwinsky left the state's attorneys office and went to the South Clark street police court.

Back on Picket Line.

After leaving the police court Litwinsky was just in time to go on the picket line and talk to the scabs who were returning to their work from lunch.

Litwinsky is still busy taking his part in the strike. "I will continue to do what I can for the strike. The threats of those lawyers are not going to frighten me," he said.

Daugherty Making No Statements.

Senator France Finds Russian Progress 'Phenomenal'; Bewails Trade Loss From U. S. Stupidity

By JESSICA SMITH

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

MOSCOW, March 4.—That the United States government's policy toward Russia is one of stupid blunders which is letting other countries get ahead of America in taking advantage of the tremendous commercial opportunities in Russia, is the opinion of Joseph Irwin France, former U. S. senator from Maryland.

Senator France, having fought in the political field to bring about closer relations between America and Russia, has recently been working in the commercial field. He is in Moscow on a mission which will probably bring about a more direct contact between American business men and Russia.

Can't Shake Russia.

"The orderly functioning of the Russian government after the death of Lenin demonstrates that it is now firmly established, and cannot be shaken by the passing of any leader, no matter how great," France said to The Federated Press. "Recognition of Great Britain and Italy have tended to stabilize the situation still further, if that had been necessary. It is incredible that the United States, the most liberal of nations, should have fallen under the domination of such reactionary officials that instead of being the first, she may be the last country to make peace with her great sister republic."

Asked about the condition of Russia compared with two years ago when he was here, France declared:

Finds Phenomenal Progress.

"The economic progress of Russia during the past year is beyond anything I could have imagined, even after I came to a realization after my first visit here of the vast wealth and resources of Russia. In 1921 the shops were boarded up. Today in Moscow every store is occupied, and the shops and places of business compare favorably with those of New York, Paris and London. Many of them surpass any I have seen elsewhere.

"The railroads are efficiently operated and well equipped. The trolleys and public utilities are rendering perfect service. Industry has revived. The currency is stable. Single gold ruble notes are to be issued in addition to the chernovetz (10-ruble note). Silver is being minted, and the coins will be in circulation next month. Not only has all that was good of the old Russia been restored, but stupendous strides have been taken toward the building up of the new Russia, which will be efficient without any loss of ideals."

In view of these facts, France considers that there is no excuse for the stupid and reactionary policy of the American government.

Britain On Ground Floor.

"Our government has failed to adopt a rational attitude toward Russia," he continued. "Its policy of stubbornness, inaction and reaction is fantastic and incomprehensible. American business men are perplexed by the Hughes attitude.

"The representatives of other governments here, particularly the British, are silently amused as well as deeply gratified that our clownish blunders have so greatly increased their prestige and enlarged their opportunities in Russia. Shrewd British merchants see many handsome commissions waiting for them in the business which they expect to do for Americans in Russia. I can not believe that the business interests of the United States will long tolerate a policy of stupidity and stubbornness which violates the best traditions of our country, and utterly ignores the wise admonitions of the founders of our government who enjoined that we seek and cultivate the friendship of all nations. When Mr. Hughes refuses even to discuss the questions which the Russians offer to discuss in such a conciliatory spirit, he violates the principles of international intercourse, and the mandates of common sense."

IT SURE PAYS TO GREASE PALMS OF POLITICAL JOB HOLDERS IN CAPITOL

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4.—E. L. Doheny, who loaned former Secretary of the Interior Fall $100,000 was refunded $40,039.04 in taxes in 1923.

The millionaire oil man was one of 263,320 persons who got tax draw backs from the treasury totalling $123,992,820.40 in 1923 on claims of excessive taxation, according to a report made public by the House Ways and Means Committee.

The largest refund was $9,368,548.60, made to Whitney Payne, Lewis Cass Ledyard and Lewis Cass Ledyard, Jr., executors of the estate of Oliver H. Payne of New York.

Finnish Section of Workers Party In Session In Chicago

The annual convention of the Finnish Section of the Workers Party is in session at Imperial Hall, Halsted and Fulerton streets, with twenty-eight delegates from all parts of the country in attendance.

The report of the executive committee of the federation was approved after considerable discussion.

Earl Browder attended the convention as a representative of the Central Executive of the Workers Party, and Martin Abern was present in behalf of the Young Workers League.

It is expected the convention will be in session until Thursday.

These Cloakmakers Give Practical Aid To Garment Strike

Practical aid to the dressmaker's strike is being given by the union cloakmakers employed by Shuman Bros. Cloak Manufacturing company, at 234 S. Market street, who have voluntarily assessed themselves $1 a week each for the benefit of the striking dressmakers.

The action was taken at a shop meeting. The men from this shop all took part in the half-day demonstration called by their union on the opening of the big strike and have offered their services as pickets whenever they may be called upon.

Grafting Congressmen May Soon Give Cal's Cabinet a Close Run

WASHINGTON, March 4—Indictment of two congressmen mentioned by the Chicago grand jury when it indicted Charles R. Forbes, former director of the Veterans' Bureau, and J. W. Thompson, will be asked by a federal grand jury here shortly, it was learned today.

Attorney General Daugherty's trip to Chicago enroute to Florida last week was said to have been for the purpose of appearing before the grand jury as a witness against these men, who are reported to have accepted money for the use of their influence in obtaining pardons.

FARRELL DEFENSE COUNCIL BARES STEEL CO. PLOT

Conducting Fight for Sedition Victims

(Special to The Daily Worker)

FARRELL, Pa., March 4.—The steel trust had sedition charges brought against six Workers Party members in Farrell because they led the fight for better living conditions of the workers there, says the following summary of the cases which are coming up in April. The summary is prepared by the Labor Defense Council of Farrell and is sent to militant unionists and to labor organizations. The defense office is not in the steel trust town for obvious reasons.

Raided Workers' Homes.

On Feb. 4 the police of Farrell, Pa., aided by department of justice agents, raided the Workers Party hall and confiscated all literature found there. One week later the police raided homes of the workers and again confiscated literature, following this up by arresting six workers on the streets and at their places of work, and holding them in jail under a $5,000 bond, charged with sedition, which, in the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, ranks next to murder.

Three days following their arrest, the preliminary hearing was held before Squire Franek, with Prosecuting Attorney Rickard of Mercer county and Chief of Police Leyshock of Farrell, appearing for the commonwealth. At this hearing, which lasted from 2 p. m. until 7 p. m., it was brought out by the defense that the commonwealth of Pennsylvania accused these workers of being too deeply interested in the welfare of the workers and that the accused were at all times respected and law abiding.

Most Militant Workers.

The defendants, John Radas, Anthony Dogan, Anthony Maric, John Sarich, Anton Kovacevich, and Andy N. Kovacevich, have long been the most active militant workers in Farrell, contributing every effort to bring about better working and living conditions among the steel workers and for this activity they are now held for trial before the Mercer county grand jury in April charged with sedition, for having in their possession literature condemned by the Farrell police and the commonwealth of Pennsylvania as seditious. The arrest of these workers is another link in the long chain of persecutions heaped upon the militant workers by the police and the steel trust backed by the federal department of justice, who remained in the background at the hearing, but will be very evident at the trial.

Funds are badly needed for the defense of these workers and we urgently request that you respond immediately to the appeal to defend them at their trials—the first of its kind in the history of Mercer county, and the prosecutor will do his utmost to bring about their conviction and imprisonment—if we do not properly defend them.

A Union Labor Issue.

We urge you to bring these raids to the attention of your union and other friendly organizations and to have them pledge their support for the defense of these workers. The outlawing of progressive workers' organizations—raiding of their halls and meetings by the steel trust owned police force, and the imprisonment of their members has long ago made these steel trust towns typical slave camps with freedom of speech and assemblage mocked by the servile hirelings of the steel trust clothed in the raiments of law and order.

THE POWER COLUMN

MUCH has been written in the Power Column about increasing the circulation of THE DAILY WORKER. Naturally that is one of the most important problems that has to be solved by those most interested in our paper. Closely related to this work and becoming increasingly important as THE DAILY WORKER grows, is the task of keeping the circulation intact; that is taking care that those who have once subscribed renew their subscription when it expires.

* * * *

Of Interest to All DAILY WORKER Subscribers.

ONE of the matters most important to the successful continuance of our paper is an effective co-operation between the readers of THE DAILY WORKER and the business office. The business office is faithfully attempting to give the utmost of service to the subscribers and welcomes complaints when that service is not satisfactory. Any subscriber who does not receive his paper promptly and regularly should notify the business office at once.

In return THE DAILY WORKER management very much desires the hearty co-operation of the subscribers. There is one way in which subscribers can help tremendously. That is in the prompt renewal of their subscriptions when they are about to expire. We know that any live worker, once a reader of THE DAILY WORKER will always be a reader, but we also know that it has been the experience of many labor papers that subscribers are often very delinquent in the matter of making renewals. THE DAILY WORKER sends to all subscribers notification of their expiring subscriptions ten days in advance of the expiration date. If every subscriber would make it a point to renew his subscription promptly on receipt of his notice, either direct to THE DAILY WORKER office or thru the local agent, a great deal of money would be saved and the efficiency of THE DAILY WORKER.

A source of considerable extra work and expense are the short term subscriptions. THE DAILY WORKER accepts subscriptions for three month periods because of the fact that workers cannot always advance the money necessary for the full year's sub. We are forced to charge a greatly higher rate for these short time subs, but still we would save money if every subscriber would take out yearly subs. The subscription rates of THE DAILY WORKER are extremely low for the yearly sub. It is money saved, both to the subscriber and to the paper. Make it a point to lay away $6.00 and keep it until your sub comes due. It will pay you and it will help THE DAILY WORKER.

* * * *

DAILY WORKER Agents, Attention!

THE matter of maintaining the current circulation in your locality is fully as much a part of your duty as is soliciting for new subscribers. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred when an old subscriber allows his sub to expire it is not at all because he doesn't want the paper any more, but because he has forgotten or neglected to renew. Or perhaps it is because he hasn't the money available. In any event it is one of your most important functions to see to it that every subscription in your district is renewed or find out the reason why.

Comrade Gus Schulenberg, City agent for Chicago, has worked out a good system for the renewals. When he receives the lists of the Chicago subscriptions which are soon to expire, he writes the names and addresses on a special blank and distributes these among the branch agents and other active comrades. Every blank must be returned to him with the money for the renewal or a good reason why the renewal was not secured. And there are no good reasons for such an occurrence. Other city agents are encouraged to adopt a similar method. Branch agents in cities where there is no city agent should do likewise. Write to THE DAILY WORKER for samples of the form Comrade Schulenberg uses.

* * * *

Bundle Orders Again.

SINCE we wrote in The Power Column two weeks ago about the value of bundle orders in advertising THE DAILY WORKER, there has been a substantial increase in the number of such orders and the number of papers taken in this way. Still we know there are many DAILY WORKER readers and agents who could very easily help to advertise THE DAILY WORKER by means of regular daily or weekly bundle orders who are not doing so. We want to stress again the tremendous advertising value which these bundle orders have. By means of them thousands of workers who have never heard of THE DAILY WORKER can receive their first introduction to our paper. Out of those who buy a few single numbers we know we will secure a substantial proportion of subscribers.

There is not a single reader of THE DAILY WORKER who could not afford to order and pay for a regular bundle, if not a daily bundle, at least one once a week. Many readers could make arrangements with neighborhood stores and newsstands to take a daily bundle. DAILY WORKER agents will find that there is no better way of building up the circulation in their district than by means of the sale of papers by this method.

DAILY WORKER boosters are urged to make arrangements to receive daily or weekly bundles at once. Send in your order now or write to THE DAILY WORKER for particulars, information and suggestions.

The Three Internationals

Tho in existence only half a decade, the Communist International has already stamped an indelible imprint on the course of the historical development of society—the course of the class conflicts.

The First International was the International of education. The First International laid the theoretical foundation and, under the leadership of Karl Marx, developed the philosophy of action for the subsequent international movements of the working class of the world.

The Second International was the International of organization. The Second International gave rise to the highly organized political and economic associations of national working class movements. This International marked the development of the working class movements from the dominantly propagandistic, educational stage, to the positively, strong organizational stage. During this period education was being translated into organization and action, but in the main the action were circumscribed by the very limits of organizational perfection attained by the Second International—principally the confines of the national boundaries. The Second International succeeded in developing powerful national parties of the workers, parties capable of and sometimes engaged in mighty class actions within their respective countries. But this association did not attain the stage of firm international organization of the workers.

The Third (Communist) International was the first attempt at decisive international revolutionary action of the world's oppressed. The Third International is the International of action. The Third International grew out of the imperiast world war—during a period when the world was in the midst of the most violent action. In the Third International we have crystallized the education of scientific Marxism, the organization of the working class beyond the national lines and along the lines of internationalism, and the international revolutionary action of the working class.

On this Wednesday, March 5, 1924, the Fifth Anniversary of the Communist International, voices of aspiring workers heard in all lands are proclaiming:

"Hail the Communist International! Hail the World Social Revolution! Hail the victory of the Workers and Farmers!"

Another White Hope

The chaos prevailing in the ranks of the Republican and Democratic parties is far beyond the comprehension of the "regular" editorial observers. Perhaps at no time before in the history of our country have the official stage managers of our capitalist political dramas been in such a nervous state of mind. They are running about from coast to coast, looking for someone who might be sold to the people as "pure of heart".

The Teapot scandal has raised particular havoc with the presidential timber of the Democratic party. For the Republicans there has never been any serious question as to the nomination of Coolidge. The Democrats, however, are up against it, since McAdoo has been put out of business.

One of the dark horses about to be trotted out in the Democratic stable is Mr. John W. Davis. As far as we are concerned we would not put a cent on his nose in the coming presidential race. Apparently this gentleman is black enough for the owners of the Democratic party to make him a worthwhile dark horse.

At this time when the country is somewhat agitated, to say the least, over the brazen manner in which the big interests have been gobbling up our national resources, it would be most fitting to drop a few remarks about the qualifications of this new Messiah from the Guggenheim Barony of West Virginia. There could be chosen no better president to serve big interests than this Mr. Davis. Coolidge himself would have a hard time keeping up with the services that Mr. Davis could render to Wall Street. This Democratic white hope has been employed as counsel for the big business interests for many years. Among his most esteemed clients have been J. P. Morgan & Co., the Consolidation Coal Co., the Associated Press, and the big rubber interests of the country.

Applying the yard stick used by the Teapot politicians, we would say that Davis is eminently qualified to serve as president for the employing class. But we would like to draw the attention of the workers and farmers to the tragic condition in which the donkey Democrats find themselves today when they must chose as their standard bearer either the counsel of Doheny or the counsel of Morgan. This incident once and for all disposes of the false claim of the Democratic party that it is not a party of the big interests.

Join the Workers Party.

A Year of Dividends

Talk of wage-decreases is again in the air. The employers and their expensive economists are preparing the country for a new wage cutting campaign. That this drive has already assumed considerable momentum is evident from the findings of official government surveys which indicate very clearly that the wage tendency in the past few months has been downward.

Since one of the arguments that the bosses will employ for their wage-slashing plan will be poverty, an examination of the conditions of the capitalists in the last year will be most appropriate.

According to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York the net profits in a great number of the country's important industries were bigger in 1923 than in any other year since the war. The annual reports of manufacturing, merchandising, railroad, and public utility corporations bear out the findings of the Government investigators.

Furthermore, an eminent financial student has also pointed out that in 1923 at least 445 concerns either declared dividends for the first time, resumed the payment of dividends, increased the amount of dividends paid, or paid out extra stock or cash allowances.

Not a single month passed without some corporation taking action of this kind towards dividend payment. The average number of companies acting in this direction every month was 37. In December there were 79 such cases. The United States Steel Corporation was a notable example of this mellon-cutting mania.

These facts show that the cry of poverty about to be raised by the employing class is a plain falsehood. More than that. These facts establish that the new attempt to slash wages to the bone will be launched only to guarantee the continuation of these giant profits.

It is an iron law under capitalism that the fabulous dividends of the bosses invariably translate themselves into low wages and misery for the workers.

The Hungarian Receivership

Step by step American capitalists are extending their sway over the destinies of the war-vanquished and less developed countries.

The latest prize to fall into the lap of our financial overlords is Hungary. The Magyar country, bled to death by the reactionary Horthy dynasty, has accepted the program of the League of Nations for its reconstruction—a financial receivership.

W. P. G. Harding who, as director of the Federal Reserve Board, imposed such high interest rates and served the big interests so shamefacedly that not even Coolidge dared recommend him for re-appointment, has been appointed the Commissioner General. It is significant to note that it was American capital as represented by the Hoover Relief Administration that engineered the establishment of the bloodthirsty Horthy regime and now it is again American capital which is running to the rescue of the same black bands of reaction. As a matter of fact, the Hungarian royal clique expressly declared its preference for an American receiver on the ground, among other reasons, that it could influence American capitalists most easily.

Without doubt the coronation of Mr. Harding will be followed by the floating of a huge loan in America to give a new breath of life to the present tyrants crushing the Hungarian working masses. Already, there is talking of a $50,000,000 loan of which at least $20,000,000 is to be floated in the United States. The conditions for such a loan would be the same as those given Austria when it was declared bankrupt. Austria is today a coolie colony of the international financiers amongst whom the American banking magnates reign with undisputed supremacy.

This Hungarian receivership marks another positive advance in the development of a European policy for our ruling class. Again, the "reconstruction" of Europe along the lines most beneficial to the interests of our growing imperialist clique is in the cynosure of politics and business.

Soon Hungary's internal class conflicts will become the concern of the American bankers and manufacturers more urgently than ever before. Bonds speak louder than abstract ideals and such hackneyed formulas as "self-determination" with our capitalists. And what concerns our bankers and industrialists concerns our government. What concerns our government unavoidably involves the fate and welfare of the farming and working masses of our country. Bonds must be protected against striking Hungarian workers. American workingmen and farmers will be sent to the plains of Hungary to defend these bonds bringing huge interest to our exploiters.

The Hungarian receivership will sow the seeds of new imperialist wars. It will be the toiling masses of the country that will pay in blood, with their lives, for the imperialist ventures of our capitalists.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a pleasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. The Communist company is summoned.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

And Martuinov, half dozing, thought of how many of the workmen members of the Party could do more responsible Party work, and deal with it with more Communistic tact, than certain intellectuals, but that the mechanism of the Party was so arranged as to push forward those who knew how to speak eloquently, preside at meetings and manage them. And he compared Andreev and his disjointed but sensible words with the crackling speeches of that responsible Communist, the director of the leather factory, who was so self-confident and at the same time so ignorant, did not understand the class struggle or the fundamental principles of the Party, but was able to hide his lack of knowledge under sounding phrases. And yet, on account of his authoritative baritone voice, his ability in managing a stormy meeting, and his skill in getting the right to speak out of his turn, was elected everywhere and considered very clever and capable.

Suddenly Martuinov's sleepy thoughts were broken into by a loud noise in the passage.

"There's some one there," Martuinov heard Andreev's anxious voice, "Comrade Martuinov, do you hear?"

"It's probably the orderly," murmured Martuinov, ready to slip once more into his light sleep.

"No, no. There's something wrong," cried Andreev, cocking the trigger of his gun.

Martuinov jumped up and saw a crowd of people pouring thru the doors. Angry faces, dishevelled beards, hatchets and guns in their hands.

"Bandits," flashed into his mind. Probably killed the sentry . . . and now us . . ."

But he had not carried his thoughts to its end when the heavy dull sound of a shot reverberated in the room. Smoke filled the room and the fat, red-haired peasant, the first to run into the guard-room, sank heavily on the ground, dropping an elegant cavalry carbine.

"Shoot, Comrade Martuinov. . . . What are you waiting for?" sounded a desperate cry, and, profiting by the confusion of the crowd, Andreev fired a second time.

"Son of a . . . Filth . . . Beat them . . . Beat . . "

"I must shoot," flashed into his mind. "It's the end all the same. . . . Shoot," and, with trembling fingers he released the safety-catch. But he had not time to shoot. A heavy blow on the back of the head brought him to the floor. He fell, and, already not knowing what it was, heard Andreev's third shot, a heavy, resounding noise, covered by the howling and curses of the crowd.

A sharp, intolerable wringing pain seized his breast and throat. He lost consciousness, and did not feel the third blow of the bandit's pike, which smashed his skull in. Emptiness, interwoven with the last perceptions of departing life, blotted out his consciousness. . . .

CHAPTER X.

FOR three days Robeiko had not left the house. He had caught cold, probably in a draught, during the house-to-house search. Towards evening, he grew stronger, but in the night had been very bad again. In the morning he tried to get up, but his head swam, and, swearing enernetically, he lay down again, and, without strength to rise, kept to his bed in the big room with green velvet curtains which had formerly been the study of Mrs. Senator.

He wanted to eat but there was no one to go to the refectory to fetch his dinner. His hosts were afraid not to give him boiling water; they had agreed to provide two samovars daily. So he drank hot tea and nibbled stale rye bread.

What Do You Think of Our First Story?

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have published many installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its character, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

He had plenty of bread. A whole loaf was standing on the table. Robeiko took all the crust from it with his fingers and crumbled it up on the table. He was very wretched. He did not blame the comrades for forgetting him; he knew that just now they were too busy to think of him, but he was wretched all the same. It grew dark but he did not light the lamp for he had no wish to read. Memories of his youth floated up, of past work. . . . For some reason or other, he kept remembering the metal works in the far South, in the Ekaterinoslav Government, where he had spent his youth . . . the Spring of 1905, gathering in the young birch wood, under the cool canopy of the starry night, and that speech of his, his first, burning, unskillful speech. He remembered some young girl, the brown school dress she wore, her gestures and smiles. . . . But he could not remember her name . . . Elena was it? . . . Or Olga? . . .

From time to time came fits of coughing, when his eyes swam and ideas and images fled away. Coughing tired him, and he lay with closed eyes, and then, imperceptibly, began to think again.

Today it was particularly quiet in the flat. Madam Senator was not making a noise with her saucepans in the kitchen, and the careful, squeaking steps of Raphael Antonovitch were not heard in the corridor. . . . But all the time, from behind the closed doors, whispers came to Robeiko's hearing, some sort of muttered conversation, and he heard them without understanding them. Suddenly there was a knock at the door and a timorous woman's voice asked:

"Comrade Robeiko, can I come in?"

"Come in," he replied, and saw in the doorway the figure of a woman. It was Lisa Gratcheva.

"You are coughing so badly, Comrade Robeiko, I could hear it in my room. I live next door to you, on the other side of the wall. I have brought you some milk . . . just a cupful. Perhaps I can do something to help you?"

Robeiko looked at the line of light that fell thru the half-open door from the passage. Presently this girl would go away, and it would be dark in the room and he would be alone again. From these thoughts, Robeiko learnt how lonely he was.... Probably he would die soon: of course he did not want anything; milk would not do him any good, but he did not want to be alone again.

"Thank you for thinking of it," he said kindly. "Turn on the electric light, and let's drink tea."

She turned the switch and exclaimed. His pillow-slip was covered with the blood that had come from his throat during the coughing. He had not noticed it himself and only now perceived it. . . .

"God save us," she said, "you are probably ill . . . I'll change the pillow-slip for you. These two days no one has been near you," she said, rummaging in his trunk. "I wanted to come several times, but I was afraid."

He smiled.

"Am I so terrifying?"

"No. You are not terrifying now, but, when you are in your coat . . . then you do look so proud and unapproachable."

Her care was pleasant, and he smiled kindly and shyly. And she saw his shy smile, and his delicate thin neck with its shrivelled muscles, and was sorry for him and was not afraid of him at all, because she saw him helpless, ill, deprived of his power and strength.

"Where do you work?" he asked.

"I am a Red Army teacher. But for three days I have not been working. Our battalion has gone off to the monastery to get wood."

"It's gone already?" Robeiko interrupted eagerly. . . . "Karaulov was against it. . . . That means that we shall have the wood ready in time." Robeiko actually sat up in bed, and lifted his head from the pillow. She began telling him all that she had heard from the talk of the Communists at the Saturdaying of how the wood-getting was progressing. And she felt, from his animation, how he valued and was delighted at the news.

Robeiko seemed to her even cleverer than Martuinov, whom she thought very clever, because she could understand nothing of his explanations. She saw his simple, fearless waiting for death, and she felt that if she did not believe in the immortality of the soul she could not wait for death as calmly as he. . . .

Late in the evening, Lisa went off to her room. When she said goodbye, Robeiko asked her to visit him often.

She was waked by the noise of boots and loud talk, sounding in the corridor. There was deep blue darkness out of doors and in the room.

Lisa became anxious at once. On account of the heavy door, she could not make out words, but heard rough voices and the trampling of many feet. She put her boots on with trembling hands. She went to the door and opened it quietly, a little way. . . . She saw in the passage and in the kitchen peasants of some kind in soldiers' great coats, and short fur coats. Some of them had guns in their hands, others, axes and pikes. Among these weather-beaten rough faces, dirty and unshaved, her eyes instantly perceived three persons whom she knew.

Inspiring Revolutionary Lesson In "A Week," Our Reader finds

To the Editor of the DAILY WORKER: I was impatienly awaiting the appearance of that wonderful novel written by the famous Russian writer Libedinsky, called "A Week".

Being more or less acquainted with the Russian literature and knowing the psycho-analytical power of the Russian writers I expected to find the key to the greatest phenomenon of our time—the Russian revolution.

Russia, the most autocratic country on the face of the globe, with its millions kept in ignorance and subjection, who could ever imagine that these Russian workers and peasants would undertake this tremendous task and, furthermore, bring it to success. Many times I was putting this question to myself and could not find an answer. But now, after reading a few installments of "A Week," I realizd the great power which was hidden in the hearts of the Russian masses and made itself felt in the time of the revolution.

Martuinov the Aristocrat.

Let us take, for instance, Martuinov. Raised in an aristocratic environment, all his associations and connections were with the class which received one blow after another from the revolution. A man whose sweetheart, whom he loved with such ardor, belonged to that class. Yet, regardless of all that, he served the cause of the revolution honestly and faithfully. He gave up all his previous friends, his parents, his sweetheart. But in spite of the high idealism and self sacrifice of the Martuinovs the Russian revolution could not be brought to a success by them. In my estimation two different elements were necessary for success.

After all the Martuinovs are products of the old world. They have been educated in the old schools and have been psychologically connected with the old order and its institutions. True, they have accepted the dogmas and teachings of communism, but to them, the revolution was an ideal, a beautiful dream, not a reality, and when the revolution broke out they didn't have the courage to tear down and destroy the old social order with its institutions.

Backbone of Revolution.

The real backbone of the revolution were the Klimins and Stalmakhovs. These Klimins had nothing in common with the old world. They left no traditions behind them. The only thing they did have at the outbreak of the revolution was hatred in their hearts for the hundreds of years of suffering and misery and to the Klimins and Stalmakhovs the revolution was not a beautiful dream, a wonderful ideal, but a part of their flesh and blood.

Klimin expressed his conception of communism in the following words: "Communism, that's me." The Klimins had no respect or pity for the bourgeosie, and they dealt with them severely when the revolution was menaced by them.

I believe that each and every communist in America should read this wonderful book.

Respect for Bourgeosie.

We still have too much respect for the titled man, no matter whether he is active in the movement or not. We are also having too much respect for the present institutions and we cannot overturn the present social system unless we, the workers, not only think that this world we live in is rotten and corrupt, but also feel that all the present institutions are built to enslave the working masses and we must destroy them and replace them with new ones, built and directed by the working class.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

Joseph Tumulty, one of Woodrow Wilson's historians, warns the Democratic Party of a dark horse. The jackass party fears a surprise candidate. Perhaps William J. Bryan is the animal Tumulty had in mind. He is kicking up his heels in Alabama. But the party owes its nick name to Bryan. He could not be mistaken for the nobler quadruped. Tumulty was one of Wilson's most trusted admirers but it is rather significant that he breaks bread with George Brennan, head of the Tammany chieftains of Illinois, whose scalping knives are already whetted for bringing forth the gore of William Gibbs McAdoo, the Crown Prince of the late administration.

• • • •

Will rumors of graft never stop? When the "people" thought they were going to have a breathing spell, another bomb burst, scattering its shot among the members of Congress. This looks like a counter barrage from the beleaguered members of the cabinet. Col. Charles R. Forbes promises to become a tartar and smear everybody in sight with graft unless he is allowed to get away with it. Harry Daugherty makes a similar threat. Let the boys talk. That is our prayer.

• • • •

A report comes from Rome via London that the Vatican has assured the counter revolutionary Russian emigres that another attempt to tear Russia to pieces by a civil war will have the backing of the Pope who will undertake to propagandize the United States against the Soviet government. This is not surprising even tho the Vatican has quite recently arranged to open diplomatic relations with Moscow. The spiritual power on the Tiber is the eternal foe of Communism, knowing quite well that once the intellectual forces of humanity are released from the bondage of economic slavery, the opium joints will have to close their doors. It is inconceivable that once the sword of fear which now hangs by a slender thread over the lives of the working class is released human beings would continue to swallow the hocus pocus which has enabled this intellectual cess pool on the Tiber to flourish.

• • • •

There is no doubt but the Vatican will be the willing ally of the dark forces of reaction who think they see in Lenin's death the psychological moment to resume their deadly thrusts at the hearts of the Russian workers and peasants. But the Vatican might well take warning and leave well enough alone. Whatever differences the masses may have with the guiding philosophy of the leaders of Soviet Russia they instinctively feel that the Workers' Republic is a barrier between them and a fate worse than death. They know that could the capitalist class conquer the one spot in the world where the workers are free to determine their own destiny, an era of persecution would be ushered in that would make previous reigns of terror seem pale in comparison. Knowing this it is a delicate undertaking for the Vatican to flirt with the pent-up wrath of the long suffering workers. Vengeance dark and terrible will be its portion should it in a moment of fansied security join in another effort to bathe Russia in a sea of blood and restore the filthy Romanoffs to the throne.

Had Calvin Coolidge lived in the days of which Walter Scott wrote, the days when knights were bold and every warrior with a reputation for prowess bore a nom-de-plume it is likely he would appear in the novelist's pages as the Knight of the Mournful Phiz. But silence was never so golden as it is today, and yet it has its limits. Now people are wondering who is the "principal" who was satisfied with the way things were going and who was pleased to learn there would be no resignations. Could it be "Cautious Cal" himself? "Tut tut!" shout his friends. Calvin is as clean as a hound's tooth as pure as the Alaska snow when it is not tarnished with coal in the process of being carted away by some friend of the administration.

• • • •

Calvin's friends cannot sleep these nights with the noise of Cal's silence. They hear the sounds of it everywhere they go. The "people" pick up their papers every morning with thumping hearts hoping against hope that their leader will say something. "Give us a sign, Calvin," they murmur but he speaketh not. Worthy senators deplore the present orgy of scandal spreading in the senate. "It is creating distrust in our form of government" they wail. They introduce resolutions declaring no cause for hysteria exists. Woodrow Wilson once tried to offset a wave of economic depression by branding the durn thing as a "psychological delusion." But the "people" were not satisfied with the explanation and they picked Harding. He brought them back to normalcy. Dying he left them Coolidge. The "people" don't know the devil where he is. He simply will not talk.

• • • •

If silence becomes epidemic in the White House we may soon see monuments running for office. How exciting a race between the Statute of Liberty and the monument to the Unknown soldier would be for instance? What could they say to each other? They could easily say as much as Calvin Coolidge.

Thugs Rented To Garment Bosses By Smiley Company During Strike; Daily Worker Gives Dick's Letter

The DAILY WORKER prints below a letter from the Smiley National Secret Service offering the services of its "guards", as these thugs are more politely known, to boss dressmakers whose employes are on strike.

At the Smiley company's offices admission was made that its men are operating in the strike. The facts are that scores of thugs from several agencies are operating, hand in hand with the special police from the office of Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney.

Point Girls to Police.

These thugs intimidate and sometimes assault girl strikers and if the pickets refuse to be cowed the thugs point them out to the police for arrest.

Officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union have evidence showing that the private dicks are also attempting to operate as "sheiks", a police name in this case for white slavers,—endeavoring to take advantage of the poverty of the former sweatshop workers. The letter follows:

Smiley's National Secret Service
189 West Madison Street, Chicago
February 29, 1924.

GENTLEMEN: We are advised of the unfortunate situation which causes a difference of opinion between yourselves and your employes.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that we are better equipped than anyone in Chicago to furnish you with a service which you cannot obtain thru the average Agency. We give you a real service, furnish you with guards to protect employes who desire to work to assist them in going to and from their homes, and a general service FAR SUPERIOR to anything you have ever experienced in the past.

CALL US ON THE TELEPHONE. Allow us to map out work to protect your place of business and your employes. The cost is small when compared with results.

Do not experiment with inexperienced and unreliable Agencies. There is no service equal to ours.

Yours very truly,
SMILEY'S NATIONAL SECRET SERVICE.

Many Spy Agencies.

In publishing this form letter of the Smiley company the DAILY WORKER point out that this is only one of the many agencies for industrial espionage that fasten themselves like so many leeches on the industrial body during strikes and during times of so-called industrial peace.

The close co-operation between the private detective agencies and the Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice, under William J. Burns, is facing expose in the Wheeler investigation. What is needed in Chicago is an official probe into the co-operation between the strike-breaking activities of Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney, and private strike-breaking agencies.

Union Wins In 30 Shops; Pickets Continue Despite Cops and Thugs

Five more bosses caved in before the militant front of the striking garment workers of Chicago yesterday and agreed to all the conditions the International Ladies' Garment Workers originally asked.

More than 100 workers are involved in the settlement. The total number of dressmakers who have won all their demands is now above the 500 mark and the bosses who have settled with the union number 30.

Hundreds More Strikers.

Hundreds more strikers came out in Evanston yesterday and the pickets in the Loop, Milwaukee avenue and west side districts of Chicago added new strike recruits in the early morning, at noon at quitting time in the afternoon and they put their cause before the men and women who had passively permitted themselves to be used as strikebreakers.

Ranks of pickets were thinned by arrests, but the devoted work kept on, for the strikers were fighting for the elimination of the sweatshop conditions in which they had spent years of misery and were not to be deterred by the thought of a short period in jail.

Girls' Gallant Picketing.

Nearly a score of arrests were made by blue coats, most of the prisoners being girls and women. The gentler sex is outdoing the men on the picket line, by the arrest record at least.

Market street was a hurly burly of police all day yesterday. Mounted police rode up and down on their brown chargers, squads of regular harness bulls marched up and down, filling the sidewalk from wall to curb, and now and then clanging patrol wagons rushed up and down the street lane.

The squads of foot cops under their sergeants would bravely parade up to a little girl picket and capture her as the hour for opening or closing the shops she was picketing approached—the critical hours when the work of the picketing is done. But as the squad marched away with its prey another picketer took the place of the one who was arrested.

Injunction Not Used.

None of the prisoners was taken on an injunction charge, the police and State's Attorney Crowe's men fearing to attempt to use a weapon that might break in their hand when its legality is tested.

Jury trials demanded by all the strikers who were arraigned yesterday morning and all are free, until their time in court appears, on $400 bail. Little doubt is felt by striker's attorneys that all will be acquitted when they face 12 citizens in spite of all the hostility of the State's Attorney who regards strikers as his special prey.

The thing that impressed all visitors to the strike zone yesterday, as on other days, is the lack of any disorder on the part of the pickets. Their work has been done by peaceful persuasion. It becomes more and more evident that the only purpose of the arrests is to break the strike, and

CROWE COULD USE HIS STRIKE BREAKING POLICE TO PROBE THIS CASE

Thrown from a taxi in front of her home here today, Marie Koch, 17, was unable to give a coherent account of her captors or the events which occurred since she disappeared on Sunday.

Dazed and trembling, she told a story of two men who had hustled her into a taxi as she was on her way to church. She said she had been kept in a "tumbledown house" and cared for by a "woman dressed entirely in white."

Both of her eyes were discolored and she had been severely beaten. Neighbors saw two men push her from a cab and speed away early this morning. Police will question her further when she recovers.

BIG MINNESOTA FARMER-LABOR MEET MARCH 14

May 30 Convention Will Be Issue

(By The Federated Press)

MINNEAPOLIS, March 5.—Minnesota is the springboard this month for national third party hopes. The state Farmer-Labor party convention, is called by Chairman F. A. Pike to meet March 14 in St. Cloud, 75 miles northwest of St. Paul. Both the place of meeting and the allotment of delegates have been criticized by St. Paul and Minneapolis party members who believe that farmers and workers will be inconvenienced.

The Nonpartisan league and the Working People's Nonpartisan Political league, the principal constituent elements of the Farmer-Labor party, are to hold preliminary state conventions in Minneapolis March 13.

The national aspect will be dealt with first in a still earlier gathering in St. Paul March 10 and 11. This is to be in effect a reconvened session of the November, 1923, meeting at which the call for a national Farmer-Labor convention to be held May 30 was sent out. All the signatories to the request for that call are reinvited and also the various other state and national third party organizations.

Opinion seems to be going three ways prior to this meeting. Many favor the fixed date of May 30 and St. Paul as the place for the national presidential convention. Others talk of joining with the Cleveland meeting July 4 of the Conference for Progressive Political Action. A third element wants the convention in June between the Republican and Democratic meets.

No Sirree! Calvin Won't Stand for Postal Wage Raise

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 5.—President Coolidge has come out against the raise in pay demanded by the postoffice employes of the country. His Mellons and Daughertys appear to have persuaded him, for he says that this proposed expenditure of $125,000,000 on adjustment of postal wages to the cost of living would have a "disturbing effect on the country" if enacted.

"Disturbing effect," is translated into "bad example to labor in all other industries, just when we are trying to smash the general wage level."

TREASURY-OFFICIALS WORKING OVERTIME PREPARING ALIBIS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Treasury officials today were preparing figures to answer criticism in Congress of the refunds of $226,000,000 in taxes since 1917. The treasury's answer will be that in that period more than $1,000,000,000 has been added to the returns of individuals and corporations on income and other taxes.

In 1923, the internal revenue bureau refunded more than $123,000,000, in sums ranging from $1,000 to more than $9,000,000. But in the same year, it was pointed out today by bureau officials, more than $600,000,000 was added to the taxes of wealthy individuals and business concerns. A large percentage of this $600,000,000 has been collected, it was stated, so that the treasury shows a net gain.

Nevertheless, the House appropriations' committee will go ahead with an investigation into the cause of a $105,000,000 deficit caused by tax refunds.

ICE IN PLATTE IS TOUGHER JOB THAN WARSHIPS

Bombing Airplanes in Battle with Jams

OMAHA, Neb., March 5.—Two army Martin bombing airplanes which last summer destroyed the battleships Virginia and New Jersey in bombing tests had a harder task with a huge ice jam in the Platte river near North Bend, Neb., the pilots reported today.

The planes, piloted by Lieutenants Whitley and Finley, dropped twenty-five bombs, each weighing 300 pounds on the jam before the huge mass of ice was dislodged.

Five miles further down the river the jam re-formed and the aviators had their work to do over again.

Enough dynamite was used on the jams to blow up a fleet of warships, the officers said.

The flood situation is expected to greatly improve today. The Union Pacific main line was washed out in twelve different places and it will be several days before normal rail service is restored.

SENATOR SAYS PRESIDENT IS "THE PRINCIPAL" WHO WAS "SEEN" BY OIL CROWD

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 5.—"The Principal" referred to in a telegram sent E. B. McLean, Editor of the Washington Post, at Palm Beach by one of his agents is President Coolidge, in the opinion of Senator Heflin, Alabama. Heflin, in a speech this afternoon, told the Senate he thought the telegram referred to the president.

Heflin demanded that the oil investigating committee examine Ira Bennett, editor of the Washington Post, writer of the telegram, as to the identity of "The Principal."

"I think the statement in the telegram meant that the president had said he would not permit Denby to resign.

"I would like the committee to ask Bennett to explain in detail—to explain exactly—what he meant when he said 'The Principal' had been seen.

"I want to suggest a day in advance that the committee tomorrow go very thoroly and minutely into the details of this telegram."

Senator Walsh had previously announced that Bennett probably would be questioned tomorrow about the telegram.

May Recall Burns.

Walsh said this afternoon he believed the identity of "the principal" could be definitely established. He said Ira Bennett, editor of the Washington Post, who sent the telegram to McLean, probably would be questioned tomorrow.

Palmer and Burns also may be recalled, Walsh added. He said no new subpoenaes had been issued as a result of the telegrams examined today.

Bennett to Be Recalled.

Ira E. Bennett, editorial writer of the local McLean newspaper and supposed author of the "principal" message, will be called to testify tomorrow or Friday. He is already under subpoena.

Members of the committee wish to ask him to identify "the principal," they wish to ascertain whom he quoted with saying there would be "no rocking of the boat and no resignations" and with expecting "reaction from unwarranted political attacks," as the message stated.

Bennett could not have meant Attorney General Daugherty, committee members believe, because Daugherty was out of town on Jan. 29, when the message was sent.

• • • •

THE senate oil committee today hit the trail of a $10,000 check which it believes may show a reason for the pointed interest displayed by Edward B. McLean regarding developments in the oil industry.

John Major, self-described "confidential agent" of the Washington publisher, was recalled to the stand to explain a hypothetical question he put to McLean in one of the Palm Beach telegrams about the check.

Senator Thomas J. Walsh, chief prosecutor, is firm in the opinion that this $10,000 slip of paper relates to the inquiry because it was referred to in a telegram in which department of justice code was used.

In the message Major asked McLean if banks kept a record of the notations on checks—for instance a notation that the check was "for purchase of a house."

Call More McLean Employes.

Other McLean Employes and those mentioned in the messages also were called to see if they could shed any light on what was the real notation on the hypothetical check.

Simultaneously Walsh is expected to reveal further details of efforts to discredit his work in unearthing the oil scandal. He may make a speech on the floor, mentioning names

IT'S COMING! THE TEAPOT SPECIAL!

"THE TEAPOT SPECIAL," to be issued by the DAILY WORKER, Monday, March 17th, will be the biggest exposure yet made of the Government, not only in the present oil scandal but in the whole history of graft and corruption in American politics.

The Teapot Special will be a real manual of the revelations disclosed by the investigation to date. If it is anything at all about the Teapot Dome steal, you will be sure to find it in our "Teapot Special."

Besides the cartoons and sketches by Fred Ellis and Robert Minor some of the other features will be:

1. A chronological summary of the events in the Teapot investigation.
2. The Leading Figures involved in the gigantic oil steal.
3. The Political Significance of the Oil Scandal.
4. Some Shocking Scandals in American History.
5. Sidelights on Oil Scandals of the past.
6. The other investigations of graft and corruption now confronting Congress.
7. Who Are the Oil Prosecutors?
8. The Courts and the Teapot Holdup.

This Teapot Special will be an arsenal of the most authoritative, up-to-date facts about the United States Government and its relations with the capitalists. We don't plan to treat any official with silk gloves, no matter how high up he is in the Government or in the confidence of the bankers and manufacturers.

"The Teapot Special" will be a most powerful blow struck against the whole capitalist clique ruling and ruining the country. The Teapot Special will be a paper for the working an farming masses. The Teapot Special will rip the mask o "service and public interest" behind which the capitalist democratic and republican parties hide. The Teapot Special will go all the way down the line for the workers and farmers.

Rush your orders for "The Teapot Special." The bundle rate is two cents per copy; $1 for 50; $2 per 100. Address all orders to THE DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Illinois.

COOLIDGE KILLS FILIPINO PLEA FOR FREEDOM

Defends Ivory Soap General Wood

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 5th.—The Coolidge cabinet may be corrupt but it still recognizes its duty to civilization. It may be smeared with oil but it still stands true to the ideals of Ivory Soap.

Calvin Coolidge, the White House sphynx, today broke his long silence when he declared in a letter to Manuel Roxas, chairman of the Philippine Independence mission here, that the United States government could not grant independence to the Philippines at this time.

Calvin Coolidge, the defender of Harry M. Daugherty and the Teapot Dome crooks expressed his confidence in the administration of General Leonard Wood, one time presidential white hope of Colonel Proctor of Ivory Soap fame. Wood's son is about to be quizzed to explain how he came into possession of nearly one million dollars thru Wall Street plunges from his father's headquarters in Manila.

Defenders of Civilization.

The United States government—or the money barons of Wall Street speaking thru "Silent Cal"—declare that it would not be performing its full duty to civilization were to grant the demands of the Philippines for freedom.

The greater part of Coolidge's letter was a defense of General Wood now under fire for gross incompetence and disregard of the interests of the Filipinos in the conduct of his office. It is forecasted here that the Philippine question added to the Teapot scandal may light a fire under the political posterior of Calvin Coolidge that will smoke him out of his silence if not out of the White House.

The president's letter is in part as follows:

Not Enough Dougheenies.

After describing the present situation of the Philippines and what the United States has done for the islands, President Coolidge declared:

"A fair appraisal of all these considerations and of others which suggest themselves without requiring enumeration, will, I am sure, justify the frank statement that the government of the United States would not feel that it has performed its full duty by the Filipino people or discharged all of its obligations to civilization, if it should yield at this time to your aspiration for national independence.

"The government of the United States has full confidence in the ability, good intentions and fairness and sincerity of the present governor general. It is convinced that he has intended to act and has acted within the scope of his proper and constitutional authority. Thus convinced, it is determined to sustain him and its purpose will be to encourage the broadest and most intelligent co-operation of the Filipino people in this policy.

Don't Appreciate Word.

"Looking at the whole situation fairly and impartially one cannot but feel that if the Filipino people cannot co-operate in the support and encouragement of as good an administration as has been afforded under Governor General Wood, their failure will be rather a testimony of unpreparedness for the full obligation of citizenship, than an evidence of patriotic eagerness to advance their country.

"I am convinced that Governor-General Wood has at no time been other than a hard working, painstaking and conscientious administrator. I have found no evidence that he had exceeded his proper authority or that he has acted with any other than the purpose of best serving the real interests of the Filipino people.

He is Hopeful.

"If the time comes when it is apparent that independence would be better for the people of the Philippines, from the point of view of both their domestic concern and their status in the world; and if when that time comes the Filipino people desire complete independence, it is not possible to doubt that the American government and people will gladly accord it."

The president's letter, which was a long document, was in reply to resolutions adopted by the Senate and House of the Philippines demanding independence and protesting against the administration of Governor-General Wood.

Disposition of the Turkish Caliph's Harem Big Problem

GREVA, Macedonia, March 5.—The deposed caliph of Turkey, accompanied by two wives and two eunuchs, passed thru here today aboard the Orient express bound for Lausanne where it is reported he will reside. Future disposition of the remainder of the harem at Constantinople has not been determined.

Injunctions Can't Sew Clothes!

Injunctions Cannot Run Sewing Machines

"INJUNCTION KING" Denis E. Sullivan, judge by the grace of the open shoppers of Chicago, and the apathy of the working class, has celebrated his re-election by issuing an injunction against the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union which prohibits the strikers from maintaining picket lines, manned collectively or by individuals; speak to strikebreakers at work or on the way; call upon or talk to any member of the strikebreakers' family or to use any means whatever to induce strikebreakers to quit their jobs.

The injunction was issued on the mere request of the attorneys for the Dress Manufacturers' Association. Union attorneys were not allowed to open their mouths in opposition. When they attempted to remonstrate Judge Sullivan with an air of injured indignation, waved them away and ordered the injunction issued.

Judge Denis E. Sullivan is the most notorious injunction manufacturer in Chicago. He was notorious before the last judicial election. He is maintaining his record. Knowing his value to the employers the Chamber of Commerce, ably assisted by every capitalist daily paper in Chicago, the yellow Hearst sheets included, called on the voters to return him at the head of the list. Judge Sullivan's reelection was due to the lack of militancy in the campaign carried on against him by the labor movement of Chicago.

The DAILY WORKER regrets that the lack of vision of the officials of organized labor is responsible for the presence on the bench of Injunction Denis E. Sullivan. Had the labor movement instead of calling for the defeat of "enemies" and the rewarding of "friends" on the capitalist party tickets placed a labor ticket in the field and called on the entire wroking class of this city to rally behind it there would be no injunctions now to dog the heels of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, with the thuggery of Attorney Crowe's office having the sanction of a court's decree.

The DAILY WORKER calls this significant fact to the attention of the workers of Chicago at a moment when the lesson appears in its most striking form. But while sounding this warning it tells Judge Denis E. Sullivan that injunctions and the clubs of policemen cannot run sewing machines or manufacture dresses.

All the injunctions ever issued by courts run for the benefit of the master class by judicial lackeys never sewed a hem on a single garment. It takes workers to do that and the DAILY WORKER feels that there is enough red blood in the veins of the labor movement of this city to teach judges and their masters, the capitalists, that these methods will not deter the workers from carrying on their fight for the very reasonable demands they have made on the clothing manufacturers.

"Injunction" Denis E. Sullivan, State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, and your aids and abbetors, the DAILY WORKER will expose you as the tools of the employers. From the judge on the bench to the lowly creatures who prowl among the workers only to betray them for a price you are the enemies of labor and the workers are waking up to the fact that a breath of workingclass might can unmake you as the breath from the money bags of the capitalists has made you.

that the pretext of law enforcement is patently flimsy.

Bluecoats Save Thugs.

"Law and Order" revealed itself in all its hypocrisy and brutality yesterday afternoon in the slugging and arrest of Rose Trimtz, Freida Ashkamezy and Louise Huhm on W. Adams street.

The girls were on the picket line in front of the Francine Frock company's plant when four company gangsters rushed out at them with drawn straps flying. Mercilessly assailing the girls with their straps they shouted curses and threats.

Several big policemen stood by complacently while the unprovoked assault was going on and made no effort to interfere until,—a girl wrested the strap away from her assailant and began thrashing him to the accompaniment of his screams.

Then the law in all its majesty rolled into action. The police marched to the aid of the sluggers and arrested the girl—not the sluggers. They were taken to the S. Clark street station.

Labor Probers Will Begin Dissection of Bosses' Crowe Today

The special committee of 15 which John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, has appointed to investigate the strike breaking activities of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe in the present garment strike will meet in the Federation Building this afternoon at 2 o'clock to lay out plans for the investigation.

Fitzpatrick would not make public the names of the men he had just appointed until the meeting but the DAILY WORKER learned that Anton Johannsen, of the International Brotherhood of Carpenters; Oscar Nelson, of the Postal Clerk, and Frank Buchanan, of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, will sit on the committee.

Crowe's record is an open sore on the Chicago body politic and his reelection pamphlet boasts of the conviction of 42 unionists. The committee is expected to probe the reasons for his partisanship for the Weiss company during the present strike and for the wholesale arrests of girl pickets over the heads of the police.

Workers Party Negroes Organize Colored Strikers

By OLIVIA WHITEMAN.

Led by members of the Workers Party Negro garment strikers held an important meeting at 180 W. Washington street yesterday afternoon with Alma Jones, chairman.

Plans were laid for bringing the unorganized Negro garment workers into the union and the following three committees were chosen:

A press committee of three, consisting of F. O. Brandon, Willie Morris and Olivia Whiteman will visit all the Negro papers of Chicago and keep them supplied with the facts of the strike.

A committee of four has been appointed to look after the Negro employment agencies which are trying to recruit scabs on the South Side. The committee will organize a force of assistants.

A committee of 11 will speak before the Negro churches of Chicago, and in that way reach most of the unorganized Negro dressmakers almost immediately.

Plans for big mass meetings are being made and a special meeting for Negro strikers will be held tomorrow at 180 W. Washington street.

Crowe's Cops Can't Capture Criminals, Busy Nabbing Strikers

William Engelke was formally charged with the murder of both John Dougherty, alias Duffy, and his young bride Maybelle Exley Duffy by authorities here today.

After runnig down many clues to the crime which pointed to an organized "crime syndicate" police today made the first formal charge of murder in the death of the underworld pair.

Confronted with a third mysterious shooting both state and city officials prepared for an onslaught on the "crime syndicate" that has kept a wall of silence about the shooting of the Duffys.

John Callahan, proprietor of a "black and tan" resort, was found with a bullet in his lung. He refused to tell who shot him before he lapsed into unconsciousnes. He was picked up near his cafe by a taxi driver.

FERTILIZER IS FORD'S CURE FOR U. S. ILLS

His Cheap Manure Is New Panacea

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Henry Ford will emancipate the American farmer if he is given Muscle Shoals to develop as a nitrate and power project, Representative Bunkhead, Alabama, asserted in the House today when Ford's Shoals over was formally taken up.

In presenting a resolution providing for ten hours' debate, Representative Burton, Ohio, said the Ford offer was a "radical departure from the water power policy of the United States."

"Furthermore, I regard this offer as ridiculously inadequte," he said.

Bunkhead congratulated the house on having an opportunity to pass judgment on the bill after two years' delay.

Tells of Farms Abandoned.

"I heartily and unreservedly favor the unconditional acceptance of Henry Ford's offer," said Bunkhead.

Because of the high cost of fertilizer, he said, many farms have been abandoned.

"The people in California are using alfalfa hay at $40 a ton to spread over their orange groves."

A vigorous plea for acceptance of the Ford offer was made by Representative Almon, Alabama, in whose district Muscle Shoals is located.

Almon refuted the argument that the Muscle Shoals project was a sectional proposal.

"If the Ford offer is accepted," he said, "it will benefit every man, woman and child in every section of this country."

Almon said that representatives of the Alabama Power Company testified that Ford could make fertilizer at less than half the present price.

Ford's Foes Many.

Foes of Henry Ford in the house today planned to kill his Muscle Shoals offer with amendments.

Debate on the McKenzie bill providing acceptance of the Ford offer will end soon and open the way to the real fight—a battle of amendments.

Friends of the measure insist that it must go thru congress as written but opponents of the measure are planning to force adoption of the following amendments:

1. Reduce the Ford lease from 100 to 50 years.
2. Place the Muscle Shoals plant under the jurisdiction of the federal power commission.
3. Make it mandatory upon Ford to manufacture fertilizer for the farmers.

McKenzie Has Hopes.

Representative McKenzie, Illinois, sponsor for the Ford offer, believes that in the six hours of debate an explanation of the situation will result in staving off amendments.

Friends of the measure charge that virtually all of the power interests in this country are lined up against the Ford offer. If Ford gets the Muscle Shoals plant they say the private power companies fear he will demonstrate that power can be made at less than half the present price.

Glenn Young's Gat in Holster Again; Bodyguard of Five

DANVILLE, Ill., Mar. 5.—On the plea of S. Glenn Young, leader of the dry forces of Williamson County, that approximately 50 armed residents of the county are in Danville to "get" him, he has been allowed to go armed. He also has a body-guard of five armed men.

Trials of scores of persons from Williamson County who pleaded not guilty yesterday to charges of violating the liquor laws, will start on March 24, in the United States district court, according to present plans. Sixteen persons pleaded guilty when arraigned and fines were imposed ranging from $50 to $300.

Next week 81 more Williamson County cases will be arraigned.

Today the civil docket was given the right of way. The civil cases will occupy the court for the balance of the week, it was indicated.

Grand jury investigation of conditions in Williamson, Franklin and Crawford counties will be completed Thursday, according to Lawrence T. Allen, special federal prosecutor.

Altho the grand jury continues to mill out indictments no information as to the number will be given out until the jury adjourns.

Trouble arose today when witnesses summoned by Young were denied the usual witness fees. The district attorney informed them that Young had no right to summon witnesses and that if they spent three days waiting to go before the grand jury it was their own loss.

Radio Censors Fear Voliva Is Putting Over the Rough Stuff

Zion City, where the moral tone is so high that smoking, peek-a-boo waists, clinging gowns and flirting are banned, is being investigated by the federal radio inspector's office. Charges have been made that Overseer Glenn Voliva's broadcasted sermons are "shocking."

The Sunday afternoon sermons of Voliva, "the snow white," are brim with strong language and "shocking allusions," protests to Inspector Beane stated. Beane was urged to revoke Zion City's broadcasting license.

Negro Unionists Move to Halt Recruiting of Scabs

Strike activity by Negro girls featured the struggle of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union for better conditions in the garment industry yesterday.

At the stirring meeting of Negro girl strikers at 180 W. Washington St., organized by Workers Party Negroes, who are taking part in the strike, plans were laid to checkmate the bosses who are flooding Negro employment agencies with appeals for operatives.

Negro Picketing Committee.

Acting on the recommendation of Mrs. Olivia Fort-Whiteman, and other party members, committees were appointed to visit and picket employment agencies to speak before all the leading Negro churches on the strike issue and to put the case before the Negro papers of Chicago.

Union officials were delighted with the spirit of the 50 Negro strikers at the meeting and said they were confident that the remaining colored workers would be speedily pulled out. Negro pickets have already gotten many to quit work and join the union. The International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union has no color line.

Thru Churches and Clubs.

"All of us belong to some organization of colored people," said Miss Eva Jackson, striker and member of the union. "We can get the names of all the people who are members of those organizations who work in the dress industry. Then we can talk to them. We can deliver the message of the union to them. The fact that we both belong to the same club or church or organization will give us a fine chance to talk convincingly and as a friend.

"Hundreds of the colored people who are coming up from the south are getting jobs in the dress industry on the south side. They work for unbelievable small wages. The conditions are rotten in the shops. From these shops the bosses in the other shops think they will always be able to recruit scabs.

South Side Sweat Shops.

"If we want to unionize Chicago we must organize the cheap dirty sweat shops on the south side. Only yesterday on the picket line another girl and I found two colored girls who had been given jobs by an employment office in a scab shop. They had been working on the south side and saw an ad in the paper and when they answered it they were told that for five dollars they would be given a good job. When we told them a strike was on and what the union wanted to do they decided not to go to work.

"We took them to the strike headquarters and they registered as strikers. The union is trying thru its lawyer to get the money they paid the employment office back because they were not told that a strike was on.

No Color Line.

"We, the colored workers in the garment industry, must carry on the campaign for unionism after we have won this strike. This is just the beginning of the fight to unionize the colored workers. We people belong to a union that organizes the workers without regard to color or anything else. We will show the other unions in Chicago that the colored workers can be organized and are fine unionists when they understand what the unions fight for.

"The colored workers of Chicago are not acquainted with the union idea as are the white workers. Most of them come from places in the south where they would be lynched if they joined a union. We will organize the colored workers."

Carpenters Can Sluggers.

At the strike headquarters at 180 W. Washington street yesterday four young fellows who have been active sluggers for the bosses along S. Market street, wandered in and began to try to threaten the girl strikers. They merely began because several members of Carpenters' Local 573, who have an office in the same building, told them that if they started any trouble they would "knock 'em for a row of injunctions and then call the cops." The sluggers left at once.

The workers from the ten shops which settled with the union Monday and Tuesday held shop meetings, received instructions from the strike committee and returned to work.

of those he has been informed are working to find "something on him" to force him to drop his investigation.

Examine More Telegrams.

A new batch of telegrams sent and received by the principal figures in the naval oil scandal were examined by the inquiring committee today behind closed doors.

The messages were submitted by the local Western Union office. They were examined by the committee in executive session to determine which were pertinent to the present investigation. Those which are found relevant will be made public later.

Senator Ladd, North Dakota, Republican, presided over the session in the absence of Chairman Lenroot, who left last night for a week's vacation at Southern Pines, N. C.

Thomas P. Dowd, superintendent of the Washington Postal office, gave the committee about thirty additional telegrams. They were submitted in answer to a subpoena which called for messages to or from any of the principals in the investigation including Former Secretary of Interior Fall, Harry F. Sinclair, E. L. Doheny, E. B. McLean or any of his many agents or J. W. Zevely.

Get Messages from Palm Beach.

In addition to the Postal and Western Union messages handled thru the Washington office, Dowd and H. F. Taff, manager of the local Western Union office submitted sealed envelopes containing records of messages handled by their Palm Beach offices.

Taff and Dowd estimated that there were about 300 telegrams in all. It was considered probable it would take the committee several hours to sort the messages and decide which relate to the inquiry.

The messages cover a period from Dec. 1 to Feb. 29, during which time McLean, his agents and Fall, Walsh and C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, were in Palm Beach.

Probe "Betting Commissioner" Story

Senator Heflin's story that Harry Sinclair was "betting commissioner" for cabinet officers, including Attorney General Daugherty, is a phase of the "slush fund" inquiry, oil committee members revealed today.

Heflin said Sinclair and Daugherty went to a race track and bet on the horses, Daugherty losing his bet. Later, Heflin said, Daugherty turned over some money to Sinclair to bet and Sinclair "came back with a bunch of money and turned it over to Daugherty and he divided it among those whose money he had bet and said, 'these are our winnings.'"

The story was that a group of officials, of whom Daugherty was said to be one, had made a "pool" following a "tip" that a certain horse was due to win. When the horse lost, another pool was raised and the bet placed thru Sinclair, according to the circumstantial story told the committee. This time the "tip" proved correct, or at any rate, the officials got back enough money to recoup former losses and show them a handsome profit.

Another angle of the story is that some of the same officials went into a pool on Sinclair oil stock and that they lost all their money. Then, according to the unverified story, they were permitted to "borrow" from a fund created for the purpose and later all but one man returned these borrowings. This one man, the committee was told, got $200,000 from the fund and has not yet returned it. The committee has never been able to establish either the existence of the slush fund or its source, or to find out who formed the supposed pool.

Unmask New Intrigues.

The new telegrams will help the committee, it is said, to complete the story of the intrigue to keep McLean from going before the investigating committee.

Some new names are involved.

One of the telegrams explained to the committee a message from J. F. Fitzgerald to McLean, which was previously made public. Fitzgerald who formerly was connected with McLean's Washington paper, wired McLean to "read every other word in previous message."

A message was found in the batch submitted today which—if every other word was dropped—would inform McLean that Senator Thomas J. Walsh, chief prosecutor, was in possession of two varying stories as to why McLean could not testify.

The name "Slemp" is mentioned several times in the new telegrams, it was learned.

One of the telegrams was designated by a member of the committee as being a "mystery message." It states that several men had been asking about a man from a certain state in such a way that it might indicate a United States senator. The committee tomorrow will endeavor to get a definite interpretation of the message from witnesses.

RAILROAD SOLON ASSAILS WHEELER AS LABOR FRIEND

Bad Daugherty Prober, He Whines

By LAURENCE TODD
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Every little while the real issues in American political life smash thru the veils of speech, in congress or in print, and we get a breath of honest fresh air in the house-of-make-believe.

So it was when "Baltimore & Ohio" Bruce, the new corporation senator elected on the democratic ticket from Maryland by the aid of the entire Harding-Coolidge administration, arose to denounce the "propriety" of Senator Wheeler, accuser of Attorney General Daugherty, going on the special committee which is to investigate Daugherty's violations of his trust.

"Everybody knows," said Bruce, "that he (Wheeler) is closely affiliated politically with elements in our population which have peculiar reasons of their own for subjecting Mr. Daugherty, to investigation."

Those Naughty Workers.

When Senator Walsh insisted that Bruce explain this remark, the railroad senator said that "of course I meant the labor element."

This was frank enough. Wheeler has always been identified with organized labor's struggle in Montana, and Bruce knew that Wheeler knew of Daugherty's warfare upon the railroad shop strikers in 1922. He knew of Daugherty's insolent lie: "We have a carload of evidence against them, that is being sent out to Chicago under armed guard"—referring to the striking shopmen against whom he secured the most lawless and oppressive injunction in the history of the American labor movement.

Yes, Bruce knew that labor had "peculiar reasons of their own" for wanting an investigation of the sinister influence of railroad corporations in the present regime of the department of justice. Bruce stands guard for the railroad corporations in the senate, as he did while an official of Maryland, so many years that the title "B. & O." became attached to him.

Lauds Big Business.

Wheeler's reply was to ask Bruce about his railroad connections. Bruce denied that he ever had received a cent from a railroad, but boasted his affection for them, and especially the Pennsylvania and the B. & O.

"From one end of our state to the other," he almost chanted, "we are at peace with our large business interests. The more rich men that are sent to us from the west, providing they are not the Doheny or Sinclair order, the better pleased we shall be." He predicted that in time the people of the west would be better friends with big business, "but they will never do it by shifting the railroads of the country from the basis of individual to the basis of government ownership."

Here again was confession: Bruce saw in an investigation of the crooked attorney general only one solid fact—a chance that private ownership of railroads would be exposed as another corrupt conspiracy along with the oil conspiracy and the job-getting graft.

Whines at Brookhart.

Next day, however, the voice of Fess of Ohio, who was chosen by the railroad workers of his state in 1922 as the least of two evils—Pomerene being the other—was heard demanding that Brookhart of Indiana be not placed on this same committee, because Brookhart "has for years been connected with certain drifts in industry that make certain acts of Mr. Daugherty very offensive to him." The "drifts" are the farmer-labor movement, and Daugherty's acts are his anti-labor activities in violation of his oath of office and the statutes.

Farmer Appeals 7-Year Term for 'Hay-Stack' Killing

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MADISON, Wis., March 5.—Attorneys for Hartwell Farwell, Vienna, Wis., farmer, sentenced to seven years at Waupun for the killing of Theophil Hosten two years ago, will appeal to Governor Blaine for a pardon April 2, they announced today.

The Hosten slaying, a state wide sensation, was known as the "hay-stack murder". The charred body of Hosten was found in a burned haystack near Portage.

Alice Farwell, a spinster sister of Farwell, was courted by Hosten, according to evidence brought out at the trial, and Farwell's objection to the match was emphasized by prosecutors.

Farwell admitted he shot Hosten and burned his body, but pleaded self defense. He was convicted of manslaughter.

Steel Union In Bad Way.

SYDNEY, Nova Scotia, March 5.—Only 500 union steel workers, employed here by the British Empire Steel Corp., remain of the 2,500 enrolled before the June, 1923, strike. The local lodge has no connection with any international organization, the members having severed connection with the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Workers of America. An effort is being made to reorganize the employes of the plant.

LABOR PROTEST DELAYS PASSAGE OF PEONAGE BILLS

Anti-Foreigner Acts May Wait Year

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 5.—Now that the hour is drawing near when Congress must enact an immigration law, New York Labor, aware of the dangers latent in this issue, is making its voice heard. The existing immigration statute will expire on June 30. Consequently, a decision must be reached before that date.

It seems, however, that a majority of the federal legislators is unwilling to provoke the sweeping indignation of millions of workers in America by passing the proposed series of reactionary measures to control immigrants. More accurately, Congress appears eager to delay settlement of these bills until after the expiration of the present immigration law, so that this statute will in all likelihood be continued for another year.

Czarist Police Supervision.

Labor is generally informed concerning the nature of certain contemplated restrictions, which would impose Czarist police supervision upon alien workers entering the United States, as well as upon innumerable laborers who have long since been naturalized American citizens. While some of the proposed laws would require that each immigrant worker would submit his finger prints to the authorities and would be obliged to report to the police periodically, other measures envisage deportation on the flimsiest pretexts.

In addition, the quota arrangement under the suggested laws would reduce the number of immigrants permitted to enter America from European nations in which labor is known to be highly organized and of revolutionary tradition. Favoritism would be shown to countries in which the labor movement is notoriously primitive or reactionary.

Big Labor Protest.

These issues have been aired before large meetings of working men in New York lately. The most recent of these protest gatherings was held this week at the Stuyvesant Casino, where 160 delegates of labor groups representing nine nationalities formulated their policy towards the immigration dilemma. A resolution passed at this meeting reflects the opinion of the militant workers in this region.

The resolution reviews the rise of American imperialism, with its echoes at home in "open shop" campaigns, suppression of trade union activities and the use of terror against all revolutionary spokesmen and their followers. The plea that immigration limitations proposed would protect American workers from immigrant competition is refuted, and the resolution asserts that this argument is intended to conceal the attempt to shut out class-conscious workers from the country. The threatened control of immigrants is branded as a vicious method to silence and thwart attempts to resist exploitation. The statement finally appeals to organized labor to unite against this campaign of intimidation and repression on behalf of the owners of industry and financial powers.

Soviet Government Gets 50 Pct. Profits of Fish Concession

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 5.—A concession has been granted to the Berlin firm, Reuben and Bielefeld, for the preparation and export of fish exports. This firm is entitled to buy, in the regions of the rivers which flow into the Black, Caspian and Baltic seas, fish scales, glue, fish essences, etc., and to export such products abroad.

The export of the goods abroad is to be carried out by license of the Commissariat for Foreign Trade, and the firm is to be subject to all the laws and regulations in force in the Soviet Union.

In return for these rights the firm undertakes to pay to the Soviet government fifty per cent of the net profits from the sale and working up of these products, to submit its books to representatives of the Soviet government, and to give all required information regarding the conditions, prices and numbers of operations carried out. All disputes arising out of this agreement will be submitted to an arbitration court. The period of the agreement is for five years.

Gouged Tenants Will Rally To Labor Party That Will War On Landlords, Says League Head

The present crisis in housing conditions in Chicago will be a big factor in determining the result of the next election, and a Labor Party which sponsors the tenants' fight against crowding and raising of rents is bound to poll a large vote in Chicago, said Grace H. Harte, attorney for the Tenants' League of Chicago, 21 N. La Salle street, to the DAILY WORKER, yesterday.

"The main issue, in my opinion, which determined the success of the Labor Party in Great Britain was its housing program," said Miss Harte, who recently returned from an investigation of English housing conditions.

"The Labor Party there sponsored a law that no landlord could raise his rents above ten per cent of what they were in August, 1914. Here in Chicago such a program would have the endorsement of the Tenants' Protective League and would poll a surprisingly large vote."

Find Housing Outrageous.

"We have ample proof that housing conditions in Chicago are acute," Miss Harte stated. "From all over the city we receive complaints of unwarranted raises in rents. I have visited every part of Chicago, investigating housing conditions and everywhere have found that houses and apartments are being subdivided, and rents raised. Overcrowding affects 90 per cent of the working men and women of Chicago. By working men, I mean clerks as well as laborers.

"The bad results of this overcrowding are apparent. Families sandwiched together have no privacy and the children in hundreds of homes have become cowed and spiritless because their parents cannot give them the proper mental and physical care which requires room to live decently."

T G. Vance, president of the Tenants Protective League, said that the recent general increase in rents was partly the fault of the tenants themselves. "The Chicago tenant is a long suffering animal," Mr. Vance said. "There is no justification whatever for the raise in rents. I have the figures to show that the average wage in Chicago has not increased in the last two years, whereas unemployment has greatly increased. And yet rents have been raised from 50 to 200 per cent all over the city."

Negroes Worst Sufferers.

"I stated in the March issue of the DAILY WORKER that the Negroes on Chicago's South Side are hardest hit by the unfair rent increase. The reason for this is that the steel and other large industries have been using colored labor, enticed North by agencies who have promised them high wages. On their arrival the Negroes find they are as badly off as they were in the South because their higher pay is being taken away by gouging landlords. It is easy for the landlords to charge higher rents to the Negro, because he is largely restricted to certain districts."

When asked if he did not think there was a connection between the large factory owners who give the Negro higher wages than he received in the South, and the large real estate owners, who take over 20 per cent of the negroes pay, Mr. Vance said he thought it probable. At any rate, Mr. Vance agreed that the Negro works harder in the Northern factories, and due to higher rents, is no better off than the Southern Negro.

Some complaints of exorbitant rent increases which have just been received by the League are from: 511 East 46th Place, rent increased from $50 to $70; 720 North Dearborn, increased from $130 to $170; 5740 Calumet avenue, increased from $60 to $72.50; 1256 West Madison street, increased from $48 to $60; 4544 South State street, increased from $35 to $60; 1030 East 40th Place, increased from $45 to $60.

Dawes' Loan Plan Means Mortgaging German Railways

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Mar. 5.—The Dawes committee of experts completed today a plan for organization and exploitation of the German railways as the basis for an international loan, it was reported.

The plan is understood to include a scheme for international supervision of the German lines.

It is the opinion of the experts that the railroads are worth 25,000,000,000 gold marks. Therefore, they can be used as security for a loan and possibly as securities for France, as well, in view of the latter country's attitude.

The sub-committee on railroads reported to the Dawes committee that it will be necessary to cut down the personnel of the lines and to increase rates in some instances.

A guardian at each door.
They packed the girls
Off to the jail
Because they dared to stay
Defending their small rights:
They were a warning
Against poor jobs
For those who sell themselves
Too eagerly to grasping boss.
But now the law
Is picketing
To keep the strikes off.
The boss will slip
A dirty bill
Into each waiting hand.
And when the slaves
Draw out their doles
The boss will add a card:

J. Hamilton Lewis Doing "A McAdoo" in Mexican Deal

TO the DAILY WORKER.—According to a despatch from Mexico City to the Los Angeles "Times," J. Hamilton Lewis, the whip of the United State Senate during Wilson's regime, is "understood to be the unofficial representative of the United States in the proposed loan of $25,000,000 to the Mexican government by a group of New York bankers."

Mr. Lewis, however, does not admit to have any other connection with said loan than that of "legal adviser" (like McAdoo). His sole object, of course, is the drawing up of the contract "in accordance with the laws of Mexico and the United States."

"The only political matters discussed with President Obregon, Mr. Lewis indicated," says the dispatch, "were the present conflict between the two major parties over the recognition of Mexico and the sales of arms to this government. Mr. Lewis said he informed President Obregon that the policy of the political parties of the United States in relation to foreign affairs was to support the administration in any attitude it adopted."

Now, finally, this former whipping master of the Senate allowed the cat to slip out of the bag unwhipt—if not unwept by democrats. Have we not always said that both republican and democrats, nationally as well as internationally, were badly mixed up in the same stink-pot?

Agriculture and Credit Improve in Soviet Russia

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 5.—Success of the New Economic Policy in Russia was described by M. Kaminev in a speech before the Soviet Congress. He dwelt in particular on the rapid regeneration of agriculture, whose productive capacity has now reached 75% of the pre-war level (the aggregate value of agricultural produce reached 2,400,000,000 gold rubles in 1923, against 1,900,000,000 in 1922, and 1,100,000,000 in 1921).

The partial fuel and transport crises are now over, and there is a coal surplus in the Donetz fields. Exporting of Russian coal to foreign countries is now considered. The concentration in the towns of the urban proletariat, dispersed during the years of civil war, is rapidly progressing.

Organization of credit has greatly developed, the State co-operative movement having been supplied with credits aggregating to 532,000,000 gold rubles. The speaker sums up his statement of the internal conditions by declaring that a tremendous progress has been achieved in the people's welfare; the "new economic policy"—he concludes—has been amply justified and does not call for revision.

CAPITALISM AND CHURCH UNITED IN RULING PERU

Fight Against Tyranny Told by Student

By Victor R. Haya de la Torre

(By The Federated Press)

(The biggest figure in the South American student movement is the recently exiled Victor R. Haya de la Torre. This student movement is closely associated with the labor movement. Peru, like the majority of the South American countries, is under the domination of U. S. imperialism.

The oil lands of Peru belong to Standard Oil. The revenues of Peru are supervised by the United States. Social functions such as health and sanitation are run by Americans. The U. S. military-naval commission, under Admiral Woodward, is preparing Peru for possible war with Chile. At the same time the U. S. president is impartial arbitrator between Chile and Peru over the disputed provinces of Tacna and Arica.

Haya de la Torre, the leader of the students movement in Peru has founded six peoples universities out of which a powerful Peruvian labor movement is developing. This explains why his government took the first oportunity to get rid of him. —Ella G. Wolfe, Translator.)

* * *

There dominates in Peru a strong political tyranny of capitalism and of the church. President Leguia has imposed for the last four years an autocratic government without any program save to remain in power. The government of Peru is a reactionary dictatorship. More than a thousand men of all social classes have been exiled.

In May, 1923, Peru decided "to officially consecrate the nation to the effigy of the heart of Jesus." This meant the end of religious toleration. It counted on the influence of the Catholic clergy who participates directly in the political life of the country.

Police Slaughter Eight.

The students and organized workers formed a united front to prevent this attack upon religious freedom. We were joined by the Protestants and Masons. On May 23 we held a large meeting in the University of Lima. I was chosen to preside. We asked for separation of church and state. This demonstration of nearly 5,000 people, chiefly of workers and students, marched to the university square in orderly procession. There we were attacked by police. From the tower of a nearby church firing began. Eight were killed. This outrage awakened formidable public protest. More than 50,000 people turned out the following day to bury the victims. The government declared martial law in Lima; but the "consecration" was not put over.

Then the police got busy. For some time I was in hiding. The Catholic clergy charged that the students were in the pay of the Chilean government interested in promoting disorders in Peru. But this propaganda failed.

Hunger Strike in Dungeon.

Five months later, after the president had offered amnesty to the workers and students, I was rushed from my house by the chief of police in an automobile to the port of Callao, taken to the island of San Lorenzo, a political prison, in which many men have lost their liberty without judicial process. I was placed incommunicado in a cell without light, air or bed. went on a hunger strike. After nine days of fasting I was put on a German boat. I was without clothing and money. They refused permission to see my family. The boat steamed to Colon in the Canal Zone where I landed. From Colon I went to Cuba and then to Mexico on invitation of the minister of education, Jose Vasconcelos.

During all this period the workers and students of Lima were protesting. Three hundred students of the University of Lima were arrested. In the university towns of Trujillo, Cuzco and Arequipa, there were many arrests. Two youths, Santos Levano and Antonio Calderon, were killed by the police at one of the protest meetings. The student agitation continues. The new generation of my country is working for social justice.

New England Cotton Mill Workers Lose Jobs As European Textiles Arrive; Southern Industry Gains

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor).

Fall River Cotton Mills are operating at less than one-fifth capacity. Thruout New England cotton mill operatives are unemployed or working but a few days a week. This means depressing hardship to upward of 200,000 workers and their families.

Such depression in the textile industry is the first appearance of cut-throat competition on a world scale which will be well known to millions of workers in this country before another decade is out. British textile concerns are foregoing profits in order to capture not only America's foreign market but her domestic market as well. German and Italian cotton manufacturers with cheaper labor are also snatching markets from American industry.

Exploit Cheap Dixie Labor.

The answer of American capital is seen in the rapid building up of a new cotton manufacturing industry in the south where labor is cheap and women and children can be exploited for 60 hours a week.

In the week ending Feb 16 sales by Fall River manufacturers fell to about 50,000 pieces while in the following week only about 35,000 pieces were sold. Production has been reduced to keep pace with these orders. Normal production is 350,000 pieces a week. At Pawtucket, R. I., the Tamarack mill of the Manville-Jenckes Co. has been closed and its machinery will be removed to Gastonia, N. C. During the war it employed about 1,000 workers.

North Carolina Busy.

Massachusetts with 11,985,346 spindles reported 150,000 fewer spindle hours activity than North Carolina with only 5,715,207 spindles. As competition develops northern operatives with some pretense at working standards are going to be eliminated by cheaper competitors in the south.

That foreign competition is responsible for the slump in the American textile industry appears in U. S. department of commerce reports that exports of cotton cloth fell from 587,492,532 square yards in 1922 to 464,293,759 square yards in 1923. At the same time imports of cotton cloth increased from approximately 142,000,000 square yards in 1922 to 216,000,000 square yards in 1923.

British Imports Gain.

Great Britain broke into America's domestic market for unbleached goods altho American manufacturers have always been considered in an impregnable position at home. Imports increased from 35,000,000 yards in 1922 to 90,000,000 yards in 1923. The department of commerce says the British cut prices below cost to obtain this market. They sold at 43 cents a pound compared with the American price of 53 cents.

In South American markets German textiles have again come into the market with prices from 10 per cent to 15 per cent under the American. As a result Germany gets heavy orders and the textile industry in that country is reported booming. In Peru both British and Italian manufacturers are offering cotton goods at prices varying from 15 per cent to 20 per cent below American prices. In Asia and the Philippines the commerce department reports that the products of cheap Chinese and Japanese workers are under-selling American goods.

Low Wages—Poor Market.

The present state of the textile industry is a warning to labor. The British cotton industry, in spite of its capture of American markets, is reported depressed with mills employing 100,000 workers reducing weekly hours from 48 to 26¼. The inherent tendency of the present industrial order to force the development of various industries far beyond the capacity of low paid working populations to purchase their own products is resulting in a competition of the various groups of owners for some sort of final supremacy which will mean to labor unemployment with increasing pressure for lower wages and longer hours.

Czechoslovakia Can Put 3,730,000 in Arms, She Boasts

(By The Federated Press)

PRAGUE, Checko-Slovakia, March 5.—A Prague daily, "28 Rijen", publishes an estimate, gauging the number of men Checko-Slovakia could enroll for military service in case of war at 3,730,000. The country's peacetime standing army was recently reduced from 150,000 to 130,000—a number which must be regarded in light of the fact that the populace of Checko-Slovakia is only one-ninth of the United States.

Studebaker Cleans Up Juicy Profit of $18,342,222 in 1923

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—Studebaker Corporation profits for 1923, after depreciation and federal taxes, amounted to $18,342,222. This represents payment of $23.60 a share on common stock, as compared to $23.21 in 1922.

Total net sales, says President Erskine, amounted to $166,153,683, an increase of 24 per cent over 1922. Erskine says the corporation expects a big volume of business for 1924.

TRACHTENBERG TOUR IS CREATING FINE ENTHUSIASM

Party May Book Him to Pacific Coast

The lecture tour of Alexander Trachtenberg is being enthusiastically received by Party organizations thruout the east and middle west. Applications are coming into the national office of the Workers Party every day and present indications are that Comrade Trachtenberg will be obliged to remain on the road several months in order to fill his engagements.

The tour begins in New York City on March 4. From there he will go thru the northeast territory and will commence to travel westward in the latter part of March.

About European Labor.

It was originally planned to have the tour of Comrade Trachtenberg cover only the eastern and middle western states. However, on account of the great educational value of the lecture of Comrade Trachtenberg, the national office desires to give every section of the Party the opportunity to share the priceless experience of his fourteen months' study of the Russian and European Communist Parties and labor movements.

Comrade Trachtenberg's tour will be extended to the Pacific coast if sufficient response to the special proposition of the national office is received quickly from the Party organizations in the west to assure the meeting of the heavy expenses for railroad fare.

The subject of Comrade Trachtenberg's lecture will be "What I Saw in Russia and Germany." It will be a review of the International Communist movement, based on his fourteen months' study at first hand of the labor organizations and Communist Parties in Russia, Germany, Czecho-Slovakia, France and Austria.

This lecture tour will undoubtedly have a profound influence on those who hear it and will help to draw them closer to the world-wide Communist movement.

Trachtenberg Dates.

The dates already definitely arranged for Comrade Trachtenberg are as follows:

Brooklyn, N. Y., Tuesday, March 4; New York City, Wednesday, March 5; Waterbury, Conn., Sunday, March 16, 2 p. m.; Bridgeport, Sunday, March 16, 8 p. m.; New Haven, Monday, March 17; Gardner, Mass., Wednesday, March 19; Boston, Friday, March 21; Worcester, Saturday, March 22; Providence, R. N. Y. Conference for Foreign Born Elects Executives

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 5.—"Withou the foreign-born workers there woul be no United States, because th greater bulk of the workers in t basic industries of this country a foreign-born," said Ben Gitlow, t chairman for the Conference for the Protection of Foreign-Born Workers held at Stuyvesant Casino.

Ludwig Lore, editor of the German daily "Volkzeitung", impressively outlined to the delegates the way the capitalist class of this country is weaving a net to enslave not only the foreign-born but also the American workers by fostering the passage of immigration as a weapon against their exploiters.

The Secretary of the Provisional Council, Benjamin Lifschitz reported that then different nationalities have already organized language councils.

Executive Council Named.

A representative from each language council together with the following seven elected by the Conference will compose the Executive Committee: L. Haufbauer, Litz, Ludwig Lore, Lash, A. Bittleman, J. Monik and Benjamin Lifschitz. The Executive Committee was instructed to start a big press propaganda campaign against the passage of the bills.

A resolution of greeting from the Lithuanian Conference for the Protection of the Foreign-Born emphasized upon the importance of the workers of all nationalities including the American workers to create a united front in a move against the octopus of capitalism threatening the workers of this country, was read and unanimously adopted.

A ringing resolution against the slave laws was enthusiastically carried.

RUSSIA PENALIZES FRANCE AND GIVES ENGLAND TRADE

Kamenev Speech Gives Foreign Policy

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 5.—"We have been compelled to transfer part of our trade apparatus from France to England," Commissar Kamenev said at the Soviet Congress. "We prefer dealing with countries with which we are settling trade relations and where we run no risk of undesirable incidents.

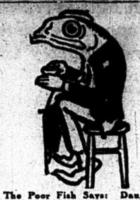
"France ought to realize that what has been nationalized remains nationalized; our gallant soldiers of the Red Army did not shed their blood in the struggle against interventionists for the Seine Tribunal to be eventually allowed to reshape that which was conquered with blood. Believing in that business relations are mutually profitable, we are ready at any moment to start negotiations, but not unless there be recognized certain simple axioms as already acepted by England and Italy."

Friendship to Orient.

In the next part of his report, Kamenev spoke of the mutual relations with the nations of the East.

"Our friendship with the Orient, striving at independent national progress is one of the corner stones of the Soviet government's policy. This friendship we do not bargain.

"The manner in which was met the news of Lenin's death makes us proud that our leader inspired, in the far China, the forces of a democratic nation to a new liberating work.



The Poor Fish Says: Daugherty bears unmistakable evidence of being a stubborn cur. When they try to make it hot for him in Washington, his answer is to go still further south. He insists on having his place in the sun.

The peoples of the East must know that our friendship with them is as sacred to us as it is to themselves."

International Policy.

Summing up his report on the international policy of the Soviet government, Mr. Kamenev formulates it thus: Friendship with all the nations of the world, brotherly sympathy with oppressed peoples, business and peaceful relations with all the governments.

Remarking that the Soviet Republics have reached a turning point of their international position, the acting chairman of the council of P. C. recalls Lenin's words, to the effect that "the later the recognition, the worse the conditions set forth by us with regard to it."

COMMUNIST·CHILDREN'S·COLUMN

THE LAND OF THE BEES.

By H. Lane

Little Mary was crying bitterly, because a bee had stung her. Mother explained that she should not have touched the bee, but that was no consolation for Mary. She meant well, and she did not see why the bee resented her kindness. Mother told her something about bees, but the information muddled itself with what Mary knew about fairies, and she went to bed at night quite confused.

There came flying into the room, a bee, larger than any Mary had seen, almost as large as the big alarm clock ticking away on the shelf. "Mary," said he, "do you wish to see how the bees live?" Of course, Mary did, and she was too young to be afraid of strange animals, when their voices were kind. Now whether the bee grew larger or Mary grew smaller we can't possibly tell, but she found it quite easy to mount on his back and sit comfortably between the transparent silvery wings. Like a breath of the night breeze he sailed thru the window and up high into the air.

Mary had always thought it would be easy for a bird to brush against the gold-pointed stars, but they flew ever so high without coming noticeably nearer a single star. And as they flew they talked.

"The bees are so used to the cruelty of men that they cannot understand that children are not always cruel," he said. "Men rob them of the honey for which they work constantly, and it is not good to work to feed tall hungry mouthed masters. When you touched my wing today, I was afraid of you."

Mary looked closer, and recognized him, which shows that she was a remarkably bright little girl. There isn't the decided difference in bees that we find in men, because bees do not dress in accordance with their class. "I was bigger than you, then," she said, and, fearing that the bees feelings might be hurt by this reference to her superior growth, "bees don't usually grow as big as little girls."

By this time they had come to a shaft of shimmering light, along which the bee floated lazily. Its golden splendor dyed his wings, and cast a radiance on the little girl. "I suppose the light is made by fireflies," said Mary, who had read fairy tales, and was quite well-informed. "Oh, no!" exclaimed the bee in a shocked voice, "what do you think we are—men? We do not make slaves of our fellow creatures. This is illuminated pollen, given us by the flowers. But here we are. . . "

They had entered a glimmering gateway, made a golden gossamer, transparent but firm. All about them were flowers tossed by a thousand soft breezes, which, carried faint perfumes and the tinkling of tiny distant bells.

But the bee city was more wonderful than the tall flowers that nodded above it. There were thousands of large hives, in orderly rows, and in the centre one larger than any other. "That is where the queen bee lives?" asked Mary, who remembered something of her mother's explanation. "Up here we have no queen," explained her guide; "we have not needed her since the revolution. I suppose you think we have drones too. We used to have all that sort of thing, but one day we saw how men had imitated us, and we could look at the thing objectively." Mary hesitated to ask the meaning of this long word, but decided to look it up in the dictionary the next day. "In America, where you live, instead of a queen bee, who does a reasonable amount of work, you have a lot of politicians, who spend all their time in office buzzing around trying to collect enough honey—don't you call it honey?"

"Money," replied Mary politely.

"Enough money to live on for the rest of their lives. Or else they buzz for re-election. And, of course, you have seen the drones. . . . ."

"We do not have any drones," corrected Mary proudly. "Teacher said that in our country all men are equal, and of course, they all work."

"Do you mean to say your teachers teach you what is untrue?" asked the bee incredulously. "In the very worst stages of the bee society we never taught our children lies. Of course, men are not all equal in your country. You have a lot of drones, and you have bees—men, I mean, who work so much harder to keep the drones comfortable that they are slaves. We never really had slaves, nor did we ever give everything to the drones and keep all from the workers. Your drones are 'the rich.'"

"How did you have the revolution?" asked Mary, with interest.

"We saw how things were among men, and we grew ashamed to be so much like them. So we began by kicking out the drones, and making them work or starve. Some of the common bees took charge of the revolution. Then the queen abdicated, that is, gave up the throne, and we reorganized our entire society. Everybody works now."

The clouds were drenched with rose-colored light, and Mary felt the morning air. "We must go home, or mother will be frightened. But please bring me back again."

"I will come soon," promised the bee, "and take you to much more wonderful places than this. Now, taste this honey."

One tiny taste of sweetness, and Mary felt her eyes close and heard beside her the humming of a dozen soft-voiced bees. Then she awoke in her bed.

'HOUSES AT COST,' SLOGAN IN FIGHT UPON RENT HOGS

Women's Council in Active Campaign

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Mar. 4.—Twenty thousand copies of the following appeal to working women for action against the high rent evil have been distributed by the United Council of Workingclass Women:

It is clear now to everyone that nothing has resulted from all the hubbub about the Rent and Housing question.

The Governor had appointed a special commission. This commission investigated and submitted a report. This report gave a terrible picture of overcrowding, of unbearable housing conditions, of unsanitary surroundings, of exorbitant rents.

It was a damning indictment against the laws that were passed in 1920, for the report proved that these laws failed to relieve the rent and housing crisis. The extension of the Rent laws for another three years will not relieve us. The rents remain high; the landlords make few or no repairs! we are compelled to live in unwholesome housing conditions: fire traps are still our living quarters.

Laws Aided Landlords.

Even these rent laws were passed four years ago thru the agitation among us working class women who organized and demanded relief. But the real benefits went not to us workers, but to the landlords and the property owners who got their new buildings free from all taxes. And the rents in these new buildings were so high that a workers' family couldn't afford to live in them!

The trouble was that we working class women fought each in a separate group. When the law was extended we thought we had won and gave up fighting. Our organizations fell to pieces and the politicians stopped being afraid of us.

The working class women must again take up the matter.

1. All existing working class women must organize and affiliate to the existing working class women's organization.
2. All the unorganized women must organize and affiliate to the existing working class women's organization.
3. We must work immediately for lower rents, better housing and abolition of firetrap tenements.
4. We must create a great powerful permanent organization, one that will stand ready at a moment's notice to take up problems that affect the interests of the workers.

Such a women's organization is already in existence—The United Council of Workingclass Women. Its aim: The Protection of Workingclass Interests.

46 Organizations United.

Forty-six workers' organizations are already affiliated, and are supporting the Council. Recently, the Council took up the Rent and Housing problem. It started a campaign against fire-trap tenements. It is working to organize the working class women upon a concrete program for housing and rent relief. The United Council of Workingclass Women will hold a monster demonstration on May 17 in which tens of thousands of working class women and their children will march to City Hall. There they will demand that the City Administration or the State build houses for the workers that will rent at cost, as is being done in England.

Seven working class women or more can get together and write to the Council for an organizer. Don't wait. Get your group and send in the names and addresses. Our landlords are organized 100 per cent. Today they send us notices. Tomorrow, when we are strong, we will send them notices.

UNITED COUNCIL OF WORKINGCLASS WOMEN.

Textile Workers Show Fight.

NEW YORK, March 5.—Concentrating their initial efforts upon Allentown, Pa., the Amalgamated Textile Workers' union has opened a campaign for the establishment of the 44-hour week in textile trades. Under the leadership of the local secretary, R. J. Stoudt, mass meetings and intensive propaganda are being conducted among the textile laborers. Allentown textile factories are now operating on a 50-hour basis.

Youth Views

By HARRY GANNES

Farm Youth Doing Alger Stunt.

OF the two million farmers who left the land during one year, a vast number were the youth. The Horatio Alger plot, where the young boy leaves the farm to make his fortune in the city, was multiplied several hundred thousand times during the past year, without, however, the closing chapter—that is, the successful young man carrying home the bacon.

The great number of young fellows who are driven off the farms by the depression and hard times, come to the city either to join the ranks of the ragged unemployed, or the not much better off poorly paid factory hands.

Even in the so-called good times, the young boys and girls do not want to stay on the farms because they are worked too hard. Now there is a wide-spread desertion from the farms by the young people.

To halt this movement from farm to factory, the agricultural colleges, the farm clubs and the Y. M. C. A.'s have been trying everything possible—more entertainment, better education, and a lot of other entiicng forms of diversion, but all to no avail.

The latest wrinkle in the scheme to keep the youth on the farm is the attempt to organize boys and girls' clubs among the farming population of the nation by the city youth-exploiting organization, Sears Roebuck Company.

The less people on the farms and in the farming communities, the less customers for this prison-commodity dispensing organization.

It is really funny to hear the plans of the organization: "It is the hope of the foundation to formulate plans for extending the boys' and girls' clubs much the same way as Sears Roebuck & Co. started a movement more than twenty years ago which resulted in the establishment of the first county agents in America."

About a dozen different organizations are cooperating with the mail order house, among which is the Y. M. C. A., president of the Missouri board of agriculture, and representatives of several agricultural colleges.

No amount of organization, whether in the interest of retaining customers, or upon the firmer foundation in order to keep the youth on the farms as laborers when the farmer cannot hire help, will stop the movement of the rural youth to the industrial centers.

Enroll Volunteers to Canvass Sunday for German Relief

Volunteer enrollment cards are coming in rapidly now. Workers of Chicago are responding to the call for aid from the German Workers. Headquarters from which volunteers will start out on Sunday morning, March 9, have been established at Vilnis, 2513 S. Halsted street, Workers Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Blvd., Freiheit, 1145 Blue Island avenue, The DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted street, and Liberty Club, 3420 W. Roosevelt Road. Cicero also will be covered by a committee for German relief established there.

However, many more volunteers are needed adequately to reach Chicagoans who are ready to donate their share for the relief of their fellow workers in Germany. Those wishing to do their share in this campaign of international working class solidarity, should either immediately send their names in to the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany, Room 307, 166 W. Washington street, or call at the headquarters mentioned in a foregoing paragraph, to receive supplies and instructions.

Workers of Chicago, join hands with the workers of other countries in support of Germany's proletariat. Give your services on Sunday, March 9, to German relief. Volunteer!

Montana Smelter Workers Demand Dollar a Day Raise

(By The Federated Press)

BUTTE, Mont., March 5.—Thirty-six thousand workers in the Montana copper industry, members of the International Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers' union, are demanding a dollar a day pay increase. The Anaconda Copper Mining company has replied that present prices of copper do not justify a wage raise.

The men, when they are not unemployed, are at present on the following daily scale: Smeltermen, $4.25; engineers, $5.50-$6; compressor men, $5.50; firemen, $5.00; oilers, $4.25-$4.75. Of the workers affected by wage demand 1,800 are in Anaconda, 1,200 in Great Falls and 600 in Butte.

AMERICAN LIFE DRIVES MEXICAN VISITORS INSANE

Our Brutality and Job Conditions Too Hard

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE.

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, March 5.—The large number of immigrants deported from the United States to Mexico every year, were driven insane by cruelty and exploitation and neglect in the United States, concludes Dr. Luis M. Orci, health officer of the Mexican immigration department in Cuidad Juarez.

The doctor's report is a scientific one, made without animus and after a careful study of the case histories of the surprisingly large number of Mexicans who were deported because they became insane in the Land of Prosperity. Here are the salient paragraphs:

Environment Too Hard.

"Our countrymen go into an environment entirely unknown to them; language, customs, climate; infrequent cases they receive treatment that is almost brutal; later comes unemployment and the imperious necessity of bringing bread to the family. And that, in an environment so hard as that in which they find themselves located, tends to weaken more and more their minds, already exhausted by the previous suffering. All this in a body badly nourished, badly fed, and more badly clothed to support the rigors of the latitude, must in my opinion, originate functional disquiparance and especially affect the brain."

Immigrants Are Workers.

Yet the imperious necessity of seeking employment, added to the sweet promises of the Enganchadores, the employment agencies that paint glowing pictures of the land of plenty and promise where the eagle screams and oil turns into gold, results in thousands of unskilled workers crossing the border every year.

They go to the beet fields, fruit regions, cotton fields, wheat harvest, Alaska fisheries, steel mills and other Yankee paradises. Sometimes they cross with their entire families.

The Imperial valley is a part of the climate-famous California in which, to quote the feudal barons there, "no white man would work." Here every year thousands of Mexican families enter to pick fruit and cotton.

Find Child Labor Here.

Child labor is more common than adult labor because every family has more children than adults. Nobody in California ever talks about enforcing the compulsory education law, every enforcement officer being too busy with criminal syndicalism. On Feb. 16, 1,500 Mexicans crossed the line at Cuidad Jaurez bound for the center of the Michigan sugar beet fields. They are only the vanguard of the exodus in that direction.

Last year 879 Mexicans were deported from the United States, the overwhelming majority of them because the land of freedom of contract and unconstitutional safeguards for labor had driven them crazy. What figures has 1924 in reserve in the matter of this lamentable "balance in trade?"

Rail Men Get Raise.

NEW YORK, Mar. 5.—A five per cent wage increase has been given to employes of the Wheeling & Lake Erie railway, after a conference between representatives of the Brotherhoods with the officials. The agreement is to run for three years with possible wage increases after the first year.

Jim MacLachlan Is Appealing Case to London High Court

(By The Federated Press)

HALIFAX, Nova Scotia, March 5.—The case of Jim MacLachlan, deposed secretary treasurer of District 26, United Mine Workers of America, will go to the privy council in London, the highest court in the British empire, by permission of the supreme court of Nova Scotia. MacLachlan was originally convicted of "spreading false tales," which was later changed to "seditious libel." The charge resulted over a circular issued by MacLachlan during the July, 1923, miners' strike. The circular made public the acts committed by the provincial police against striking steel workers of the British Empire Steel Co.

The case will probably come before Lord Haldane in July. The attorney general of Nova Scotia will personally oppose the appeal. Meanwhile MacLachlan will remain in Dorchester penitentiary where he is learning the trade of a shoemaker. He is at liberty to receive letters and papers but rules permit him to write only one letter a month, which always goes to his family.

Big Boston Mass Meeting to Flay Davis Slave Bills

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BOSTON, Mass., March 5.—The Council for Protection of Foreign Born Workers, representing tens of thousands of workers who have organized to fight the enactment of laws directed against foreign-born workers now pending before Congress, will hold a mass meeting at Scenic Auditorium, Tremont and Berkeley Sts., Sunday, March 19, at 2:00 p. m.

Ludwig Lore, editor of tht New York Volkszeitung, who made the report on the proposed legislation before the Workers Party National Convention, will be the chief speaker at the meetings. James P. Reid, of Providence, R. I., will be the chairman. It is expected that this meeting will bring a big audience of workers opposed to the proposed drastic exception laws.

FARMERS DRIVEN INTO DEEPER DEBT BY COOLIDGE PLAN

Montana Farmer Tells Daily Worker Why

By IRA SIEBRASSE.

To the DAILY WORKER: "In the Coolidge plan to relieve the financial difficulty of the Northwest, the only hope offered the farmer is to get deeper in debt," writes Ira Siebrasse, a DAILY WORKER correspondent from Big Sandy, Montana.

"In the 'good times' period of the war," he continues, inflation reached the high point, and during this unnatural business flush agriculture expanded and absorbed a goodly portion of credits until the indebtedness on the farms of the United States increased 131.9 per cent, according to the abstract of the census of 1920.

"The above report shows that the farm mortgage indebtedness increased 139 per cent in Iowa, 226 per cent in Minnesota, 174 per cent in South Dakota, 126 per cent in North Dakota and 625 per cent in Montana during the census period.

Wall Street's "Normalcy."

"At the time when the farm mortgage debt of the nation had grown to $4,003,767,192.00, the Quack Economic Doctors were playing to the favor of the bankers of Wall Street in a campaign for "normalcy" and howling for prices to come down, which of course, made money worth more when valued in labor and farm produce. The effect this had on the farmer and home-owner was to reduce their capacity to pay their debt. As prices came down it took more produce or labor to make a dollar, and in that respect it tended to elevate the mortgaged indebtedness. For, as produce came down money went up, and the indebtedness grew in proportion to its relative value to labor and produce.

"Inevitably the farmers cannot pay this increased indebtedness when their markets are ruined. Consequently farm loans become frozen securities. And the country banks break with their vaults filled with these frozen securities.

$150,000,000 More Debt.

"But the 'Quacks' have a solution of the problem for the bankers. They will, with the aid of the government, procure a loan of a hundred and fifty million dollars to revive those frozen securities thus increasing the burden of debt in the hope that the farmer will ultimately pay but ignoring the fact that they are adding more weight to the cargo that is already sinking the ship.

"We farmers see it going down, so we put out a life boat and by means of voluntary bankruptcy we keep the bilge-water out."

Stalin Analyzes Communist Problems in Russia

(NOTE: Today we continue the address of the prominent Russian Communist, Stalin, before an audience of Russian Communist workers, on the big problems confronting the Russian Communist Party. We have previously published the views of Chairman Kamenev, of the Moscow Soviet. The views of other prominent Russian Communists will also be given. Today's installment is as follows:

* * * *

Stalin Said:

Causes of Inadequacies.

THE first cause lies in the circumstance that our Party organizations have not overcome, at least up to the present, some residue of the war period, a period which belongs to the past, but which has still left some traces of militarism in the Party in the heads of our functionaries.

In my opinion one of these residual phenomena consists of those relations in the Party by virtue of which the Party does not represent an independent organism, nor an independent fighting institution, but a system of institutions, a description of organization composed of a whole number of institutions, in which the employes hold high or low positions.

Comrades, this view is entirely wrong, and has nothing in common with Marxism; it is a view which has been handed down to us from that period in which we militarized the Party during the war, when the question of the self-activity of the Party masses for good or ill, and the military commands were of superlative importance. I cannot recollect that this view has ever been expressed in so many words. But none the less it is a view whose fundamental elements at least are a continual hindrance to our work.

Elimination of Bureaucracy Needed.

Comrades, we must fight against such views to the utmost of our power, for they represent the most actual danger, and they create conditions which favor the distortion in actual practice of the correct lines laid down by the Party.

The second cause consists of the existence of a certain pressure on the part of our state apparatus, which is bureaucratic in character, upon the Party and the Party functionaries.

In 1917, when we were on the upward path towards October, we imagined that we should create a commune which would be an alliance of the workers, that we should do away with all bureaucracy in the administration, and that the state would be able to be converted, if not immediately, then in the course of two or three not too lengthy transitional periods, into an alliance of the workers. Actual practice has, however, shown us that this ideal is still far removed, and that the emancipation of the state from the elements of bureaucracy, the transformation of Soviet society into an alliance of workers, calls for a high level of culture among the population, and for a perfectly secure and peaceful environment, in which the necessity for the existence of great military bodies can be dispensed with.

Insufficient Activity in Nuclei.

Our state apparatus is bureaucratic, and will remain bureaucratic for some time to come.

Our Party comrades are working in this apparatus, and the envisionment and atmosphere of this bureaucratic apparatus is such that it facilitates the development of bureaucracy among our Party functionaries and Party organizations.

The third cause of the inadequacies lies in the insufficient activity of many of our nuclei, in the backwardness and even total illiteracy of the border districts in particular. The nuclei in these districts show little energy, they are behindhand politically and culturally. There is no doubt that this circumstance creates unfavorable conditions for a change of line in the Party.

The fourth cause is the lack of a sufficient number of Party politically schooled comrades in the provinces.

Not long ago I heard an address given by the representative of the Ukrainian organizations in the Central. The speaker was an extremely capable and promising comrade. He said that out of 130 nuclei, 80 possess secretaries appointed by the leading Party organization of the gouvernements.

In reply to an interpellation to the effect that these organizations were not acting rightly in doing this, the comrade began to explain that there were no members of the nuclei who could read or write, or who had been members of the party for any length of time, and that the nuclei themselves beg that secretaries be sent them, etc.

Provincial Members Lack Training.

I am willing to admit this comrade had exaggerated by 50 per cent; that the root of the evil does not lie in the lack of trained members in the nuclei, but in the fact that the leading organization of the gouvernements had been following its old traditions and giving the nuclei too much of a good thing.

But if the leading Party organization for the gouvernements is right to the extent of 50 per cent, does this not show that if there are such nuclei in the Ukraine, there are bound to be many more such in the border districts, where the organizations are young, where there are fewer persons able to read and write than in the Ukraine?

This is one of the causes which has prepared favorable conditions for the distortion, in the provinces, of the essentially correct lines prescribed by the Party.

And finally, the fifth cause: This is insufficient information. We inform badly—above all the Central—perhaps because we are all overburdened with work. And we are badly informed as to what is going on in the provinces. This must cease. It is one of the leading causes bringing about inadequacies in the Party.

Miner Hurt Over Three Years Ago, No Compensation Yet

Johnston City, Ill.

The DAILY WORKER:—

We hear a lot from the officials of District 12 of the wonderful compensation law of Illinois. I admit it is a good law for those who fit in nicely into the machine and carry out its instructions but anybody who tries to do something for the rank and file gets no benefit from it.

I was hurt in December, 1920, was operated on the 12th day of February, 1921, and the operation was not successful. The arbitration board met on the 12th of May, 1921. I was awarded $3,994. The company appealed the case to the commissioner. The commissioner sustained the award. Then the company appealed for a reduction in the amount.

The case came up on the 5th day of June. The commissioner denied the company's appeal. Then the company appealed the case to the circuit court. It is still there. I do not know when I am going to get any justice as I am not able to do my work as a loader in the mine and I am hardly able to support my family at the work I am now engaged in as timberman.

I appealed to our union attorney many times but I can get no satisfaction from him. This is the situation that I am in. I have secured help from my friends but they cannot help all the time. All the doctors the company sent me to get examined tell me that I am not able to do any hard work. But in spite of this I am obliged to do hard work.

There are men in this community who never have any trouble in getting their compensation. I cannot understand how they can get it and I cannot.

I have never done anything to harm the organization or any member. But during our election in 1922 I prosecuted some of the officials from our local for taking votes from John Hindmarsh and giving them to Farrington. This may be the real cause of my failure to get my compensation.

TONY SHRAGAL.

U. S. MARINES ARE WOUNDED IN HONDURAS

Cruisers Sent to Aid American Capital

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March. 5.—Several American marines have been wounded in Honduras and more than nine square blocks of the city of Ceiba are in ruins, according to a report here today.

The report, while unconfirmed by the state department, was said to have been received by the navy department. There it was said that all statements must come from Secretary Hughes.

Burning of Ceiba was said to be the last move of the government troops before abandoning the city.

The battle between government forces and the army of General Ferrara is said to have been in progress before Tegucigalpa. No reports, however, have been received by the state department.

Dying for U. S. Plutes.

American marines may be sent to Tegucigalpa, Honduran capital, to protect American interests, it was indicated today at the state department. Marines were landed last week at Ceiba following an attack on the American consulate.

The Boncilla forces under General Ferrara have surrounded the capital and are now about to march on the city, the state department has been informed.

In addition to its own people the American consul at Tegucigalpa is reported to have taken almost the entire foreign colony there under its protection.

There are now three American vessels in Honduran waters.

Shavian Play Press Agent's Medium to Boost Coming R. U. R.

The value of the stage as a means of radical and revolutionary propaganda is better understood on the continent of Europe than among English speaking peoples. Whatever has been achieved in this direction, either in England or America, has been due largely to the genius and efforts of Mr. Bernard Shaw whose play, the "Devil's Disciple," is now being presented by the Theatre Guild at the Great Northern Theatre. Mr. Shaw is far from being a revolutionist in this play, but here, as always, his pen is the pen of a social rebel.

"The Devil's Disciple" is an attack on 'Puritanism', a form of religious faith and practice not so dead as we radicals like to believe. As one watched the interesting presentation of last Monday evening one felt that it would be hard to duplicate Mrs. Dudgeon, no; nor Uncle William, nor Uncle Titus, in any evangelical church in Chicago.

The players themselves were, of course, not equally convincing; they never are. Mr. Sydney as Dick Dudgeon, and Miss O'Brien Moore as Judith Anderson, fulfilled our highest expectations. Miss Johann as Essie, and Mr. Hughes as Anthony Anderson were distinct disappointments. Mr. Croker King as "Gentlemanly Johnnie" played a charming role charmingly. The cast as a whole worked with that grace and finish which we never failed to find in Guild performances.

The organization of the Theatre Guild marks an epoch in the development of the theatre in these states. Socially significant plays had been in existence almost half a century. They had been translated and read and sporadically produced but the Guild was the first group to undertake systematically their production on the professional stage. It has continued this effort six years, and its companies have vistied Chicago three times.

Their most notable visit was last season, in Karel Capek's "R. U. R.", the most powerful satire on modern capitalism ever staged. To see "R. U. R." is to gain a new sense of the blended terror and majesty of labor's struggle. The Robots are resistless; numbers and intelligent guidance have made them so. They are without pity; capitalist civilization has willed it so. Their one passion is hate; pain has taught them that. Their one purpose is work; they understand no other, until they learn—REVOLT! And when they do revolt and conquer, what then? What is it all for? The answer is found in the epilogue.

I wish the Labor Defense Council all possible success in its plan to stage this wonderful tragi-comedy again next April. I am glad, too, that the play is to be intepreted by a group of young actors who realize its value, not alone as a better type of drama but as a message to the great working class.

Role of Robots Under New Machine Age Treated in Survey

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, Mar. 5.—In issuing what they call a Giant Power number, the editors of the Survey Graphic have attempted to forecast on the basis of technical experience the social changes which will emerge from the mechanical revolution now in progress. The March issue of this publication contains material of primary concern to labor. Numerous articles, prepared under the supervision of Robert W. Bruere, director Bureau of Industrial Research, suggest some of the hard nuts in the sphere of engineering, which the organized workers will have to crack.

Aside from questions of technology, the magazine tries to analyze the role of the robot in the dawning machine age. A series of illustrations by Joseph Stella suggest, more vividly than any of the illuminating articles, the meaning of the phrase, Giant Power.

SOCIALISTS HEAR COMMUNIST TALK BY MRS. STOKES

S. P. Failed in Crisis, She Points Out

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, Mar. 5.—Rose Pastor Stokes addressed a large meeting in the auditorium of the Rand School, under the auspices of the Saturday Comeraderie, an open forum maintained by the New York branch of the League for Industrial Democracy—which was once known as the Inter-Collegiate Socialist Society.

Mrs. Stokes, keeping close to her subject, "Why I Am a Communist," opened with an outline of her early life and those influences which brought her, in 1906, into the Socialist Party. She continued the story thru the years of service there—as also in the one-time Intercollegiate Socialist Society—to the time when the left wing developed and she discovered there was a Socialist machine that preferred to throw out the majority of its members rather than yield to the revolutionary rank and file.

She reviewed the events in Chicago, in 1919, when the left wing delegates were thrown out of the Socialist Party convention, and connected up the treachery of the American Socialist Party with that of the Social-Revolutionaries of Russia during the early months of 1917 and in their later role as counter-revolutionaries. She described the role of the yellow German Social-Democracy and other socialist parties of Europe "which, when there is any leaning to do, always lean strongly to the bourgeois right, but never to the proletarian left."

Communists Face Realities.

She proved to the satisfaction of the large audience that the Communists faced realities, while the socialists turned in fear away from them or else were too sentimental to recognize them. No revolutionary worker should stay in the Socialist party which had dwindled to a controlling element—a handful of petty bourgeois politicians. She talked of the Workers Party and the character of its leadership and its rank and file. She said she was proud and glad to belong to a company of men and women, who in a crisis, were not concerned with saving their own skins, but only with directing the workers' struggles and affecting workers' unity, regardless of the price they personally had to pay.

At the close of her talk, Comrade Stokes was greeted with hearty applause. Discussion and questions which followed lasted long past the closing hour.

"No Difference," Shiplicoff.

Abraham Shiplicoff of the Socialist Party, maintained in reply that there was really at bottom no difference between the socialists and the communists—that they both believed in the same thing. Comrade Stokes reminded him that not lip-sevice and phrases counted, but actions, and again went into further history of the betrayers who adhered to the 2 1-2 International, sabotaging every effort of the revolutionary workers to form a united working class front against the capitalist enemy.

Several Russian Social-Revolutionaries were present who attempted to defend the Kerensky group against their own record by citing their ancient sacrifices to the cause of the Russian revolution. In reply Comrade Stokes said, simply: "Babushka, sacrificing for the ideal of the revolution, was glorious; Babushka, turning from the actual revolution was pitiable!" This brought enthusiastic response from the audience.

C. E. C. Sustains Hendin Expulsion Denying His Appeal

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has sent the following letter to Leon Hendin, a former member of the Workers Party in New York, who appealed to the C. E. C. against his expulsion from the Party:

Leon Hendin, New York City.

Dear Comrade: Your letter addressed to the Central Executive Committee of the Party complaining because of the manner of your expulsion from the Party was considered by C. E. C. and I am instructed to make the following reply:

Upon receipt of the information that J. B. Salutsky had called a meeting in New York City for the organization of a Communist Educational League, the C. E. C. notified the New York district organizer that any member of the Party who participated in this meeting would be expelled from the Party and directed him to notify those persons who were scheduled to speak at the meeting to this effect. Undoubtedly in the interview on December 19th with Comrade Lifschitz, to which you refer in your letter, you were advised of the decision of the C. E. C.

Comrade Lifschitz later reported that in spite of the warning issued by the C. E. C. of the Party you had participated in the meeting of the Communist Educational League, and the C. E. C. of the party thereupon directed your expulsion from the party.

Since the question at issue was one which was handled directly by the C. E. C. and involved the discipline of the Party, in fact that your act was a violation of the direction of the C. E. C., there was no further need of action on the part of the branch, and the C. E. C. therefore believes that the action of the branch was justified and insofar as it is concerned, the matter is closed.

Fraternally yours,
C. E. Ruthenberg
Executive Secretary.

Why Hide?

The investigation of the Fall leases of the naval oil reserves involves the most vital interests of the working and farming masses of the country. Big as the natural resources at stake, in the crooked transactions between a clique of government officials and the Doheny-Sinclair band may be, there are infinitely more important phases to this investigation.

No one can seriously dispute the fact that the disclosures to date have already made it clear, even to the most cynical, that the Teapot Dome affair has brought into bold relief the whole question of the role of government in our economic class society. More than ever before, great masses of workers and farmers are beginning to be convinced that the whole governmental system of this country is unfitted to respond to the interest of those who work.

Under these circumstances, the workers and farmers must demand that the Teapot Dome investigation proceed in the open. We must force the Government to hold the hearings of the Walsh Committee openly, so that the laboring and farming masses can get as much information and enlightenment as possible out of the proceedings which concern them more vitally than any other social group.

It is a crime for the Government to permit the continuation of secret sessions by the Public Lands Committee. The investigators have no right to conceal any information from the workers. The committee should go to the root of the matter and stop holding sessions behind closed doors. There is no room for secrecy in dealing with the fate and resources of the hundred million workers and farmers of the nation.

Hughes' Purity

Many people ask why our Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, has not yet been drawn into the oil scandal. The failure to subpoena Hughes whose State Department is notorious for its services to the Standard Oil interests, has given many the belief that this bewhiskered savant of international capitalist oil diplomacy has clean hands.

If the Norris resolutions are ever complied with by the State Department the country will be treated to substantial information about the extent to which Mr. Hughes has oil on his hands. But we believe that there is already sufficient evidence at hand to warrant the calling of our Secretary of State for a thoro cross examination by the Teapot committee.

Some time ago Mr. Hughes recommended the acceptance of a house for the American embassy in Mexico City at the hands of Mr. Doheny. In view of the fact that oil has been the major factor in the foreign policies of our State Department, we feel certain that this Mexican incident necessitates the immediate examination of Mr. Hughes. The conduct of the government in Colombia, Turkey, Mexico, and in the question of Russian recognition betrays a stranglehold by the most powerful oil interests on the State Department. The relations between Mr. Hughes and these oil magnates and the dealings between other cabinet members and the Sinclair-Doheny group are closely interlaced.

The Public Lands committee has summoned witnesses for less substantial reasons than are present in the case of Mr. Hughes. We demand that our Secretary of State be immediately subpoenaed and that full light be shed on his dealings with the Doheny and other oil interests.

Perfectly Legal

We fervently hope that the workers and farmers will not fall a prey to the loud wailings of illegality now being raised by many liberal purists against the Fall leases. In these days of history and hysteria it's no easy task to avoid being buncoed when so many traps are set for the unitiated.

Yet we will take a chance on saying that after the lid is put on the Teapot, the Coolidge oil investigators won't find much evidence of illegality in the whole filthy transaction. Moral turpitude and ethical corruption are one thing and proving criminal guilt is quite another. Already, we have been told that the committee hasn't a single document affording it a necessary legal basis on which to prosecute in the courts. The documents needed to enable successful prosecution have been stolen in the usual manner that precedes legal actions in political scandals.

And a prominent Republican has boasted to the writer that, to date, "there isn't a thing that they have got on Fall" on which they could convict him. As a matter of fact, this republican spellbinder and legal expert even contended that he felt certain that "competent counsel" could show that Fall and Denby acted entirely within the law and that "the Government actually made profit on the leases." Let no one fear that Fall will not have "competent counsel."

To those who are not aware of the primary function of capitalist government this might sound strangely incomprehensible. However, we have seen the government too much at work to forget that the role of the State under capitalism is to maintain and perpetuate the present private property system and its attendant exploitation of the great mass of expropriated rural and city workers. The great steal perpetrated by our cabinet officers with the able assistance of several senators and congressmen is perfectly legal because it very well falls in line with the general capitalist purpose of securing iron-clad control of the natural resources and the means of production and exchange.

The Capitalist Courts

That the courts are tools in the hands of the employers against the workers is now recognized as an axiomatic truth by a great section of the working class.

The other day the Supreme Court denied the petition of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen for a review of the injunction granted the Pacific Electric Railway during the 1918 strike. This decision of the Supreme Court is tantamount to a ukase preventing the workers from organizing into unions.

At this time while so many people are optimistic that the courts will mete out punishment to the despoilers of the country's oil reserves and other natural resources, it is particularly appropriate to rip the veil off the judiciary. Our aristocrats of the robe hiding behind the thinnest of judicial abstractions are the most reliable servants of the employing class. In the code of our court system property comes first. The decision against the railway workers is based on the belief of the Supreme Court Judges that in this particular instance property would be seriously endangered if the workers were permitted to organize. Likewise, we would not be surprised to find the courts declaring Fall, Doheny, McLean, Burns, and men of their ilk, innocent because a decision against them would tend to discredit the property system they represent.

An examination of the record of our state and federal courts shows very clearly that our judges as a class, come from the employer group, that the courts protect the giant robberies committed by the capitalists, that they are too expensive for the poor, even if the workers could put trust in them, and that they serve to help the employing class against the working class.

When the Supreme Court refused to review the petition of the Railway unions, it was simply pursuing its time-dishonored policy of serving the capitalist class in decisive tests of strength against the exploited masses. In the eyes of the courts the solidarity of the workers is a crime. The court system with its appointed judges and life-long terms of office tenure is a dictatorship of those who own over those who work. The Supreme Court is the apex of this strike breaking state machinery—the government of, by, and for the bosses against the workers and poor farmers.

The Unholy Trinity

The role played by the three fiendish enemies of organized labor, Palmer, Daugherty and Burns, is one of the outstanding revelations of the oil scandal, in so far as the working class is concerned.

In the annals of the American working class there could not be found three more notorious foes of the workers and farmers than this galaxy of strikebreakers. Yet, it is these very individuals, who have overworked themselves suppressing the labor movement in the name of "law and order," that have now been caught doing the dirtiest work in the whole filthy Teapot mess. Former Attorney-General Palmer who proclaimed his anxiety for the security of the country far and wide and threw into jails hundreds of innocent workingmen, has been shown to be the guardian angel of McLean and Sinclair, two of the most daring plunderers of the country's resources.

Harry M. Daugherty, the attorney-general who threatened to call the whole army into action against the railway workers, and who organized an army of 6,000 strike-breaking deputy marshals and perhaps an even larger number of nondescript detective-gangsters in order to smash the shop craft strike, has now been exposed as the arch-protector of the Doheny clique.

William J. Burns, whose name spells infamy and disgust to every workingman in this country, has been compelled to confess publicly his crooked relations with the oil thieves.

The next time that any officer of the government, whether he be democratic, republican, or liberal, takes any steps against the workers and farmers movements in this country, it will be very much in order for the workingmen to find out who are the real masters of these self-proclaimed saviors.

On the basis of our past experience, particularly with this strikebreaking trinity of Palmer, Daugherty and Burns, we can safely say that it will invariably be found that those who are most vociferous in their declaration of loyalty to the government and in their insistence on law and order, are the most energetic defenders of the millionaire capitalist criminals and the most dangerous enemies of the working class.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a peasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. The Communist company is summoned. The last issue ends with the counter-revolutionary forces bursting into the house of the druggist Senator, a room of which has been commandeered by the communists for Comrade Robeiko. Lisa, a school teacher gazes at the mob with horror-stricken eyes.—NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

• • • •

ROBEIKO, in his underclothes, a bloody weal cutting across his face, stood with his hands bound, barefoot on the cold floor.

Repin was immediately in front of Robeiko; Lisa saw his eagle's nose in profile. As always, he was cleanly shaved, but, instead of his Red Army helmet, he was wearing a black fur hat with a blue ribbon; he was smoking and slashing with a nagaika (whip) at his polished boots. Lisa, glancing at the nagaika, knew at once the origin of the weal on Robeiko's face.

And there, from Repin to Robeiko, from Robeiko to Repin, shaking his fists in Robeiko's face, shouting and gesticulating, was Senator, little and fat, in a blue waistcoat without a coat. . . .

"Ha! Comrade Robeiko! Now I can talk to you. . . . Once more, as an equal to an equal. Do you hear, you convict, as an equal to an equal? Your robber band requisitioned my shop. . . . I said nothing. You searched me, arrested me for speculation. . . . I said nothing. You forcibly planted yourself in my house and did not pay rent. . . . Still I said nothing.

What Do You Think of Our First Story?

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have published many installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its character, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

What could I do? Weren't you the Vice . . . Vice-Pres-Ex-Com or the Vice-Pres-Ex-Sov, devil take you together with all your titles! . . . A whole Governor! . . ."

Lack of breath interrupted Raphael Antonovitch, but he took breath and screamed still shriller:

"Now is the end of you. They will shoot you all, like mad dogs, and tomorrow I shall take down the placard from my shop. Do you hear? From my shop. Yes, I am rich. You hear, I am a bourgeois, and always will be one. . . . You were a ragamuffin vagabond and always will be. . . . You say nothing? Speak, Comrade Robeiko, since you are such a good orator. Make a speech, please, for the last time. We'd like to hear you. . . ."

Senator made an artificial, respectful bow to Robeiko. Repin smiled. The bandits laughed loudly. Lisa heard a malicious tittering and in the door of the kitchen saw the laughing face of Madam Senator, her grinning teeth, the wrinkles round her eyes, and a yellow dressing gown with purple flowers.

"You say nothing, you say nothing," Senator bellowed. "Take this!" and he spat a great lump of spittle in Robeiko's face.

Robeiko broke away, but a black-bearded peasant caught him by the shoulders and Robeiko struggled helplessly in his hands, while Senator's spittle trickled down his forehead and into his eyes. Robeiko could not even wipe away the poisonous stuff, for his hands were bound. With scorn and hatred he looked round the mocking crowd, and, looking by accident in Lisa's direction, caught sight of her pale face in the doorway, and smiled. . . . And from this smile Lisa knew that tho Robeiko was suffering from the blows and the insults, his spirit was unbroken, he was not afraid and he scorned his enemies. It seemed to Lisa that Robeiko was smiling because he was remembering their talk in the evening.

The smile woke Lisa from her stupor, and with terrible screams she threw herself on Repin and caught him by the hand.

"Comrade Repin, why are you torturing him? He wished well to the people . . . and to all of you," she cried, turning to the bandits. "He was on your side, for the peasants and workers. . . ."

Laughter and curses drowned her words.

And Repin, the elegant Repin, so handsome and kindly, pushed her away with his full strength, so that she fell against the wall while he cursed her cynically and at length.

"To the devil with this foolery! Take him out, lads, into the street, and there get rid of him at once, sharp now."

The crowd poured out of the door; Lisa, holding her head, got up from the floor.

"You shoving your nose in too," cried Madam Senator. "She, Mr. Officer, is a Bolshevik." And Mr. Senator shook her by the shoulder. Just then a shot sounded in the yard. Lisa knew they were shooting Robeiko, and screamed so piercingly that even Repin was startled and shaken, and, breaking from the clutching hands of Senator, she ran down the staircase into the dark court. On the steps she ran into a heap of clothes, in which, with groans and sobs a human body was struggling. She stopped, and on the stone threshhold saw the face of Robeiko, dripping with blood. Screaming still louder, she rushed from the yard into the street. Two shots crashed in pursuit of her.

Lisa ran to the end of the block, turned into a quiet side street, ran to the middle of the long block, and stopped, breathless. She listened. No one was coming after her. The little houses were quiet and dark, only, from somewhere far away, she could clearly hear the sound of rifle fire. Now and again came the regular tapping of a machine gun. From time to time the wind blew, and Lisa, with nothing on over her tunic, grew cold, and shivers ran down her spine and thru her arms.

She walked on mechanically, and wept quietly, the tears pouring down her cheeks and falling in the snow. The fit of horror caused by contact with the squirming body of Robeiko had now passed.

In this way, forgetful of herself, she walked for a very long time, mechanically hiding her hands in the opposite sleeves. It was already growing light when she was walking by some grey palings over which drooped the naked boughs of trees.

Suddenly she shivered and stood still, as if nailed to the spot. On the blue snow, close under the railing, she saw some sort of formless heap. It seemed to her that again she saw the outlines of a human body.

(To Be Continued Friday)

The Communist International

By ROBERT MINOR.

ON the 5th of March, 1919, came together in Moscow the group that founded the Communist International. Russia was beleaguered at the time. The kind of men and women who go to Moscow for revolutionary purposes could not have easy passage to the borders of that country. The great capitalist nations had just finished the war and were planning to clean up its debris in crushing out the revolution. Russia was practically sealed by a "sanitary cordon." The little gathering which formed the Communist International was, therefore, not made up entirely of persons sent there for the purpose. But all were men and women known to be representative in some respect of the revolutionary workers of their respective countries.

It was a little handful. But it was initiated by a party that had a revolution to its credit—the Russian Communist Party.

It was the fashion among the established leaders of socialism thruout the world to jeer at this little new International. Grown fat and given the illusion of strength thru their support by bourgeois governments, the "socialist" party leaders of all countries were contemptuous. "Why form another International?" they cried. "Haven't we already an International a thousand times as strong as this contemptible gathering of nondescript outlaws in Russia? We want no oriental socialism. Lenin's attempt to build a rival International can only fail."

But those who formed the Communist International knew the incurable corruption of the old International and the hopeless cowardice of its leaders. The Communists knew that the Second International was an empty shell, sucked dry by the capitalist governments. Knowing that the workers inevitably would have a revolutionary proletarian International, they foresaw that their efforts could and would bring this about.

In the five years that have followed, the Communist International has grown to be the one and only revolutionary force in every important country in the world. The yellow socialists' Second International has ceased to be a factor in history except as a very dangerous counter-revolutionary machine for the use of capitalist governments. Everywhere now as a matter of course "revolution" means communist revolution. Even the stupidest of press dispatches never use the word "socialist" in description of revolutionary manifestations and upheavals. The whole world understands that there is no kind of revolutionist in the working class except a Communist. Anarchists are already a harmless and even half-respectable philosophical sect in many countries, and are dangerous to capitalism only where and when the co-operate with the Communists. Socialists for many months have not been heard from except as factors in crushing working-class discontent.

The little gathering in Moscow that founded the Communist International on March 5, 1919, has fathered a giant. The great World Congresses of the Communist International are the most important events in present-day history. They overshadow all the attempted "world-conferences" of capitalist governments, which always adjourn without accomplishing their aims. The Congresses of the Communist International, and the Executive Committee of the Communist International between Congresses, are the factor that decides historical questions. Now we must know that the Communist International is destined to be the instrument thru which the working class takes possession of the earth. To it alone belongs the loyalty of working men and women in all lands. It alone can free mankind. It is fast developing the strength to do so. All shoulders to the wheel! Long live the Communist International!

Olgin Greets International as Beacon Light to the New World

By MOISSAYE J. OLGIN

(By telegraph) New York City, March 5, 1924.

OUT of destruction wrought by the world war—out of hatred engendered by mass murder and provocation—out of despair created by the collapse of the Second International—after the failure of the Socialist Party to live up to the ideals of the proletarian class struggle, arose the Third (Communist) International, the hope of the working class the world over.

It has become the rallying point of all forces struggling against capitalist dictatorship. It has become a beacon of light for all who see a new world in the making. It has become a source of strength to all who hammer together the scattered forces of the working class into one formidable army. It has become the headquarters of one great world party with unified ideology, a uniform line of action, iron clad discipline, and a hitherto unknown revolutionary proletarian pride.

In the name of my comrades I greet the Communist International and the Workers Party on the Fifth Anniversary of the founding of the Third International. Our hearts, our hopes, our admiration, our devotion are with it, and with the proletariat that struggles under its banner. Long live the Communist International—the liberator of mankind.

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

By PROJECTOR.

THE VIRGINIAN.

Owen Wister's novel is made into one of the most insipid pictures ever screened, an impossible hybrid, a polite "Western." The noble cowboy from Virginia woos the Puritan schoolma'am but almost loses her because of his addiction to slaughter and profanity. The lady agrees to overlook these minor faults and the clinch in the last scene is absolutely cut to pattern. There have seldom been two more artificial theatricalists in leading roles than Kenneth Harlan and Florence Vidor in the "Virginian" leads. The sole redeeming features of an otherwise insane effort are the gorgeous natural settings. The picture would be infinitely improved if all subtitles and set shots were cut out. As a two reel nature-study film it would be a real "feature."

For Workers' Vacations.

PRAGUE, March 5.—A new bill, submitted to parliament here, provides that every laborer shall be granted an annual vacation with pay, the length of the holiday being ascertained by the worker's period of employment.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

The scurrilous attack made on Calvin Coolidge by Senator Caraway, deeply offended the dignified Chicago Evening Post. To call a president, "Cautious Cal" is going a little too far. Head hunting hysteria is gone on a rampage in the senate. Graft investigations if they have to be conducted, should at least be carried out in a gentlemanly manner between gentlemen, argues the Post. By the way we see at the mast head of the esteemed Post the name of a Mr. Shaffer who received a trifle over $90,000 for—nothing at all except the knowledge that the Teapot Dome was to be leased. He simply walked in and told the oil men he was entitled to get his share of anything that was going as well as the rest.

• • •

Of course this fact has nothing to do with the editorial views of the Post. Newspaper owners do not determine the policy of their papers. Perish the thought. It only happens that the editorial writer and the owners have minds that run in the same channels.

• • •

Lloyd George was as big a man in his own country, a few years ago as Woodrow Wilson was in his. When he spoke, people listened. Some listen now; the credulous nod of other days is now turned into a skeptical shake of the head. Lloyd George has still a big enough audience to make it a paying proposition to hire him as a special writer for the Hearst papers. He is very much of a realist and tho he is a political crook once in a while he enjoys the luxury of telling the truth, particularly when such innocent diversion does not add to the glory of his enemies.

• • •

Speaking in West Hartepool, England, recently, he made some observations on Ramsay MacDonald and the British Labor Party which contain more truth than poetry. He likened the prime minister to an air squadron leader of Socialism who spent most of his time in the clouds but who has now joined the infantry and is sobered because he has to carry a knapsack. His speech as prime minister said Mr. George had "all the restraints, reservations and compromises which mundane statesmen hitherto have indulged in. When I heard MacDonald, who had indulged in the shrillest notes, pitching his tune so low and imitating the very modest notes from less pretentious singers, it recalled the memory of many a cracked tenor who had been forced to become a baritone."

• • •

Lloyd George made it quite clear that should the present government attempt to translate into law any of the important planks on which they made their campaign for office, the Tories and Liberals would unite to kick them out of office. Now, this is illuminating and justifies the conclusion that the British Labor Party is suffered in office by the two avowedly capitalist parties because the yellow socialists and the liberal lords, dukes and barons who make up the cabinet can serve the master class of England better at this moment than either the Tories or Liberals, who are unpopular with the masses.

"We are free to criticize and censure as well as to approve and support," Lloyd George declared. "In essence the Tory attitude toward the labor government is identical with the liberal attitude." In other words the eloquent Welshman compares the British reactionary socialist group to a courtesan who is patronized by friendly rivals, in this case two capitalist parties, who support the yellow socialist lady of complacent virtue so long as her charms can be enjoyed to the satisfaction of both or until a successful rival appears in the house of assignation known as the Commons."

• • •

The Chicago Evening Journal re marks that even tho the estimabl Harry M. Daugherty is as welcom in the Coolidge cabinet "as a skun at a picnic," "Silent Cal" and hi gang fear to show him the gate ex cept by such delicate hints that th obtuse Harry cannot catch them Even Brother William J. Burns, th greatest red head hunter out of cap tivity, instead of investigating th thieves was busy investigating th investigators and tipping the crim inals off. This is a serious situatio but there is no reason to get excite over it, declares the Chicago Trib une. What is a little graft in rich country like this? And any how, is not the capitalist syste founded on the worst kind of rob bery, that of the workers who a exploited at the point of productio and compelled to turn over th greater part of what they produc every week to the employers? the total sum robbed in this manne were computed daily the amoun would stagger the American worker and make the looting connected wit the Teapot Dome seem trifling.

• • •

Harry Sinclair not alone receive United States government oil fro the genial Mr. Fall but he also s cured a customer. While the senat committee is digging up crooks i its daily struggle with the maste crooks, Mr. Sinclair is sending up th stock of the Sinclair Consolidate Oil Corporation by telling the wor that he has built several new pi lines and storage tanks at Port mouth, N. H., the cost of whic will be paid from profits on Teap Dome oil. Portsmouth is a nav station. Sinclair should worry. W are reasonably assured that no se ator will threaten the sacred pro system by prosecuting a man wh could run his business in such a pr fitable manner.

BIG PLANS FOR DAILY WORKER ANNOUNCED

Future Looks Bright For Toiler's Newspaper

THE DAILY WORKER, the only militant working class daily newspaper published in the English language, will soon be housed in its own building, and published in its own printing plant, as a result of the purchase of the four-story stone building located at 1113 W. Washington St., Chicago, by the DAILY WORKER PUBLISHING COMPANY.

This will be cheering news to all the friends of THE DAILY WORKER, as it gives the paper a guarantee of permanence, and insures its development into a powerful institution for the spreading of workingclass propaganda.

Negotiations have been carried on for some time past for the purchase of the building, but the information has not been made public until the deal was closed. Now The DAILY WORKER makes the announcement in the belief that those who contributed money to help start their paper will enjoy the knowledge that it is firmly established thru the ownership of the plant.

Have Up-to-date Plant.

An up-to-date plant that will be capable of turning out everything from a daily paper to a circular will be installed at once. When this task is completed The DAILY WORKER Publishing Co. will be one of the best equipped small printing plants in the country. It will have facilities for turning out several weeklies, magazines and books and do other printing in addition to the printing of The DAILY WORKER.

Every piece of machinery that goes into the new plant will be owned free from any indebtedness. However, in order to finance the purchase of the building it has been necessary to take out a mortgage. If the militants who have not yet bought stock in The DAILY WORKER Publishing Co., will come forward at once and do their share by purchasing at least one share of DAILY WORKER stock at $5.00 a share, even that obligation can be wiped out. Every militant who has the welfare of the labor movement at heart, will certainly make every effort now to complete the job which thousands of workers have started. Workers Party branches who have not completed their quota in sales of DAILY WORKER stock should canvass their membership at once and collect from every member who has not yet done his share.

Will Stimulate Circulation.

It is anticipated that the purchase of the building and the installation of the printing plant will also stimulate the circulation of The DAILY WORKER. The militants have assumed a great obligation in the establishment of so big an undertaking as an English daily. Up to now they have responded enthusiastically to their obligation. But even more work must be done now. Certainly the basis for a subscription campaign thruout the entire country has been laid in the excellence of The DAILY WORKER itself and now made more powerful in the concrete assets of a building and printing plant.

The phenomenal success of The DAILY WORKER since Jan. 13, when the first issue appeared, and the tremendous hold it has gained on the affections of the workers of America bodes good for its rapid advancement in the future.

Every militant a share holder in The DAILY WORKER!

Every militant a subscriber and a subscription solicitor for The DAILY WORKER. These are the slogans under which the revolutionary American workers are going forward to new struggles and to greater victories.

Business Badly Hurt.

WHITING, Ind., March 6.—Net earnings of the Standard Oil of Indiana during 1923 fell off approximately $5,000,000 from the preceding year, according to the balance sheets issued today at the annual meeting of the stockholders here.

HOWAT BARRED FROM DISTRICT 14 CONVENTION

Lewis Gang Close the Session to Public

By TOM TIPPETT.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

PITTSBURGH, Kan., March 6.—There are 140 delegates attending the convention of District 14, United Mine Workers of America, which opened here March 4. This delegation represents approximately 9,000 paid up members of the miners' organization. When Alexander Howat was district president before the Kansas industrial court clash, there was a 100 per cent organization with a 12,000 membership.

The convention fireworks began early. In the first day's session at the noon adjournment the chair announced that all sessions would be closed except to regular delegates and the press. This barred Howat and the officials of the old organization, who had been ousted by the international. With many other non-delegate miners, the Howat group was in attendance at the morning session. All previous Kansas conventions have been open to the public.

At the morning session District President Wm. Brogart read his report. It covered his term in office, Jan. 1, 1923, to Feb. 29, 1914. The provisional organization, set up by the international board when the District 14 charter was revoked, was in power here 15 months prior to the present administration.

IMPEACH COOLIDGE!

Military Ordered Probe of Ku Klux Terror in Cairo, Ill.

CAIRO, Ill., March 6.—Major W. P. Greaney of the Illinois national guard today was ordered to investigate conditions around Elco, Ill., near here, where a tense situation exists as the result of a campaign of terrorism waged by gangs of white men to scare imported Negroes out of the county.

There is a probability that troops may be ordered to Elco, it was said. Negroes' houses have been fired into and others burned and dynamited in the last few weeks.

High Bread Cost Is Hit by Communist Demonstration in Paris

PARIS, March 6.—A mass demonstration against the high cost of bread and the proposed new taxes was organized here by the Communist Party. Humanite, organ of the party, urged all opponents of the present policy of the government on these two matters to assemble before the Church of the Madeleine. Despite the fact that the police tried to choke the demonstration in its inception, thousands of workers appeared, undaunted by police threats, and met until dispersed forcibly.

Successor for Daugherty.

ST. LOUIS, March 6.—Friends of Attorney General Barrett of Missouri, are trying to land him in the chair expected to be vacated soon by Attorney General Daugherty. Seven judges of the state supreme court joined in a telegram urging the appointment of Barrett. All but one of the supreme judges are Democrats, while Barrett is an old guard Republican.

McAdoo Manager Demands That All Donkey Jockeys Go Thru Financial Delousing Process

Senatorial investigation of every Democratic presidential candidate was demanded here today by David Ladd Rockwell, campaign manager for William Gibbs McAdoo.

In a prepared statement, Rockwell declared it was only fair for the Senate to find out how the other Democratic candidates made their money, inasmuch as McAdoo has submitted to examination.

"What is fair for one is fair for all," Rockwell declared.

"Why should not Senator Reed, Missouri, for instance, tell the Senate committee the names of his clients and the amounts of fees he received from them since he has become a member of the Senate? He might discuss his relations with Samuel Fordyce of St. Louis; he might tell of the Frisco merger.

"Then there is ex-Governor Cox, of Ohio, who might go on the stand and tell how he made his money.

"Senator Underwood is a lawyer and has clients. Who are they?

"John W. Davis is a lawyer with clients."

Rockwell declared he was much impressed with the "generalness of the favorable reaction," for McAdoo he has found in the past few weeks.

T. U. E. L. CALLS FOR SUPPORT OF GARMENT STRIKE

Urges Reinstatement of Expelled Members

A very striking feature of this struggle between the clothing bosses and the garment workers is the splendid example of solidarity and self-sacrifice displayed by those who were expelled from the union recently for membership in the Trade Union Educational League. Accused of being "disrupters," their action since the calling of the strike has proved to everybody that these charges were groundless. On the contrary, even those who expelled them, had to admit that they are among the most active workers in this strike.

The Trade Union Educational League in a statement issued yesterday calls attention to this feature of the present strike and called on the members of the I. L. G. W. U. to stand firm in supporting the strike, solidify the ranks of the union and make for real solidarity by reinstating the expelled members. The statement follows:

"The exposure of State's Attorney Crowe as an agent of the clothing employers to crush the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union is but another proof of the correctness of the policies of the Trade Union Educational League. With all the employers' associations united against them using in addition to private thugs and gunmen the officials of the government, the garment workers should more than ever realize the need of amalgamation of all the needle trades unions into one powerful organization, and political unity of all labor into a great labor party.

"Those same members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union associated with the Trade Union Educational League, who were expelled for propaganda within the unions, for Amalgamation and a Labor Party, are now proving their sterling services to the strike that they can fight for the smallest needs of the workers as well as for those larger needs, industrial unionism and political solidarity which are now more than ever a crying necessity.

"Workers! The Trade Union Educational League calls upon you to support the strike and at the same time to unite your union more closely by reinstating the expelled members.

"(Signed)

"The Trade Union Educational League."

Senator Declares People Will Shudder and Tremble at the Latest Revelations

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—President Coolidge became the central figure about which a series of startling disclosures and new sensations in the oil scandal revolved today.

A telegram signed "Calvin Coolidge" and addressed to Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, was read into the oil scandal record as the foremost sensation in the committee's developments today. The telegram was sent from Washington to Palm Beach while McLean was there with former secretary of the interior Fall as his guest.

It read:

"January 12:

"E. B. McLean, Palm Beach, Fla.:

"Prescott is away. Advise Slemp with whom I shall confer.

"Calvin Coolidge."

C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to the president, was in Florida at that time. He has already testified that he attended several dinner parties with McLean.

Senator Frightened.

A second message from Mr. Coolidge to McLean was as follows:

"The White House, Feb. 12:

"Thank you for your message. You have always been most considerate. Mrs. Coolidge joins me in kindest regards to you and Mrs. McLean."

"The American people will shudder and tremble and further lose confidence in the government, when they read that telegrams passed between President Coolidge and Edward B. McLean," Senator Pat Harrison, Mississippi, said in the senate today.

"It's bad enough when men employed at the White House communicate with McLean, when he admits that he has deceived the country and that the secret codes of the department of justice were used by McLean," said Harrison.

"But when it is known that McLean, with all the guilt heaped on him, seeks out the president of the United States for information, what are we to think?"

The telegram from the president to McLean climaxed a series of smashing sensations which had just preceded reading of the Coolidge message. These included reading of telegrams which disclosed:

That H. E. McKenna, doorkeeper at the White House office, to C. Bascom Slemp, the president's secretary, notified McLean in Palm Beach of Slemp's departure for Florida on the day Slemp left.

Baruch Sends Regards.

That Bernard M. Baruch, New York financier, and prominent figure in the war-time administration, was in communication with McLean at Palm Beach and sent him "affectionate regards."

That Senator Smoot, a member of the senate committee, was in direct communication with Albert B. Fall, chief figure in the scandal.

That William J. Burns, head of the secret service of the department of justice, notified McLean of an investigation of his connection with the department as a "dollar-a-year man.',

The significance of the Coolidge telegram to McLean and the identity of the "Prescott" named in it were not made apparent at the time the message was read.

That Fall and Senator Lenroot, chairman of the senate investigating committee, exchanged messages regarding the summoning of witnesses in the inquiry.

Senator Watson Drawn In.

From W. F. Wiley at Palm Beach to Ira Bennett, editorial writer of the Washington Post, Jan. 24:

"Please see Senator Jim from state adjoining mine and find out if there

COOLIDGE SILENTLY SELECTING SUCCESSOR TO HARRY DAUGHERTY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 6.—Rumor is busy naming probable successors to Attorney General Daugherty. Tho the White House has denied anyone is being considered inasmuch as Daugherty has not resigned, gossip mentions these men:

Judge Wm. S. Kenyon, former senator from Iowa, now on the circuit court of appeals.

Senator Wm. E. Borah, Idaho.

Governor Groesbeck, Michigan.

Borah would not accept the place, it is believed. Groesbeck is due in Washington today and may confer with the president.

Mayor Before Bar of Labor as Paymaster of Crowe's Police: 18 More Bosses Surrendering

Mayor William E. Dever, of Chicago, is before the bar of labor as the paymaster of the strikebreaking police of Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney of Cook County, who has turned his office over to the scab garment employers for the purpose of breaking the dressmakers' strike against the sweatshop system.

The fact that the plainclothes thugs of the state's attorney's office are also on the payroll of the city administration was bared by Oscar Nelson, attorney for the strikers and representative of the postal clerks' union, at the first meeting of the special probe "committee of 15" of the Chicago Federation of Labor, yesterday.

Immediate action was taken by the committee on receipt of this information: a special committee of four was chosen to wait on Mayor Dever—often claimed as a friend of labor—and Chief of Police Collins, this morning to demand a showdown on the strike situation.

The committee that will quiz Dever consists of: Anton Johannsen, chairman of the committee of 15 and representative of the International Brotherhood of Carpenters, Local 1367; John Clay, secretary of the committee and member of the Laundry Drivers' Union; John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and Victor Olander, secretary of the Illinois Federation of Labor.

Dever will have to explain more than his tacit assent to the actions

N. Y. Congressman Scheduled to Speak In Pittsburgh Sunday

Congressman Fireilo La Guardia, of New York, who has taken a prominent part in fighting the anti-alien bills introduced in Congress will be the principal speaker at a mass meeting to be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., on March 9 at 2 p. m., under the auspices of the local Council for the Protection of the Foreign Born.

The meeting will be held in the Labor Temple and has the support of wide circles in the great steel city where the iron hand of capital weighs more heavily on the workers than in any other section in the country.

Councilman Maloney, who has taken a deep interest in the fight for the foreign born workers, will speak with others from unions and fraternal and working-class political parties.

Attorney Anthony Lucas will also speak.

Labor Chief's Warning to Crowe Unanswered as Probing Begins

Reposing in the files of the state's attorney's office is the following letter which John Fitzpatrick wrote to Robert E. Crowe last Saturday directing attention to his outrageous and illegal strikebreaking activities during the present garment strike:

Speaking for the Chicago Federation of Labor, I hereby desire to enter vigorous protest against the actions of your office in connection with the present strike of the Ladies' Garment Workers' International Union.

Information has reached me, which has been substantiated, that you have assigned police officers attached to your office to strike duty. This is an unusual and uncalled for procedure that has never occurred in connection with any strike heretofore. The Chicago Police Department have hundreds of policemen assigned to patrol strike districts.

Fomenting Discord.

The officers form the State's Attorney's office, who are not in uniform, are mingling with the people in the strike district and are deliberately fomenting discord and trouble and are making most of the arrests.

Your officers are arresting working girls, taking them to the Harrison Street police station, having them locked up with prostitutes and instructing the desk sergeant not to book them until they have been held in such company for several hours.

Yesterday, February 29, there were eleven arrests made in connection with this strike and your officers made nine of these arrests. Your officers left instructions at the Harrison Street police station not to book or permit these working girls to be bailed until after 6:00 p. m. This is a clear violation of the constitutional right of citizens.

This morning, March 1, your officers arrested six girls before 9 o'clock and left instructions in the name of the State's Attorney's office not to permit these girls to be booked or bailed out until afternoon. In the meantime these innocent wage earners are confined in company with prostitutes and others in custody at the South Clark street police station.

At 11 o'clock this morning one of your officers took into custody a striker by the name of Mr. Weiss and your officer brought him to the State's Attorney's office, where he was detained for more than two hours without warrant of law.

Servant of Employers.

We have much evidence which proves your desire to serve the interests of that element of employers who seek the disruption of the trade union movement. We had hoped, however, that you would have some regard for womanhood and that there was some limit at which you would stop in your desire to serve the interests of unfair employers.

To permit your office to be used in persecuting young girls and women who are in a contest to improve their working conditions, to suffer the indignity of unwarranted arrest, brutal handling by your officers, and confinement in police stations in company with unfortunate women, is surely beyond the limitation of anything that might be considered decent.

Coolidge Surely Stands By His Pals, Sinclair, Doheny and Fall

WASHINGTON, March 6.—President Coolidge today notified the Senate he could not submit to the oil investigating committee the income tax returns of Harry F. Sinclair, F. L. Doheny and Albert B. Fall, as requested by the Senate in the McKellar resolution.

Mr. Coolidge said he had been advised by acting Attorney-General Seymour that submission of these returns to the committee would violate the law.

HEARST WRITER GETS YEARLY PAY OF $200,000

Arthur Brisbane Is Big Real Estate Operator

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 6.—Not only does Arthur Brisbane turn out more paragraphs than any columnist in the United States but he also makes oodles of money out of real estate, which is his favorite outdoor sport.

Millions of Americans read his paragraphs daily. It is true his writings are more and more taking on the character of advertising boosts and thus losing the confidence of former admirers to the author. However, he has a sufficiently large audience to induce William Randolph Hearst paying him $200,000 a year, the largest salary paid to any editorial writer in this or any other country.

Arthur Brisbane was once a radical but he is now so conservative that it is doubtful if he would even satisfy the membership requirements of the Socialist Party. And it is not surprising. Brisbane's real estate deals have been so successful that he is now in the millionaire class.

When our readers happen to stumble on a Brisbane paragraph extolling the climate of Los Angeles or the business opportunities existing in Detroit, or the advantages of living in New York City he should know that the motives of the famous writer may not be entirely altruistic, Mr. Brisbane being a heavy owner of real estate in each of the above named beauty spots.

A list of Mr. Brisbane's holdings would disclose some of the choicest morsels of real estate in New York City. He plans to put up a building costing several millions on Madison avenue in the near future and has succeeded in interesting Mr. Hearst in several investments in that section.

Brisbane is a scientific student and practitioner of the real estate business. He operates on the same system as does the United States Cigar Company, basing his investment on careful studies of population. It is said by those in close touch with William Randolph Hearst that his increasing conservatism and particularly his open espousal of the Mellon tax plan is due to the urgings of Brisbane, who knows enough about economics to enable him to lie plausibly.

'Gimlet Eye' Found Nary a Flask, for Society Had Tip

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 6.—"Old Gimlet Eye" Butler, out to bag Philadelphia's law violators, fired high today—and missed.

The director of public safety made good his promise to go after the rich and poor alike. A squad of detectives intruded broad flat feet among the dainty slippers of Philly's first families at the bal masque at the Bellevue Stratford early this morning and looked for liquor. They reported they found none whatever.

The first families got a kick out of the affair, however. They had been expecting the raid. So had quite a crowd which gathered outside the hotel.

One society matron, whose dance costume was a bathing suit of exhilarating dimensions, brought a suit of overalls to wear to the station in case she was arrested.

Hindoo Methodist Air Pilots Advised to Descend from Clouds

(By The Federated Press)

CALCUTTA, India, March 6.—Methodist preachers and laymen in India and Burma will be kept busy with their feet on the ground if they carry out the resolutions of their central conference held at Calcutta.

They are told to start co-operative societies, improve economic conditions of the people, to render "every possible assistance to the depressed classes." They are directed to let the employer know about it where workers are suffering injustice, low wages and other abuses. It is true the resolution asks that this be done as politely as possible, but where that doesn't work the church demands that government officials be notified. Ministers are instructed to devote special study to conditions in their districts "where modern industrialism has begun to exploit cheap labor."

Smash the Color Line in the Trade Unions

THE action of the Negro members of the Workers Party in organizing a committee of colored workers to bring Negro dress makers into the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and to block the efforts of the Negro employment agencies that are busily engaged in recruiting strikebreakers from the South is a step that is to be commended.

The fine spirit of solidarity, the willingness to sacrifice and to stand shoulder to shoulder with their white fellow-workers, shown by the colored dress makers in the present strike gives the lie to the theory that the colored workers cannot be organized.

It also brands as a menace to organized labor the policy followed by many unions in the American Federation of Labor, of refusing Negroes admittance into the unions.

Had the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union a color line such as prevails in other A. F. of L. unions, the dress manufacturers would have little difficulty in securing a plentiful supply of cheap scab labor from the South to fill the places of the striking employes.

The prejudice existing in other unions against the organization of the colored workers threatens the very life of unionism. Negroes by the thousand are now being shipped from the South, turned into skilled mechanics and then used to open the closed shops established thru years of strenuous fighting by many unions and compel those working at the trade to accept a cut in wages or seek employment elsewhere.

This is being done in Youngstown, Ohio, and in many other places. There are scores of thousands of Negroes here in Chicago, employed in the heavy industries. The Workers Party, always quick to take the initiative in starting movements that will strengthen the fighting power of the workingclass, has set a splendid example in having its Negro members organize committees for the purpose of blocking a prolific source of scab labor during strikes and cheap labor between strikes.

Chicago labor should take action and get a powerful movement under way to bring the colored workers into the unions and wage relentless war on the old policy of closing the unions to the Negroes thus opening the factories to cheap labor.

SMASH THE COLOR LINE IN THE TRADE UNIONS!

CZARIST RECORD IS OPEN SESAME FOR RUSS 'BARON'

U. S. Breaks Rule for Royce-Garrett

By FREDERICK KUH
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 6.—The expected sequel to the tale of "Baron" Michael Royce-Garrett, czarist counter-revolutionary affairs grew worse his wife, who says she used to sing before Russian Royalty, has been written by immigration officials here.

The opening chapters of this little story, recently related by The Federated Press, describe the self-styled nobleman's checkered and checkmated career.

Fought for Wrangel.

That career attained its climax when, relieved of his land and considerable earthly goods thru the Russian revolution, Royce-Garrett enlisted in the forces of General Wrangel in the hope of restoring the grand old czarist days to all the Russias. Every day, in every way, counter-revolutionary affairs grew worse and worse. Finally, the ill-starred Royce-Garrett, unbefitting the manners of the gentry, left hurriedly for the coast of Africa, hopeful of replenishing his fortunes abroad.

His wanderings ultimately led to Ellis Island, where he was detained this week and faced with deportation, owing to the completion of the Russian immigration quota to this country.

Pleads Czarist Record.

But Royce-Garrett, aided by his wife's theatrical talents, knew that American officialdom has a soft heart for all that is czarist, and he made the most of it. His glorious record as a recruit to counter-revolution turned the trick. While thousands of humbler immigrants, unable or unwilling to enter America by devious paths, are being turned away from American shores, Royce-Garrett and his wife have now been admitted.

If, in addition to his other exploits, Royce-Garrett could have told the officials that he bought the Baku oil fields from the Russian government, he might have been suggested as a successor to our departing attorney-general. But Royce-Garrett's feats of adventure are still young in America. Who knows?

COOLIDGE CALLS IT MERELY "EXCHANGE OF AMENITIES WITH MCLEAN

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—President Coolidge today immediately upon being advised of the publication by the Senate investigating committee of his telegram to E. B. McLean, issued the following statement thru his secretary, C. Bascom Slemp:

"The telegram related to the district commissionership. Samuel J. Prescott is the Republican city chairman and the President desired to confer with him regarding district matters."

With equal dispatch, President Coolidge, upon being informed of the second telegram to McLean read into the committee records, issued a second statement.

"The telegram sent to Mr. McLean on February 12," the statement said, "was in regard to a message from Mr. McLean congratulating the President on his Lincoln birthday address in New York. The telegrams exchanged were similar to others received and sent out in that same connection. It amounts simply to an exchange of amenities."

U. S. Beckons to Turkish Ex-Sultan; Fears Monogamy

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 6.—Some of the ex-Caliph of Turkey's household, harems, eunuchs and all, are going to the United States.

The Caliph himself has said he intends to spend the summer in Switzerland and to go to Egypt next winter.

The ex-Caliph's household, numbering about 100, including attaches and their harems, are leaving today. Some plan to go to America; others fear anti-polygamous laws which they believe might exclude those having two or more wives.

Polish-Lithuanian School War.

WARSAW, March 6.—Poland and Lithuania are conducting a little "educational" war of their own. The Polish government has closed several Lithuanian private schools situated on Polish territory. Thereupon the Lithuanian government has ordered the closing of all Polish schools on Lithuanian territory. The Lithuanian government has also protested to the league of nations, claiming that, in accordance with the terms of the peace treaty, Poland is obliged to safeguard the rights of minorities within her border.

DEVER BEFORE LABOR BAR AS SCAB PAYMASTER

Hit As Paymaster of Crowe's Scab Police

of Crowe's police; he will have to explain the brutality shown by the regular city police who act under the direct authority of his appointee, Chief of Police Collins, and who have been shamelessly allied with the garment bosses during this strike.

Police Brutality.

In a statement after the sessions of the committee of 15 Chairman Johannsen said the special sub-committee would ask Mayor Dever and Chief of Police Collins—with the view of preventing the brutality inflicted on strikers—to have the police activity confined strictly to the enforcement of the law.

Another demand which the unionists will make of Mayor Dever is that every plain clothesman operating in the strike zone, must have a badge on his coat. This is to prevent thugs from passing themselves off as police for the purpose of intimidating the strikers.

18 More Bosses Yield.

The glad news that 18 more shops were about to settle was brought the committee of 15 by Meyer Perlstein, official leader of the garment workers' strike.

These 18 shops, owned by 18 different bosses, belong to the Northwestside Dress Manufacturers' Association, and Perlstein declared that negotiations were practically completed and that official settlement terms would be signed today.

This means 48 bosses who have been brought to terms by the strikers and points to a triumphant termination of the union's fight in the Chicago market, declared Perlstein.

Tells of Violence.

The union's vice-president pointed out that these victories were being won in spite of the gross brutality that was being practiced, both by the mayor's own police and the men attached to Crowe's office. He recited a list of instances of extra legal police violence.

Crowe's own vicious labor record is to be dug up by another sub-committee whose names are not made public. This committee will gather together the mass of evidence linking the state's attorney with the open shop interests during the last six months particularly. Competent counsel will be engaged to uncover the evidence of illegality in his maladministration of his office towards the labor movement.

"Owned Body and Soul."

The viewpoint of the Federation men towards the enemy of labor in the prosecutor's office was expressed by Oscar Nelson, coming from the committee room as he denounced the state's attorney as a man whose office was owned "body and soul by the employers."

No less vigorous language was used by Frank Buchanan, former congressman, business agent of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' Local No. 1, and member of the committee.

Tool of Tribune.

"Crowe is the tool of the Chicago Tribune and the interests it represents. He is absolutely no good. He used to pose as a friend of labor.

"But," continued Buchanan, "there is nothing new in the police trying to break strikes. They always do that. They did that in the big garment strike several years ago when hundreds of strikers were arrested—and only seven convicted. That meant that innocent workers were arrested, for the sole purpose of breaking the strike.

The personnel of the committee of 15 consists of Anton Johannsen, chairman; David Clay, Laundry Drivers, secretary; Oscar Nelson, Postal Clerks; John O'Neill, city fireman; Victor Olander, Seamen; Anna Fitzgerald, Woman's Label League; Chester Semple, Molders; John A. English, Printers; Harry Van Artsen, Pressmen; Charles Glover, Blacksmiths, and Harry Sibeck, Union Label League.

Another Injunction.

A third injunction faces the strikers this morning. The injunction is demanded of Judge Denis Sullivan by the Francine Frock Company, of 205 W. Adams street, whose sluggers are accused by unionists of beating up three girl strikers Wednesday, as told in yesterday's DAILY WORKER.

The injunction is demanded against the Chicago Joint Board of the I. L. G. W. U.; Locals 5, 18, 54, 59, 81, 100 and 104; against Meyer Perlstein, Alex S. Kannensky, Peter Bernstein, Bessie Goldberg and all members of locals affiliated with the Joint Board. Attorneys Niaman, Stern and Johnson will argue the case for the employer, and Attorney Peter Sissman for the union. That is, Sissman will argue the case unless Judge Sullivan follows the high-handed policy of last time when he refused to hear the labor side of the case.

Last Bosses Who Settled.

The bosses who settled with the union Wednesday are: the Florence Garment Co., 12 N. Market street; Bushman & Savit Dress Manufacturing Company, 825 W. Adams street; Gross & Wasserman, 329 S. Market street; David Steinholtz, 734 W. Madison street, and Samuel M. Weiss and Co., 1332 Milwaukee avenue.

Arrested and Freed.

Albert Shaffer, one of the most active men in the strike, who has been speaking at strike meetings and inspired pickets, was seized by Crowe's men on Milwaukee avenue yesterday and was taken to the Shakespeare avenue station. Held there for hours, without any charge, he was eventually taken to Crowe's office. After a session with the state's attorney's men who tried to intimidate him, Schaffer was freed. He had been deprived of his liberty for hours with nothing against him. He went back into the strike.

Warrants for assault were sworn out against two alleged thugs, Frank and Jones Garibaldi, whom Isador Weinstein charges with assaulting him in front of 317 W. Adams St. The warrants were issued by Judge Samuel Trude in S. Clark St. court.

Six strikers arrested early yesterday, were: Elenor Sadlowsky, charged with assault; Goldie Tassel, Florence Corn, Sophie Marfin, Dora Craig and Olivia Oluf. They were held for night court, on $400 bail. Della Baranossky, arrested on Milwaukee avenue, was taken to the W. Chicago avenue station and freed on bail.

Code Telegrams Show Bill Burns Connection With the Oil Scandal

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—A code telegram telling the story of William J. Burns' connection with the oil scandal inquiry, was deciphered for the Senate investigating committee today.

The telegram today from Mrs. Mary Duckstein to E. B. McLean advised him that Burns could not get away and was being kept in Washington "on Dome hearing."

The telegram, as deciphered by W. F. Friedman, signal corps expert, follows:

"Feb. 3, 1924.

"W. O. Duckstein.

"The Breakers, Palm Beach, Fla.

"Burns states lawyer friendly to department that an inquiry was on foot to ascertain whether McLean was regularly appointed dollar year man and asked him to find about department lawyer came to Burns and inquired. Burns said attorney general was only person who could give information regarding such appointments. Evidently preparing for more mud-slinging. Burns states impossible to say when he can get away. Being kept here on Dome hearing. Department liable to be called upon at any time for investigations and to prepare injunctions. Wretchedly lonesome. Best love. Wire me. Mary."

Another code telegram was deciphered by Friedman as follows:

"Washington, D. C., Jan. 22.

"E. B. McLean, Palm Beach, Fla.

"Subpoena for Fall today. Returnable Friday. Johns."

Senator Thomas J. Walsh, chief prosecutor, then began reading of the 75 uncoded telegrams selected yesterday by the committee as pertinent.

The first read was to Col. J. W. Zeveley, Sinclair's Washington attorney, from C. C. Chase, former secretary of the Interior Fall's son-in-law, dated Chicago, Dec. 7, 1923, as follows:

"Will be delayed in arriving on account of going by way of Cleveland from here."

From Fall at Three Rivers, N. M., to Zevely at Washington, Dec. 3:

"Have just wired Smoot as follows:

"'Having copies of court records made. Chase should have reached Cleveland Sunday night. Have you been in touch with him?'"

Other digest of the telegrams follow:

Clarence to Fall at Three Rivers (undated):

"Will meet you Chicago. Important. Clarence."

Walsh said he assumed Clarence was C. C. Chase.

Fall to J. W. Zevely, Dec. 12:

"Leaving for Atlantic City, stopping at Ritz Carlton. Hope you and Jane can join us for day or two.

"Fall."

From "the White House" to McLean at Palm Beach, Dec. 23:

"The secretary leaves here tonight. H. E. McKenna."

McKenna is doorkeeper for the president's secretary in the White House executive offices.

"Ned," to Mrs. Fall, Dec. 17:

"Awfully sorry to hear Albert is ill. Will call on you Tuesday.

"Ned." (McLean.)

To Francis H. McAdoo:

". . . I did not know at that time Palmer was going to represent Fall and Sinclair. Now that Fall has testified suggest you get in touch with Palmer and see if he can represent me properly . . ."

From McLean to Bernard Baruch, Jan. 5:

"Please wire me time of your arrival in Washington."

From Baruch to McLean, Jan. 5:

"Will be in Washington Jan. 6 and 7. Affectionate regards."

Then Walsh read the "every other word telegram" which the committee decoded.

"E. B. McLean, Palm Beach, Fla.:

"Understand Montana man has stories printed yesterday on telling your illness and other that you had been Diegels partner when he broke course record Friday. If you want straighten out what may be embarrassing tangle, I'll put it on wire.

"Fitzgerald."

A telegram from McLean at Palm Beach to McAdoo in New York, Dec. 28, said in substance:

"Mitchell Palmer is going to give out a statement for me today, if you approve it. Be very careful as Palmer is representing Fall and Sinclair and I do not want to have myself used for their benefit."

is any disposition to make friend of mine make long journey."

Wiley is managing editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, one of McLean's papers.

There is a "Senator Jim" Watson from Indiana, a state adjoining to Ohio. This message was taken to mean that Wiley wanted Bennett to find out, thru "Senator Jim," whether McLean (friend of mine) would have to make the "long journey" from Palm Beach to Washington to testify.

W. O. Duckstein, private secretary to McLean, was called to the stand.

"How long have you been with Mr. McLean?" Walsh asked.

"Since 1907."

"When did you go to Palm Beach this year?"

"January 24."

"Did you ever communicate with McLean in code?"

"Yes, sir."

"What code?"

"The obsolete Department of Justice code."

Mystery About "The Champion."

"There was a new department of justice code put in use recently. Did you ever use it?"

"No, sir."

"One of the telegrams the committee has is signed 'the Champion.' Who is the Champion?" Walsh asked.

"I don't know."

Walsh then asked Duckstein about the telegram sent by his wife, saying that Wm. J. Burns had received inquiries about McLean being an agent of the Department of Justice.

"What was the basis of your belief that he was?"

"I knew he had a Department of Justice code book."

Duckstein said he had turned over the code message sent him by his wife, Mary, to McLean without comment, after decoding them with McLean's code book.

"Why did you inquire in a telegram if Burns was coming down to Palm Beach?"

Says Burns Knows "Law."

"Well, I wanted to talk over a story in the newspapers that Mr. and Mrs. McLean had left for Nassau. I wanted to know from Mr. Burns what redress Mr. McLean had for publication of that story."

"Is Burns a lawyer?"

"No, but he knows a lot about law."

Duckstein said McLean had told him in December that a leased wire ought to be installed from Washington to Palm Beach for his benefit. Duckstein said he talked with E. W. Smithers, White House telegrapher, about operating the wire.

"Do you know why Smithers was suggested for the place?"

"At my suggesstion. In talking matters about the wire over with Smithers, he said, 'If the place is open, I'd like to have the job to make the extra money.'"

Crowe's Bull Takes Citizen to Jail for Walking on Street

While Mr. Benjamin Silver was walking with one of the girls from the Hull House settlement in the vicinity of 234 South Market street yesterday, one of State's Attorney Crowe's policemen gruffly addressed him and asked what he was doing there. Mr. Silver replied that he was just walking along the street. Without any further remarks the "bull" shoved Mr. Silver's hat down over his eyes, called the patrol wagon and had him arrested with several other bystanders.

COOLIDGE PICKS STRAWN FOR DAUGHERTY JO

Calvin Oiling Skid for Daugherty

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Sil H. Strawn, prominent corporati lawyer of Chicago, chairman of t Board of Directors of Montgome Ward and Company, General Couns for the Union Stockyards and Tran Company and counsel for seve large railroads and other corpo tions with oily connections, is slat to succeed Harry M. Daugherty head of the Department of Justi according to information whisper around here today.

Mr. Strawn is at the present ti in Palm Beach where all the be minds of the Republican administr tion go occasionally for rest and r laxation as well as to confer wi each other as to the best way, to e cape the toils of the law when caug red handed in looting the country treasures.

Coolidge, it will be remembere named Strawn to prosecute the Te pot Dome and Naval Oil Reserve ro bers but was compelled by senate o position to cancel the appointment. was discovered that Strawn was up his neck in oil. He was director the First Trust and Savings ba which handled Standard Oil Compa accounts.

This incident, however, has n shaken the president's faith in th ability of Mr. Strawn. Mr. Coolidg is known to be quite partial to o not particularly the kind used b Mussolini in cleaning up the Itali labor movement.

Whether by accident or design th president has managed to pick o men for the important tasks of pro ecuting oil men in almost every i stance since the Teapot Dome scanda burst. For instance his selection o Samuel Knight of California, to r cover government oil lands from th Standard Oil Company of Californi It happens that Mr. Knight is on th pay roll of the Equitable Trust Com pany of New York, a Standard Oi Bank. This is enough to make eve Silent Cal. smile. The idea of Standard Oil lawyer being engage to sue Standard Oil!

So that the oily conections of Mr Strawn will probably not hinder hi chances to fill Daugherty's chair. H is said to be also a great favorite o Charles Evans Hughes.

Villard Tussels with Wilsonite and Bok Panacea on Sunday

Oswald Garrison Villard, editor o "The Nation," will take the debat ing platform at the Studebaker theatre, 418 S. Michigan Blvd, against the Bok peace panacea next Sunday morning at 11, with James J. Forstall arguing that the United States should adopt the $100,000 proposal.

Villard, who opposes this particular peace plan, is internationally known as a pacifist. His opponent is an attorney, member of the Chicago and Illinois state bar associations, and was a student under Wilson at Princeton and later had personal contact with the League of Nations in Europe.

Villard has recently returned from an extended tour of Europe for the Nation. The affair is conducted by the Rationalist University Society.

Labor Attending Compensation Bill Hearings in Force

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 6.—Organized labor in New York will array its forces to support the passage of bills amending the state compensation law, hearings on which will be held before the joint legislative committee on labor industries March 11 at Albany. More than 1,000 delegates, representing 50 trade unions, will leave for the state capital by special train to attend the hearings.

Eminent physicians and experts, including Dr. Alice Hamilton and Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman, will testify with reference to occupational diseases. The proposed amendments would provide fair compensation to workers afflicted with occupational illnesses, incurred on the job. The bills to be discussed were drafted by the Workers' Health bureau.

Asks Injunction Against Strikers.

ST. LOUIS, Mar. 6.—The effectiveness of a strike of union asbestos workers here for an increase of wages was shown when one of the large employers, Mansville Asbestos Co., applied in federal court for an injunction against the local union, restraining the organization or its members from "interfering" with the company's strikebreakers by asking them to join the strike. The customary long list of alleged offenses is charged in the petition against the strikers. Federal Judge Davis, recent Coolidge appointee, took the matter under advisement.

Striker Loses Injunction Case.

ST. LOUIS, Mar. 6.—Arthure Cole, a Burlington railroad striker, must serve six months in jail and pay a fine of $500 on a charge of contempt of court in violating an injunction during the rail strike. The sentence was imposed by Federal Judge Faris in St. Louis in 1922. Oscar Steers, a policeman of Hannibal, Mo., sentenced with Cole on the same charge, will get a new trial. Such is a decision of U. S. circuit court of appeals just handed down.

More Features of The Teapot Special

IN all the noise that is now being made about the oil scandal and in all the ink that is now being spilled anent the corruption and "moral" turpitude of our government officials there is very little said about the trials and troubles of the workers employed in the oil industry.

The Teapot Special will present an account of the harrowing conditions under which the oil workers are compelled to slave away and grind out hundreds of millions of dollars of profits every day in every year for their bosses.

The great oil octopus whose tentacles are clinging to and throttling the United States will be unmasked in all its naked brutality and ugliness.

Oil as the germ of new imperialist wars threatening to devastate the world will be treated at length in the special issue on the Teapot Dome Steal.

These are merely additional features to the already announced list of articles and drawings by our staff of artists and writers among whom are included Robert Minor, Fred Ellis, J. Louis Engdahl, John Pepper, William F. Dunne, C. E. Ruthenberg, Thomas O'Flaherty, and Jay Lovestone.

Order your bundles of the Teapot Special today. Don't wait. Present indications point to our being unable to meet all the orders that are coming in. Order your bundle now, immediately, so as not to miss the great treat in store for the workers and farmers in this Teapot Limited. Bundle prices: two cents per copy, $1 for 50; $2 per hundred.

BURNS AGAIN IN TOILS HAS NEW BOMB PLOT CLEW

The Notorious Defective Pulls the Old Gag

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 6.—On the same day that William J. Burns, notorious fourflusher and red baiter, was placed in the dock in Washington and grilled like a common criminal, to force admission out of him that he gave away the secret code of the Department of Justice in order to tip off the crooks who were running away with the oil recources of the government, the inevitable "solution" of the Wall street explosion, the private property of Burns, broke into the press.

The Crook is Clever.

It should be remembered that when the 67th Congress of the United States made a farcical investigation of Harry M. Daugherty and his chief criminal Burns, the latter in order to turn public attention away from his own illegal acts, spread a big story in the news about his discovery of the perpetrators of the Wall street explosion.

The latest stunt of the desperate Burns gang is an alleged confession signed by a fellow named Ralph Thurber in London declaring that he had part in the Wall Street explosion in 1920.

Thurber has implicated several others, according to a telegram received by District Attorney Banton from Governor Smith. Banton is not inclined to take the story seriously as similar confessions have already been proven as canards fabricated by the imaginative liar, William J. Burns, who spends most of his time when not otherwise engaged lying down on a couch in his palatial office concocting plans to frameup people with a view to shaking them down.

Murderer Apes Burns.

American Consul Skinner in London sent the following cable to Secretary of State Hughes: "All details of the plot and names of conspirators are known to the Rev. Herbert Wilson, of San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif." The Wilson referred to is a former evangelist now convicted of murder. He is probably trying to escape hanging by qualifying as a lunatic. He could not think of any better way to fool the alienists than to copy the methods of William J. Burns in his announcements on the quest of the solution of the Wall Street explosion.

It should be noted that the papers on the eve of the great blast declared that it was the result of an accident to one of the DuPont powder wagons. This theory was immediately dropped and scores of radicals were arrested by Burns' agents and some of them beaten to death before the public became so disgusted with him and his lies that he did not even dare to issue a new fable until now when he is in danger of being put in the cell as a common crook and traitor to a very important capitalist government bureau.

Republican Party Scavengers Fell Down, Says Hiram

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March 6.—The same marines who fired squatters off the government's western oil reserves could be sent to oust Sinclair and Doheny, Senator Hiram Johnson declared here last night in an address opening his second invasion of Michigan this year.

"When Doheny and Sinclair, with bribery of public officials in Washington, take over our oil reserves, we wait for constitutional discussions and legal advice* * * not however, from the chief legal adviser of the country," the senator said.

"I admire the courage of Attorney-General Daugherty for standing there and telling the president he will not resign, but I do not admire the courage of anybody for refusing to ask him to resign.

"He is no longer useful as a member of the cabinet."

Johnson warned the Republican party that if it does not clean house this year, "the people will do it for them."

Try to Get New Cabinet.

BRUSSELS, March 6.—At the request of King Albert, ex-premier of Belgium, who resigned last week, agreed today to attempt formation of a new cabinet.

Work Daily for "The Daily!"

North Side Houses, Ancient Homes of Old Aristocracy, Now Broken Down Filthy Shacks

Inhabitants of Chicago's so-called "slums," living in dilapidated relics of decayed mansions, are prevented from moving out of districts of social disorganization and physical decline. Migratory workers and white collar clerks alike, are crowded together in ever denser numbers in the lower North Side, and the West and South sides, in ancient, unsanitary homes. Rooms, outnumbered by roomers by the thousand, cling to dirt which breeds disease.

These facts were disclosed by the report prepared by Thomas Allinson, superintendent of the men's service station of the department of public welfare, in co-operation with the lodging house inspecting department of the Illinois Department of Public Health.

"Dilapidated survivals of rich people's houses have been taken up by an army of roomers," the report states. "When these old residences are converted into rooming houses the whole social life of the region changes, the one outstanding factor being that more people are being crowded into each house. Hundreds of old dwellings on the South Side fall into decay each year while few are built to replace them. Altho the population is decreasing, there is no decrease in the crowding of the houses."

These rooming sections, where 60,000 men and 12,000 women are crowded together are important factors in the housing situation in Chicago, because many workers must room in them to be near their work. "Most roomers on the lower North Side are in the white collar class," the report goes on, "comprising the clerical workers of the loop. In this class may be found the most ardent ladder climbers of the city. A rooming house crowd is always a lonely one and hence vice abounds here in its most insidious forms."

The bad results of the subdividing of these ancient mansions into crowded rooming houses are many. The report characterizes the West Side as a "Region of social disorganization and physical decline," Lawlessness and delinquency follows the congested rooming districts. "West of Halsted street, on the near West Side, where there are many children is the region of juvenile delinquency," we are told. "No region in the city is more trying to the truant officer. To have lived one's childhood here is sufficient evidence that one has seen the rough side of life."

Besides depriving the children of the working class of a square chance to grow up healthy physically and wholesome morally, the overcrowded conditions are a source of lawlessness, it appears from Mr. Allinson's report. "Little Sicily," he states, "sandwiched in between the industrial belt bordering the river and the rooming house area about Clark street, has been conspicuous for twenty years for its fueds and vendettas. Policemen have little influence here and the majesty of the law frequently becomes a travesty. Churches and welfare institutions abound, yet they have accomplished little toward realizing their ideals."

The negro, according to the report, has as usual, received a dirtier deal than any one else in Chicago's housing situation. "In 1920 the negroes numbered 109,000. They have increased their numbers until at present there are fully one third again as many, and still they pour in. The negro invasion of the higher grade streets on the south side has been resisted by home owners. Intimidation of negro purchasers of property has been practiced. Between July 1, 1917, and March, 1921, fifty-eight bomb explosions are recorded, to frighten the negroes. The result has been two negroes dead, many injured and property damage of over $100,000. But no one was convicted of lawlessness.

"The lack of foresight shown in the absence of provision made for the housing of the negroes is apparent. The negro problem in Chicago is especially one of housing. As the situation now stands the conditions of the negro habitation on many streets is deplorable, in short a reflection upon the intelligence and moral sense of the community."

Dill Hits More Graft.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 6.—"Graft in making of contracts with private manufacturers of army and navy supplies is one of the greatest perpetrated on the government." Senator C. C. Dill of Washington, has replied to Hope Lodge of the machinists in answer to their plea for support of the Brookhart-Hull bill. The bill favors the making of ordnance and military supplies in government arsenals and navy yards.

Coolidge Joins Daugherty In War on Congress Bootleg Bloc; Good Dodge to Obscure Teapot

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—By direction of President Coolidge, indictment of two or more members of Congress will be sought immediately by the Department of Justice. Evidence against them may be presented this week before a federal grand jury now in session here.

Attorney General Daugherty is understood to have given evidence against them to the Chicago grand jury which indicted Chas. R. Forbes, former head of the Veterans Bureau, and J. W. Thompson, St. Louis contractor. The Chicago jury did not indict the congressmen, but reported that grave evidence of wrong-doing had been submitted.

The congressmen are not involved in the Veterans Bureau nor oil scandals. According to reliable information, they were in league with a bootleg syndicate which, with the financial backing of a prominent political, was operating on a big scale.

BEER CONFISCATED, MACHINERY WRECKED ALL UNDER CAPITALISM

ELGIN, Ill., March 6.—With over three thousand barrels of beer flowing in the Fox river today, the wet contents of the Elgin Ice and Beverage Company building were practically all destroyed.

After pouring the beer out and letting it run into the river, workmen acting under United States Marshal Levy began the real work of demolishing machinery. This will take several days.

The brewery is the first to have machinery destroyed under the Volstead act, it is believed.

Amnesty Talked, Not Practiced, By Hungarian Rulers

(By The Federated Press)

BUDAPEST, Mar. 6.—The Hungarian government, eager to assume an innocently democratic air now that it requires foreign credits from the British Labor regime has declared an amnesty for political prisoners.

It is scarcely possible to liberate the hundreds of Socialists and liberals who met death under the White Terror of this same Magyar government. But the cabinet does not even appear eager to carry its amnesty far beyond the stage of a paper decree. In mid-February, only 33 political captives had been freed and of these, many had virtually completed their sentences. What is actually happening is that the concentration camps, which have become a by-word thruout Europe, are being uprooted and the Hungarian Socialists thereby released are being placed under police supervision.

Two Hungarian Social-Democrats, Peidl and Garami, were sent to London recently to inform the British Labor cabinet as to the existing conditions in Hungary. It remains to be seen whether they were successful in persuading the MacDonald ministry to hold aloof from financial support for Hungary until some vestiges of political right, at least, have been restored.

Nationalist Papers In Bavaria Sprout Up Like Mushrooms

MUNICH, Germany, March 6.—Nationalistic newspapers and organizations are sprouting in Bavaria these days like mushrooms. The reactionaries are split up into so many factions that each deems it necessary to make its bow to the public with a separate sheet or society to demonstrate that it alone has the unadulterated truth, and that it is not the fault of the miserable fiasco of the putsch of last November.

Von Kahr, dictator of Bavaria, is anxious to show that Ludendorff and Hitlers are traitors; Ludendorff and Hitler return the compliment to Kahr. The "Bavarians" are ranging themselves on one side, the "Prussians" on the other. And between them are the recently organized German Workers Party, the Greater-German Peoples union, and various and sundry other paper organizations.

Short Quits Libel Suit Brought To Defend His Honor

SEATTLE, Mar. 6.—President William Short, Washington State Federation of Labor, and formerly secretary, District 10, United Mine Workers, has reached an agreement with Martin Flyzik, president District 10, to withdraw his suit for libel against Flyzik. The case arose out of charges alleged to have been made by Flyzik which Short interpreted as reflecting on his personal honesty.

George F. Vanderveer, chief counsel of the Seattle labor legal bureau, was instrumental in having the charges dropped. Miners' cases against George H. Rummens, alleged to have grossly overcharged the district for legal services during the strike of 1921 and 1922 and Ernest Newsham, secretary of the district until his recall early in 1923, will be prosecuted.

Magnus Is Worth His Weight In Spuds, In Peter Stukel's Eyes

HIBBING, Minn., March 6.—"I always pay my debts," says Peter Stukel, potato king of Spudville, a farming community near here.

By paying this debt, Magnus Johnson, United States senator from Minnesota, is ahead one bushel of choice potatoes.

Stukel yesterday shipped the potatoes to the farmer-labor senator in payment of a bet made last fall.

Senator Johnson declared his weight to be 200 pounds or more. Stukel said it must be less. Johnson tipped the scales at slightly more than 200 pounds.

'PATRIOT' HART EXPOSED AS TOOL OF VICE CROOKS

Wilkes-Barre Rowdies Won't Stop W. P.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WILKES BARRE, Pa., March 6.—"No one in Wilkes Barre has any doubt that Vice Commander Healey was playing American Legion politics when he led the deputized mob that broke up the Workers Party meeting here two weeks ago," said O. D. Coughlin, a prominent attorney of this city in conferring with a Civil Liberties Union representative on the recent events in this section of the coal districts.

Other lawyers consulted by the Civil Liberties Union have voiced the same opinion. One of them said, "These hoodlums lead by Mayor Hart represent the bootlegging and vice business in Wilkes Barre. Everyone of them is mixed up in dirty politics that is quite as scandalous in its way as anything happening at Washington."

Every Judge Rotten.

Another attorney who has at times represented large corporate interests here stated that "every police judge and county judge in the neighborhood is tarred with the same stick. A snowball in hell is safe compared with your chances of winning a free speech decision in the local courts." The same attorney contended that many of the rowdies who were deputized by the Mayor to break up the Lenin Memorial meeting were "slackers of the worst sort. Most of them saw their war service this side of the Atlantic."

The Workers Party plans to hold a meeting on the Teapot Dome scandal in Wilkes Barre, within the fortnight. As the pressure of the Legion and local patriotic societies has barred the Workers Party from Concordia Hall, where, according to the Chairman of the Hall Committee, "'they have been meeting in a quiet and orderly manner for over two years," the meeting is planned for the hall of the local Brewery Workers Union whose Business Agent Charles Krombelbein, also the district organizer for the American Federation of Labor, says he will rent the hall to any one, no matter who they are, what they have to say, or what their political affiliations.

This attitude of Krombelbein's is in sharp contrast to that of the Central Labor Council which is apparently under the thumb of the Hart political machine and refused Benjamin, Workers Party representative a hearing on the free speech issue when he appeared at its meeting on Feb. 29. Whether the Central Labor Union would have taken the same action against the representative of the American Civil Liberties Union has not yet been ascertained.

Preachers Against Mayor.

The local Protestant ministers happen, in this case, to be more tolerant than the majority of the local labor office-holders for the Ministerium voted unanimously against a bill recently proposed to the City Commissioner giving the Mayor the legal right, which he assumed in breaking up the Lenin meeting, to issue permits for all meetings. The Wilkes Barre ministers lead by Willman, Jones and Williams of the Methodist church were able to secure a majority of the City Commissioners against this bill.

Should the Mayor or the Legion take steps to prevent any future meetings of the Workers Party, the Civil Liberties Union will assist the liberal labor elements and the ministers in instituting legal action against the local bootleg-patriotic combination.

2,000 Nova Scotia Miners Starving as Pits Are Idle

SYDNEY MINES, Nova Scotia, March 6.—The failure of the British Empire Steel Corporation to open two of their three mines in the Sydney Mines coal area after the signing of the Montreal agreement leaves 2,000 miners and families faced with starvation. The miners have not worked since Jan. 15, previously they worked from one to three days a week. As all union relief has been stopped the men are in a serious plight.

A mass meeting of miners has telegraphed to the provincial and federal governments for an allotment of $50,000 to meet the emergency.

The company claims that it costs $5.45 to mine a ton of coal from the idle mines, and the highest price procurable in Montreal is $5.40 per ton. This time last year the company's reserve supply was approximately 90,000 tons. So far not a ton of coal has been stored.

400 Earthquake Shocks Shattered Costa Rican Roads

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, March 6.—Four hundred distinct earthquake shocks rocked San Jose and surrounding territory between 4 a. m. and 5 p. m. Tuesday, according to records of the seismograph here. Of the shocks twelve were exceedingly violent.

Two violent tremors were registered at 7:45 and 8:40 a. m. today.

A preliminary survey indicates great damage thruout the country. Wires are down, land and rock slides, fallen bridges and uprooted trees have blocked passages to the coast. Rumors of loss of life are current.

BIG PUBLIC DEBATE

STUDEBAKER THEATER

418 S. Michigan Boul., Chicago

This Sunday Morning, March 9th, Eleven o'clock

Between OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD (Editor of "The Nation") and ATTORNEY JAMES J. FORSTALL, on the Question:

"SHOULD THE UNITED STATES ADOPT THE BOK PEACE PLAN?"

Attorney Forstall: "YES." Mr. Villard: "NO."

DOORS OPEN AT 10:30 A THOUSAND SEATS

Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, the grandson of William Lloyd Garrison, has recently returned from Europe where he attended the League of Nations assembly in Geneva, talked with Ramsay MacDonald in London and traveled extensively thru the Rhineland, the Ruhr and the Palatinate.

Attorney James J. Forstall studied under President Woodrow Wilson at Princeton University where he won honors as a debater. He was an Instructor in Constitutional Law at the Northwestern University School of Law. Attorney Forstall recently visited Europe where he had personal contact with the working of the League of Nations.

THE POWER COLUMN

Double Circulation Before We Move

Let's Go Into Our Own Home With Another Good Start!

TODAY the Teapot, the Garment Workers' strike, and all other big news which American workers have been following thru the columns of THE DAILY WORKER, must take second place to an event which carries with it tremendous significance to the militant labor movement. THE DAILY WORKER has bought its own home. Within a few short weeks THE DAILY WORKER will be operating its own printing plant! No more profits to landlords or printing plant owners! THE DAILY WORKER is firmly established!

There can be no more suitable place in which to comment on this stirring news than in The Power Column. Here we discuss what is of importance to the development of the POWER of THE DAILY WORKER. Next to the power it derives from the earnest and effective work of THE DAILY WORKER boosters, our paper can have no greater source of strength than in the firm foundation that it builds in a permanent and efficient printing plant, installed in its own building. Nothing can give better assurance that THE DAILY WORKER will continue to thrive and grow than the fact that it is independent of capitalist landlords and capitalist print plant owners.

Yet it is another great obligation that the militant labor movement is taking onto itself. Publication of a daily paper requires a steady and a large financial income. The ownership of a printing plant relieves some of this financial burden but makes a regular income all the more necessary. In making so momentous a decision as the purchase of a printing plant, THE DAILY WORKER management is relying implicitly on the strenuous and effective activity of the militants who have made THE DAILY WORKER possible and who since the beginning have been making THE DAILY WORKER grow. That means every member of the Workers Party, every red-blooded militant worker and especially it means, every DAILY WORKER agent.

THE DAILY WORKER is by all odds the best daily paper published in America. It is by all odds the best English language publication published anywhere in the world. Thousands, even millions of workers will some day swear by it as the only paper worth reading. To reach them now as fast as possible, to make them regular readers is a big task, but one which is not too big for willing and courageous militants to perform. The permanence of THE DAILY WORKER is now assured. It will grow at a rate depending upon the energy which the boosters put into their work. It will fight always the battles of the workingclass and the fight will be successful in a degree depending on the number of its readers.

The campaign for 10,000 new subscribers starts officially on March 15. But who wants to wait until then to start? There are thousands of workers just waiting for someone to show them THE DAILY WORKER and to ask them to subscribe. Let's get them NOW. Let's double our circulation between now and the time we move to our new home! If every subscriber will make it a point to get at least one new reader in the next four or five weeks the job will be done and we will be ready for new and even greater advances.

Hungary in Grip of Industrial Crisis: Workers Are Leaving

(By The Federated Press)

BUDAPEST, March 6.—According to a report of the trade union headquarters, 6,046 workers have emigrated from Hungary during the past eight months, explaining their decision by the industrial crisis now gripping the country. This means that 3.3 per cent of all Hungarian organized labor has abandoned the nation during the crisis.

The utter inadequacy of social legislation under the Horthy regime is given as a primary cause for the mass flight of workers from Hungary. In case of accident, for instance, the worker does not receive compensation commensurate with his decreased earning power; instead, he receives an annual pittance, equivalent to the value of nine loaves of bread.

How severe the industrial crisis has become is illustrated by the recent struggle in the Hungarian metal industries. The metal workers flatly refused the employers' offer of a 5 per cent wage increase. They reminded the public that their peace time pay averaged $8 weekly—a niggling enough wage even then. And now the same laborers are receiving $4 a week, despite the fact that living costs are far in excess of the pre-war standard.

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

By PROJECTOR.

Film News From Russia

Proletkino, a stock company controlled by Russian trade unions, co-operatives, Red Cross, Moscow Soviet and other working class bodies, is now engaged in the production of a feature film from "A Week," the Libedinsky story now being published serially in The Daily Worker. Efforts will be made to bring the picture to America to tour under our auspices.

"The Fight Against the Ultimatum," a recent production, is meeting with very favorable response both in Moscow and in the Provinces, but it is not considered suitable for American audiences.

A splendid six reel comedy of Red Army life entitled "Kombrig Ivanov" is being sent to America now and will be exploited here early in fall. An extensive review of the film, with pictures, will apear in the next issue of Soviet Russia Pictorial.

Philadelphia Gives Russian Art Film on Saturday Night

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 6.—Polikushka, the great proletarian film, adapted from Tolstoy's story by the Moscow Art Theatre and made in Russia, will be shown at Lulu Temple, Broad and Spring Garden streets, next Saturday evening.

The film at all times holds the sympathy of the audiences. Especially of the workers who in their hearts see their own weaknesses exaggerated in those of POLIKUSHKA and they know that he, like themselves, is a victim and creature of an unjust social system which no individual could change.

The film is the first of a series to be distributed by the Russian Artfilm Company of Chicago. There will be two shows at 7 and 9 p. m. Admission will be 55 cents and 83 cents. Appropriate music will be given by the large International Orchestra.

Aliens Getting Back Property Looted in War

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 6—Foreign owners of property seized during the war now are receiving regularly the income from the property and more than five thousand have had their holdings restored to them, Thomas W. Miller, alien property custodian, reported to President Coolidge today.

During the first year's operation of the Winslow bill providing for return of property valued at $10,000 or less, more than $16,000,000 has been re- turned to former enemy owners, ler said.

Representatives of the alien p erty custodian have established fices in Berlin to expedite adjust of claims.

$1.50-$1.75 HOUR BUILDING TRADES RATE IN ST. LOUIS

Mechanics' Wages Going Up This Year

By MARTIN DALMON
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, March 6.—Union cement finishers here have won their demand for a wage increase of 25 cents an hour to $1.50, affecting more than 400 workmen. Foremen are to receive $1.62½ instead of $1.37½ an hour. The increase gives this craft the minimum daily wage of $12 for skilled labor, toward which the other St. Louis building trades are steadily moving.

The cement finishers are the second craft to win the new scale during the present year. Lathers won the increase a month ago and signed agreements for a year.

Hoisting Engineers Strike.

Hoisting engineers are on strike against employers who have refused the new union scale, an increase to $1.50 an hour from $.125. A few building laborers are striking for an increase of 20 cents an hour, from 67½ cents to 87½ cents an hour. Most of the employers, however, have settled with the unions and only about 100 of the two crafts, which together have a membership of over 1,500, are involved.

Brick and mortar hodcarriers accepted a scale of $1.15 an hour recently; the original demand was for $1.20 an hour, the old rate being $1. Union asbestos workers are on a strike for $1.50 an hour instead of the present scale of $1.15. Their contract expired the first of the year. The employers are striving to operate with strikebreakers.

Painters Ask $1.50 an Hour.

Several other local building trades are demandnig $1.50 an hour, effective when present agreements expire in March and April. The painters and paper-hangers are demanding $1.50 an hour, five-day week with double time for all work done on Saturdays. The present scale is $1.25 an hour, with the 44-hour week in force.

The newspapers and big business are united against the painters' demand. In support of their position the painters point to the heavy death rate among their members from occupational diseases and cite the history of the Typographical union, showing that the average life of printers has increased as working time has been reduced by the union. The painters feel, too, that the five-day week will help solve unemployment by a more equal distribution of the work. A number of the painting contractors are favorable to the shorter week, while the more hard-boiled of them are expected to show fight. The painters declare the new conditions must go into effect March [illegible], the expiration of present agreements, or they will strike.

Carpenters, bricklayers and plasterers are receiving $1.75 an hour, secured last year. Plumbers and electricians obtained the $1.50 an hour last summer, signing agreements for a year.

The building trades request their fellow workers in other cities not to be attracted to St. Louis by these new wage rates. There is insufficient work for the men already here, and any considerable influx of workmen to the city would flood the labor market and aid the employers in robbing the local trades of their hard-won gains. The employers have exhausted nearly every resource to circumvent the unions, and a flood of propaganda thruout the country advertising an alleged shortage of labor at high wages in St. Louis is anticipated as their next move.

Actors Equity May Strike As Managers Threaten Open Shop

NEW YORK, March 6.—The Actors' Equity Association may call a strike on June 1st if a section of the Theatre Managers' Association persist in their determination to establish the open shop.

David Belasco is a leader in the move among the producers to break with Equity. On the other hand it is rumored that the Shuberts, William A. Brady and others have signed up.

The Actors' Equity Association is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and in the event of a strike could call on stage handlers and all other theatre employes with A. F. of L. membership to strike.

What Is the "Sacred" in May 30th

By JOHN PEPPER

THE workers and farmers have before them two political dates representing two political movements—May 30 and July 4.

And there is a fight around these two dates. A bitter fight which is unintelligible as a fight on such a simple technical question as that of a date. But this question which is seemingly only technical proves to be the most important question of the Farmer-Labor movement. The question of May 30 or July 4 is a most vital political question and which can decide for a long time the whole future of an independent class party of workers and exploited farmers.

What is the difference between May 30 and July 4?

May 30 is the date of a convention of all forces of the Farmer-Labor movement which are willing to form a class Farmer-Labor Party. July 4 is the date of a convention which is backed by forces which have not decided whether they will endorse the progressive candidate of one of the old political parties or put up a Third Party ticket.

May 30 is a date which was selected intentionally because it is before the dates of the conventions of the old capitalist parties. July 4 is a date selected intentionally because it comes after the conventions of the old capitalist parties.

The convention of May 30 aims to form a party of workers and exploited farmers, a class party of the exploited and suppressed laboring masses. The convention of July 4 wants to form a Third Party which shall embrace various non-capitalist classes, such as lower middle class, well-to-do farmers, industrial workers and exploited farmers.

Even the convention of May 30 will not be a pure class gathering. True, the bulk of the masses which will back it will be industrial workers and exploited American "peasants," but it will have a sprinkling of lower middle class and well-to-do farmer elements. Yet taken all in all the May 30 convention will be under the unquestioned domination of the proletarian elements of the working and farming class. The July 4 convention will have a heavy representation of industrial workers, tho mainly of the labor aristocracy; but it will have an equally heavy representation of lower middle class and well-to-do farmer elements and will be under the domination of the most reactionary labor leaders and so-called progressive politicians of the republican and democratic parties.

The May 30 convention gave full representation to the local trade unions and will embrace also the revolutionary wing of the labor movement, the Communists. The July 4 convention gave representation only to the international unions, which means a monopoly for the labor bureaucrats, denied completely representation to the local trade unions, and its only attitude towards the Communists is: "Begone Satan!"

Summed up, the essence of the difference between May 30 and July 4 is the difference between a class Farmer-Labor Party and a Third Party. The struggle for May 30 is the struggle for the class party. The acceptance of the date of July 4 is the betrayal of the idea of a class party of workers and exploited farmers and the acceptance of a party in which the workers and exploited farmers would be organized together with the lower middle class and well-to-do farmers. Mr. William Mahoney, president of the Working People's Non-Partisan Political League in Minnesota, advocating the postponement of the May 30 Convention, stated in his paper, the Minnesota Union Advocate: "There is nothing sacred about May 30." But there is something sacred about May 30, Mr. Mahoney! May 30 is the date and the symbol of the class party! The abandonment of May 30 for July 4 means the betrayal of the class party idea and the acceptance of the Third Party idea.

There is something sacred about May 30! William Mahoney himself advocated the date May 30 against Shipstead, Pike and other lower middle class and well-to-do farmer politicians because, as he stated, the only guarantee against a fusion of the Farmer-Labor movement with one of the old capitalist parties is a convention which is ahead of the conventions of the capitalist parties.

The postponement of the May 30 convention till after the conventions of both old capitalist parties is the greatest danger for the class movement because it means the invasion of the convention and the whole movement by the lower middle class and well-to-do farmer elements, which will break away from the capitalist parties after they have become disillusioned with the capitalist party conventions. The sharpening of the class struggle since the world war was causing these elements to break away from the old capitalist parties; and the enormous Teapot Dome scandal gave the last impetus to this development. There is a certainty now that we will have a Third Party in the near future. The withdrawal of his candidacy by La Follette in the Republican primaries shows clearly that such a hesitating and wavering "leader" like LaFollette is today forced by the ever-growing discontent and demand of the masses to become the leader of the Third Party movement. LaFollette's withdrawal of his candidacy in the Republican Party and his joining the Third Party is not the cause but the sign of the mass movement for the Third Party. La Follette does not drive the masses, but is driven by the masses.

The postponement of the May 30 convention till after the old capitalist party conventions, means the delivering of the May convention to these lower middle class and well-to-do farmer masses and their political leaders, to the LaFollettes, the Magnus Johnsons, and the Wheelers.

The breaking away of the millions of workers, farmers and lower middle-class elements from the old capitalist parties is the most revolutionary fact in our present political situation. The breaking down of the two-party system and the formation of a Third Party will mark the beginning of a political revolution in the United States. We must do everything to drive all these non-capitalist elements to a split from the republican and democratic parties, which means their splitting away from the political leadership of the capitalist class. But at the same time we must realize that these big non-capitalist masses do not belong all to the same class. We must ralize that the workers' and exploited farmers' interests are different from those of the lower middle class and well-to-do farmers. Our duty is therefore to build the political class party of workers and exploited farmers organizationally and ideologically independent of the Party of the lower middle class and well-to-do farmers, the Third Party. The creation of a Third Party is a revolutionary fact; but it is a counter-revolutionary act to help such a Third Party to swallow the class Farmer-Labor Party. The replacing of May 30 by July 4 is therefore a counter-revolutionary act. It's a tragic betrayal of the class party idea. It means the elimination of the workers and exploited farmers from the present political situation as an independent factor, and it means the organizational disruption of the Farmer-Labor movement, at least for the near future.

Our duty is to fight to the last ditch against the betrayal of such great possibilities as history has never before presented to the workers and farmers of the United States. The abandonment of May 30 for July 4 serves the interests of the labor aristocracy and the politicians of the lower middle class and well-to-do farmers, and betrays the interests of the proletarian workers and exploited farmers. Mr. Mahoney, pleading for postponement, asks what is the sacred about May 30. Our answer is: May 30 is today the banner of the class struggle; and deserting May 30 for July 4 means deserting the flag of class struggle, and the going over into the camp of the enemy.

Hillquit Didn't and He Did

By C. E. RUTHENBERG
Executive Secretary, Workers Party.

WHEN an organization gets into a position where it is obliged to charge its enemies with saying things about it which its enemies have not said in order to make a case to defend itself, it is in a peculiar position indeed.

That is the situation in which the Socialist Party finds itself in relation to the movement for a mass farmer-labor party.

The Socialist Party has committed itself to the Conference for Progressive Political Action but that Conference thus far has continued the old Gompers policy of rewarding the friends and punishing the enemies of labor and refused to commit itself to independent political action. It continued this policy at the St. Louis convention.

In my article reporting the St. Louis convention I emphasized the fact that the C. P. P. A. was not committed to nominating candidates on a new party ticket at the Cleveland convention called for July 4th and quoted Morris Hillquit to that fact. In an article appearing in the New York Leader the new Socialist weekly, of February 23rd, the editor of that publicaion tries to twist the statements which appeared in the Communist press into statements that I had charged that Hillquit had urged that the July 4th convention should not nominate on an independent party ticket.

No statement of this character has appeared in the Communist press. What I said and what Hillquit said was that the C. P. P. A., by the resolution adopted at St. Louis, was not committed either way.

In order to make a showing of defending itself against this statement, the New York Leader says:

> "Morris Hillquit, Socialist Party representative on the National Committee of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, nailed a peculiarly offensive lie that has been circulated by Communist publications about a speech he made at the recent St. Louis conference, when he gave The New Leader the correct text of a speech he delivered there urging the holding of a national convention July 4. Publications representing the Communist organizations stated that Hillquit urged that the convention, when held, should not organize a new independent party of labor and nominate independent candidates, and a manifesto issued several days later by that body embodies the lie."

The only quotation of what Hillquit said at St. Louis is contained in the DAILY WORKER of February 13th and reads as follows:

> "Morris Hillquit followed with a speech in which he said: 'This call does not commit us to any course of action. You may say at the Cleveland conference: We will not have anything to do with the old party candidates; or you may say: Endorse the candidates of one of the old parties.'"

Following its charge that the Communist press falsely reported Hillquit's speech, the New York Leader publishes what purports to be Hillquit's speech at St. Louis. According to the New York Leader, Hillquit said:

> "On the face of it, the resolution does not commit us to a definite policy, but leaves the entire issue to a convention representative of a great convention representative of a great body of organized labor, progressive farmers and other progressive elements. The sentiment which will express itself at that convention will determine our course of action.
>
> "If there are any among us who believe that the proper policy for this conference is to keep out of the Presidential campaign altogether, they will have an opportunity to convince the majority of the delegates of the wisdom of such course.
>
> "If any of us believe that either of the old parties will present a platform and candidates which organized labor and progressives can adopt, as their own, they will have a similar opportunity.
>
> "I, and those for whom I speak, will vote for the resolution because we feel certain that when a representative gathering of organized workers, working farmers and other progressive elements meets on July 4 and surveys the political situation, they will see no alternative but to name independent candidates for President and Vice-President, and to lay the foundations for a party of workers and farmers."

What is the difference between what I said in the DAILY WORKER that Hillquit stated in his speech at St. Louis and what Hillquit himself says he stated in St. Louis?

The only difference is that Hillquit, in his Leader version of his speech, makes four paragraphs out of what he said in three sentences on the floor of the St. Louis convention. Paragraph one clearly states that the convention is not committed to any definite policy. Paragraph two and three state that the Convention at Cleveland may endorse an old Party candidate if the majority so decides, and Paragraph four states Hillquit's hope that the convention will nominate on an independent ticket.

While there is no difference in the meaning of the statement made by Hillquit in the Leader and the quotation in the DAILY WORKER, Hillquit tries in his Leader statement, which was NOT his speech at St. Louis, to cover up the bald statement of the fact as he made it on the floor of the St. Louis convention by adding numerous words which might confuse the uncritical reader.

One may well ask: Why is it that the Leader endeavored to make a case against the Communists of having incorrectly reported Hillquit and then printed a statement which confirms what the Communists said was Hillquit's statement?

The answer to this question is not very difficult. The Socialists know that the C. P. P. A. has not changed its position materially; that it is not committed to independent political action, and that at Cleveland it may follow its old course of non-partisan political action. This possibility puts the Socialist Party in an untenable position. In order to cover up this situation it resorts to the detestable policy of accusing the Communists of misquoting Hillquit and stating that something was said which the quotation in the DAILY WORKER shows was not said, in order to lead the workers who are for independent political action off the track and make them think about supposed Communist misrepresentations rather than the issue at stake: Do the workers want a Farmer-Labor Party and shall they realize it thru the May 30th Convention called by the Farmer-Labor Party elements or shall they still place their hopes upon the C. P. P. A. which has met three times and three times betrayed them?

We do not doubt in the least that Morris Hillquit would like to see the C. P. P. A. organize a new Party and nominate on an independent ticket. Hillquit may hope that they will do that but Hillquit's hopes will not decide the question. The power in the C. P. P. A. is in the hands of the railroad unions who on a roll call vote can absolutely control that organization. These railroad organizations have shown by their attempt to cleanse McAdoo since the St. Louis convention that their minds are running in the opposite direction from independent political action.

This fact has swung those workers and farmers who are for independent political action thru a Farmer-Labor Party behind the May 30th Convention. The Leader's garblings and misrepresentations are an attempt to obscure the clear issue: Whether the farmers and workers shall support the movement for a Farmer-Labor Party, of which the Communists are a part, which is expressed in the call for the May 30th Convention, or whether they shall support the C. P. P. A. and the Socialists in the vacillating, hesitating betrayals which has been the record of that organization thus far.

Stinnes in Checko-Slovakia.

PRAGUE, March 6.—Reports are current of important new ventures in Checko-Slovakia, contemplated by the German capitalist, Stinnes. Stinnes' recent attempts to gain control of the immense glass and porcelain industries in this country and to secure a share in ownership of the rich coal mines, were thwarted. The German industrialist is now stated to be negotiating for the purchase of a large hotel in Marienbad, which he proposes to employ as a printing plant for the publication of a daily newspaper. The contemplated journal would serve as the organ of German nationalism in Checko-Slovakia.

INDIANAPOLIS, March 6.—The act of destroying liquor is evidence of the intent to sell, Judge Collins ruled today in sentencing Frank Wiliamson, negro, to sixty days on the State Farm.

Graft Quizzes Clog Congressional Mill; Big Bills Held Up

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Some administration leaders have abandoned hopes of adjourning Congress before Sept. 15.

Two reasons were ascribed for the upset of original plans to quit June 1st.

1.—Slow progress made with legislation in the House under the revised rules forced by the Progressive-Democratic coalition at the opening of the session.

2.—Use of the Senate as a "broadcasting station" for campaign speeches, with recent "scandals" as the keynote.

A recess during June to enable congressmen to attend the national political conventions at Cleveland and New York with resumption of the grind on July 7, is included in the revised plans of the Republican chieftains.

With the three months of work behind it, Congress has not passed a single major bill. All the appropriation bills, the tax reduction bill, immigration, Muscle Shoals legislation, the bonus and a long list of important farm relief measures are still on the legislative program.

World's Largest Power Plant May Rise on Lake Michigan's Shore

The Indiana side of Lake Michigan is being considered as a site for the world's largest electric power plant, a $1,000,000 project.

The State Line Land company, a subsidiary of the Commonwealth Edison company, contemplates the project if the war department will permit the filling of 72 acres on the Indiana side of the lake front near the Indiana-Illinois line. Application for the permit has been filed.

The plant will generate power for a super-electric line from Lansing, Ill., to Gary and Hammond, Ind.

NEW YORK, March 6.—The New York Labor Press, a weekly "dedicated to the principles of the American Federation of Labor," suspends with its fifth issue, dated March 1. Its editors, Philip Hockstein and Edward Levinson, announce that the suspension is temporary and that publication will be resumed when a number of unions have acted favorably on a plan for increasing its circulation.

SENATE MAY URGE FREE PHILIPPINES; WEEKS OPPOSES

Our Rule Is Altruism, Says War Secretary

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Independence for the Philippines within three or five years is likely to be recommended by the senate committee on territories and insular possessions, as the outcome of hearings begun with the testimony of Secretary of War Weeks, a stubborn opponent of liberation of the Filipinos.

"What they want is more American capital, not independence," the stockbroker-secretary declared, when challenged by Minority Leader Robinson and Senators Reed of Pennsylvania, King of Utah, Harris of Georgia, and—by implication—by Hiram Johnson, chairman of the committee.

Ruling Islands Costly.

Reed, a hard-boiled business advocate and ex-soldier, said that he had been in the islands and knew that the people, despite all that had been done for them by the United States, were hostile to further American control. Inasmuch as the military occupation costs $12,000,000 a year and disturbs the whole policy of national defense, he thought the time had come to get out. Weeks had stated that the profit from investments should not be the reason for staying there.

Hiram Johnson asked Weeks whether, in view of his denial of a profit motive, he opposed independence on the ground solely of altruism. Weeks replied that that was it—pure altruism for the people of the islands. A smile went round the room, where were gathered a score of the brainiest men in the Filipino nation.

"25 Years More"—Weeks.

Weeks said American occupation should not terminate for another 25 years; he thought it a great mistake, an immature judgment, that congress ever pledged independence to the islands. But a date should be set, and meanwhile bonds would be sold for further development, these bonds to be held probably in America.

King asked whether it would not be better for the Filipinos if they progressed more slowly, saved up their capital, and refused to exploit themselves for absentee bondholders and landowners. Weeks could not see that, at all. They were still unfit to govern themselves "acceptably" to foreign investors; they needed another generation of tutelage. Not a member of the committee sided with the bond broker secretary.

SOCIALISTS IN PLAN TO ANNEX THE C. P. P. A.

S. P. Dying, Orphans Seek New Breadwinner

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 6.—While the New York Call still dragged along a weary and disreputable existence, the Socialist Party was able to show some indication of vitality but with the passing of that discredited journal the activities of the Socialist Party have been so reduced that a serious doubt now exists among even the most hopeful Socialist Party functionaries whether it can be kept going much longer.

The demoralization that has followed the exit of the Call can be seen in the fact that the once powerful locals of New York Kings, Richmond and Queens are to be merged.

Frightened people passing graveyards often whistle to maintain their courage and on the same principle one of the liars on the staff of the local Socialist Party weekly, offers the organization of a new weekly in New York to take the place of the daily Call and a youth monthly as evidence of growth rather then decay.

Salary Doubtful.

Socialist Party deterioration is not confined to New York. The Socialist Party in Massachusetts has advertised for a man to accept a position as organizer in New England with a guarantee of an adequate salary but nobody can be found willing to take the job. This means that payment of the salary is very much subject to doubt as it is not likely that the Socialist Party functionaries who are now available would hesitate to attach themselves to a pie counter because of any scruples about connecting up with the rotten carcass of the Socialist Party.

The Socialist paper in Buffalo, The New Age, is going on the rocks. Rats are known to desert a sinking ship and it is significant that Pat Quinlan, editor of that sheet, wrote his editorial obituary in the current issue. Pat's excuse was that the treasury showed signs of exhaustion and that he was asked to do too much work.

His Majesty's House Organ.

The local socialist sheet acts as the press agent of the King's ministers in the House of Commons. "Altho it has been in office only a few days it has made a most favorable impression on the public mind," it says. "None of the terrible anticipations of the capitalist press has been realized," it continued. With the support of the Tories no doubt the Socialist darling MacDonald can continue to build warships to threaten France, repudiate the Capital levy, the promised revision of the Versailles treaty and shoot Hindoo rebels so long as he has a stomach for such "socialist" policies.

The socialist paper edited by Oneal was almost hysteric in its praise for J. P. Morgan for turning over his father's collection of rare books for the use of scholars, not workers mind you. We will quote part of the Morgan eulogy:

"Good For You Morgan."

"The library with its priceless collections of rare manuscripts and paintings, with its volumes of manuscript documents to the historian, was assembled as a diversion of the spare time of the elder Morgan and now his son decides that it of right belongs to the public.

"Good for you, Morgan! Far better that great wealth be employed in collecting books and giving them to the public than in riotous dissipation like the wastrels of Newport and Palm Beach or the corruption of government by hiring of high officials for their supposed influence.

"Mr. Morgan's gift is a princely one; and his father's hobby was a noble one. No one criticizes one or the other."

That is sweet and so perfectly class (un) conscious that it almost makes us unconscious of the days when Jimmy Oneal used to talk of the "class struggle." There are other gems.

Oneal and Goldstein.

On the editorial page in the issue of March 1st, Mr. Oneal, commenting on a statement issued by the Catholic propaganda bureau in Minnesota to the effect that if the church did not take part in the social movements of the day the movements would pass the church by, says that the church program "differs little from that of the Socialist Party." It would not surprise us to see Mr. Oneal on the same platform with Peter Collins and Davy Goldstein before many moons.

The socialist party, however, is not so far gone that it has completely lost hope. The coming to office of the British Labor Party has brought the water of expectation to its teeth and it actually licks its hungry chops over the prospect of ambling into the White House in any kind of a reactionary labor combination. Hence its efforts to prove—which can be easily proven—that the British Labor party is eminently respectable unlike the accursed communists.

A socialist leader confided to the writer a few days ago that the socialist party in America would very likely pay in the conference for political action a role similar to that played by the Independent Labor Party in England. "With our superior knowledge of economics and our experience in putting out propaganda we should providing we can keep you fellows on the outside (the communists) gain complete control of whatever comes out of the July 4 conference."

He then went on to tell a little story of what transpired on the resolutions committee of the C. P. P. A. at the recent St. Louis meeting. While they were considering the resolutions, fear was expressed that they were too radical. Hillquit suddenly asked those members of the committee who were never at one time or another members of the Socialist Party to raise their hands. Only one responded and he had voted the Socialist ticket. After that the affair proceeded smoothly.

The Socialist Party is but a corpse. Otto Branstetr left the national office without any regrets even from his own cronies. It appears that he quit only when the cash was gone. His successor is begging for funds to pay her salary. The big question now agitating socialist party breasts is "Can we capture the Conference for Progressive Political Action?"

Russian Communists Fight Residue Left by War

NOTE.—Here is another installment of the speech by the prominent Russian Communist, Stalin, to members of the Russian Communist Party on the problems now facing the Communists in the First Workers' Republic. In this installment Stalin reviews the struggle against the residue left over from the war period thru which the party was compelled to pass. The views of Stalin will be followed by the views of other prominent Russian Communists. Stalin spoke as follows:

• • • •

WHAT STALIN SAID:

IN the first place a fight must be taken up all along the line against the residue and rudiments left over from the war period in our Party; against the wrong idea that our Party is a system of institutions and not a new and creative fighting organization of the proletariat, thinking actively, acting on its own initiative, permeated with new life and destroying the old.

In the second place the activity of the masses of the Party must be increased by bringing up for discussion all questions of interest to the masses, insofar as these questions can be dealt with publicly, in order that all may be given the possibility of free criticism of the Party institutions and their actions. This is the only way to transform Party discipline into a really conscious and really iron discipline.

In the third place, it is necessary that all Party functionaries, unless insuperable obstacles lie in the way with regard to too short a membership of the Party, etc., should be chosen by election. The practice of ignoring the will of the majority in the organizations when appointing comrades to responsible positions in the Party must be completely done away with in actual practice. The principle of the election must be realized in fact.

Regular Conferences Necessary.

In the fourth place, it is necessary that the Central, as also the leading Party organizations for the gouvernements and districts should hold active conferences of the responsible functionaries of every branch of workers, economists, Party workers, trade unions, and military. These conferences must take place regularly, the questions considered necessary by the conference are to be discussed, contact between the functionaries of all categories must be kept up uninterruptedly, all functionaries must be made to feel that they are members of the same Party family, that they are all working for one common cause, for the indivisible cause of the proletariat; around the Central and around the local organizations, there must be created an environment giving the Party the possibility of controlling the practical experience won by our responsible functionaries in every sphere of work, and of giving these the opportunity of experience.

In the fifth place, it is necessary that our production nuclei occupy themselves with the course of events in the works and trusts. This must be carried out in such a manner that the nuclei are kept au courant with respect to the work being done by the leading organs of our shops and associations, so that they may be able to exercise an influence on this work. You, as representatives of the nuclei, know very well how great is the moral responsibility borne by our production nuclei with regard to the non-partisan masses, in respect to the course of events in the shops and factories.

Improve Party Nuclei.

In order that the nucleus shall be placed in a position enabling it to bear the responsibility for this course of events, it must be kept well informed, must have the possibility of influencing matters in this or that direction. It is, therefore, imperative that the nuclei be called upon to take part in the debates on economical questions connected with the works and factories, that from time to time economic conferences be convened by the representatives of the nuclei belonging to undertakings forming part of a trust, for the discussion of questions dealing with the affairs of the trust. This is one of the surest of the methods required for the enrichment of the economic experience of the masses, and for the organization of control from below.

In the sixth place, it is necessary to improve the quality of the components constituting our Party nuclei. Comrade Zinoviev's article already touched upon the assertion that our Party nuclei have remained behind the non-partisan masses surrounding them in point of quality. This assertion must, of course, not be generalized and applied to all nuclei. It would be more correct to say that our Party nuclei would, for instance, stand upon a higher cultural level than they do now, if we did not remove from these nuclei those persons whom we are forced to employ for other work.

Alter Conditions of Admission.

If all our comrades, the workers, in the unions, removed by us during the last six years from the nuclei, were to return to their nuclei, would any further proof be required that these nuclei stand at a much higher cultural level than even the most advanced non-partisan workers? It is just for this reason that the Party possesses no other elements for the improvement of the state apparatus and is obliged to return to this source again and again.

We must free ourselves from that superfluous formalism so often shown by our Party when admitting new members to the Party, when these belong to the working class. We must not be so ruled by formalism. The Party can and must facilitate the conditions of admission to the Party for members of the working class.

THE THEATRE

BERNARD SHAW ON HERESY

Review of Saint Joan

By FREDERICK KUH

(Federated Press)

NEVER has Bernard Shaw been more impressive than in Saint Joan, which is enjoying its first presentation on any stage thru the Theater Guild in New York. And a sterling production, at that. One feels that, in this play, G. B. S. has unleashed the pent up, hot emotions which, in his most successful works, he has subordinated to cold intellectuality.

Not that Saint Joan does not abound in satire. But this is the weakest aspect of his powerful stage chronicle. The jibes at the English in Saint Joan often verge perilously close to the slapstick; and of the blows at the Catholic church, a few are telling, while many are overstressed. In the second act, wherein the archbishop of Rheims unveils the shams of his cult, one wishes that his deceptions were rendered less apparent and that the dramatist had left us to do more of our own debunking. But these vulnerable passages serve to magnify the mature wisdom and beauty of the play as a whole.

Shaw leaves the traditional story of Joan virtually intact. Joan is merely shorn of the superstitions woven around her legend. Her behavior is rationalized. And she stands before us, the unripe girl, obedient to her conscience, courageously defying church and state in her resplendent faith.

The eternal price of heresy is the recurrent theme. Last century's iconoclasm becomes the sanctified respectability of today. And when, in the epilogue Joan reappears before her inquisitors, who are now her humble worshippers, we are made to realize that they would avidly burn her again at the stake, were she to return in the flesh. We are reminded that, because men possess so little imagination, a new saint must be crucified for each generation.

Only the shabby English soldier, a reincarnated Henry Dubb, reveals something akin to genuine understanding of Joan's spirit—and he, of course, is merely on furlough from hell.

In the 15th century, it was the heresy of nationalism, menacing the power of clerical and secular hierarchy, of which Joan was guilty. Nowadays, it is dissent from our capitalist, nationalist institutions that is the cardinal sin. And in the next century, what new heresies shall be invented, that we may replenish our larder with freshly crucified pioneers? "How much longer, oh Lord, how much longer!" is Joan's cry in the wilderness. How often is that cry being echoed in the prisons and death cells of our contemporary western civilization.

OUTLAW EDICT AIDS COMMUNISTS GERMANS FIND

Like Days Bismarck Fought Socialists

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

BERLIN, March 6.—"The decree outlawing the Communist Party in Germany is doing for the Communist movement what Bismarck's anti-Socialist law did for the Socialist movement," Wilhelm Bartz, Communist member of the reichstag, claims. In discussing the effects of the decree issued under the state-of-emergency act by the military dictator, General von Seeckt, Bartz told The Federated Press that "Just as Bismarck's actions stimulated interest in Socialism, so the ban on Communists is making Communist converts."

Bartz has returned to Berlin from a speaking campaign in Saxony, Thuringia and Mecklenburg.

Ban Is Failure.

"How did you manage to hold meetings when the party has been declared illegal?" I inquired.

"That was simple and at the same time a good illustration of the way bureaucracy works," Bartz replied. "We were not allowed to call meetings of the Communist Party, nor ask people to vote the Communist Party ticket, but groups of Communist voters could band themselves together as 'Communist voters' committees' and as such obtain permission to hold campaign meetings. The judiciary committee of the reichstag had decided that nobody can deny a candidate the right during election time to address his constituents. He therefore gets up a voters' committee and that committee arranges the campaign meeting.

Meeting Anyhow.

"At the meeting we are not allowed to say, 'join the Communist Party,' or 'vote for the candidates of the Communist Party,' but we must say 'become adherents to Communist thought,' or 'vote for Communists.' By complying with these technicalities we get by and hold our meetings just as tho nothing had happened. Of course, at times there are disturbances and interference, and we must expect to be arrested during such meetings. Only the other week I was held in jail for three days after being arrested at a voters' meeting.

"The main thing is that we can talk to our voters and win them over for Communism. And here the element of 'forbidden fruit' enters to our advantage. There is more of romance and of personal bravery connected with being a Communist now than before the stupid edict was issued."

CITIZENS TO PROBE GARMENT WORKERS' STRIKE

Crowe's Stand Causing Bitter Feeling

The arrests of citizens found walking in the vicinity of dress making establishments where strikes are on, by officers of Attorney Crowe's office and the gross partiality shown to the clothing barons by city officials has finally forced citizens not involved in the struggle to step in with a view to bringing about a settlement. A meeting of progressive element met yesterday and the following statement was issued by Walter R. Mee, secretary of the conference:

"A group of representative persons of this city were called together for luncheon at the Hotel Morrison today by the Chicago Church Federation to consider impartially the conditions and progress of the strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union in this city, now going on. Those present, numbering about fifty, organized themselves into a Citizens' Committee, with Father Fredric Seidenburg, Dean of the Department of Sociology of Loyola University, as chairman, and Mr. Walter R. Mee, Executive secretary of the Chicago Church Federation, as secretary, to gather facts and take such action as may then seem desirable.

"A sub-committee was also appointed, consisting of Father Seidenburg, Mrs. B. F. Langworthy, First Vice-President of the Woman's City Club; Mrs. V. Frank Brown, Chairman of the Women in Industry of the Illinois League of Women Voters; Dean Thomas F. Holgate, President of the Chicago Church Federation; Mrs. Ab Simon, President of the Conference of Jewish Women's Organization, and Mrs. George M. Mathes, Director of the Women's Department of the Anti-Saloon League, for the purpose of investigating the present conditions of the strike and to confer at once with the city officials regarding them.

"In view of the importance to Chicago citizens of the present strike this Citizens' Committee expects to enlarge itself materially for the purpose of securing a settlement based as far as possible on the true merits of the situation."

Not Daunted by Cold.

In spite of snow and cold and injunctions and the brutality of the police the striking garment workers kept their picket line filled along every street in the garment districts yesterday.

The most significant development of the day was that the regular uniformed police have followed the lead of the police attached to the state's attorney's office and have begun to treat the striking girls in a fiendishly brutal manner.

Strikers believe that Capt. John H. Alcock, who has been put in charge of the strike detail of police by order of Chief of Police Morgan Collins, has ordered the police to help State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe's police break the spirit of the strikers and the strike.

Police In Military Array.

Yesterday was the first day Alcock was in charge of the police detail. There have been assigned to strike duty more tnan 100 police officers. Most of them are stationed in the strike area along Market, Adams, Quincy, Wells and Van Buren streets. That is the district where the big dress manufacturers have their shops. The police work from 8:00 a. m. till 6:00 p. m. They concentrate their energy on arresting pickets during the evening when the scabs are returning home from work.

When the pickets got on the job along Market street yesterday morning, five of them were arrested and brutally handled and thrown into patrol wagons. They were taken to the First district police station, where they were held for more than an hour before being booked. After being booked they were taken to the So. Clark Street police station. The desk sergeant was not told they were in the women's quarters and it was several hours before the lawyers for the union were able to bail them out.

The manner in which they were arrested and handled plainly showed that they were arrested in order to frighten the other pickets. The attempt failed. The pickets kept up their slow march and only one person dropped out of line to go to the union office to report the arrests. The girls arrested were: Fannie Yawnes, Eva Baskin, Ray Wytiskovsky, Lillian Libbin and Lena Morvitz. They will be arraigned in the So. Clark Street police court this morning.

Florence Corn and Eleanor Sadlowska were discharged in the So. Clark Street police court yesterday when the two scabs who had signed complaints against them charging them with assault and battery, disorderly conduct and assault with intent to kill failed to show up in court.

Thirteen girl strikers who were arrested Wednesday evening and not booked till a late hour demanded that they be given jury trials and were released on $400 bonds each. They were, Mary Oppenheim, Rose Yankowitz, Ida Giffin, Clara Krasnowsky, Emma Goldberg, Jennie Lieberman, Lily Shankman, Ethel Siegel, Fanny Ornstein, Bertha Sadler, Bessie Chaley, Yetta Kressler and Clara Gabin. Clara Gabin is one of the militants expelled from the I. L. G. W. U. and who has been active in the strike.

Minnie Parish, Olga Levin and Julia Radunicki who had been arrested earlier Wednesday were also arraigned and demanded jury trials. They were released on bonds.

In the West Chicago Avenue police court Susan Pieffer, Catherine Satka and Angelica Kramer were arraigned and released on bonds when they demanded jury trials.

Mechanical Partner Does Team Work with Miss Menth

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN

Herma Menth, a Viennese pianist new to Chicago, played a recital at the Playhouse on the afternoon of March 4. Miss Menth proved to be not only a musician of exceptional gifts, but also a person of a new and different stage personality. She has much youthful vigor and energy, and good insight into the spiritual qualities of the music which she played. She was not afraid to talk to her audience, not too stiff to tell her hearers all about what she was about to play.

Part of the program was given over to two-piano music, the first piano part played by a reproducing piano, the second by Miss Menth. The reproducing piano has been perfected to a point where the difference between its interpretation and that of the artist who made the record is difficult to detect. Accordingly, it has served to make possible the performance of two-piano music more often, without the necessity of an assisting artist, and with a great increase in the possibilities of program making. The only disadvantage is that, once a record is made, the interpretation must remain fixed and unchanging, limiting the performer to only one style of rendition.

State's Attorney of Crawford County Is Held as Bootlegger

DANVILLE, Ill., Mar. 6.—State's Attorney Charles E. Jones of Crawford County, was indicted here today by the Federal Grand Jury on a charge of conspiracy to violate the National Dry Act. The charges involve alleged transactions with others.

Thirty-five indictments were returned today. More than half of the indictments concerned Williamson County cases of dry law violations. The identity of the persons is held secret until the arrests are made.

Disease Under Control.

OAKLAND, Calif., March 6.—Officials today believed they had the foot and mouth disease epidemic under control.

Confusion of Sound at Radio Bedlam in New York City

NEW YORK, March 6.—Auditory hash is being served at the radio show.

Anyone who has gone into a phonograph shop to buy records and has heard "Hot Lips" welling from one thin, glass partitioned cabinet, while "Cohan On the Telephone" squawks in competition from another, both drowning a harp solo, has some idea of what it sounds like at the radio council's exhibit.

Except that at the show at the Hotel Pennsylvania they have no partitions. That makes it worse.

Here, side by side, one demonstrator is tuning in on Pittsburgh, Pa., while an adjacent loud speaker gives its hearers Seattle, Wash., and another a few feet away, has just picked up Jefferson City, Mo.

The show is a national and at times international babel. The voices of a dozen cities speak at once. The air is a confusion of sound as the same antennae pick up for the various adjusted receiving sets the lecture on "How to Wash Dishes," from WEAF on 500 meters and the "Carp Trio" at Atlanta on 660.

The grand ball room where the show is being held, is a conglomeration of neutrodyne receivers, phusiformers and varicouplers, a national capital of noise.

Hit Parking, Tall Buildings.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Mar. 6—Parking automobiles in downtown streets and construction of skyscrapers must stop in all cities to relieve traffic congestion, a half dozen traffic experts told the American Electric Railways Association meeting here today.

Plan Montana Labor Bank.

GREAT FALLS, Mont., March 6.—Local labor organizations led by the railway unions have appointed a committee to investigate and report on the advisability of opening a labor bank in Great Falls. This move comes at a time when Montana non-labor banks are failing right and left. An expert in labor banking from the east is expected to arrive here soon to survey the situation.

Throw Out Burns

William J. Burns, head of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, symbolizes more than any other individual the brutality and mailed-fist of American capitalism.

As director of the world-notorious detective agency, the International Burns Detective Agency, Mr. Burns has railroaded more innocent workers to jail, has smashed more unions and broken more strikes than any other strikebreaker or scab agency under the sun.

As the boss of the most powerful subdivision of the United States Government, his Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, Mr. William J. Burns was the field-marshal in the relentless war waged by the employers against the railway workers in their national strike of 1922. It was the Burns agents, cloaked with Government authority, that forged the affidavits, that committed outrageous acts of violence, which served as the pretense for the infamous Daugherty injunction.

All of these high-handed deeds of Mr. Burns were performed in the interest of the powerful capitalists whose watch-dog he has been for years. Fortunately the great majority of the working class and the farming masses of this country have never failed to recognize Mr. Burns as their mortal enemy. But the disclosures of the Teapot investigation should serve to inspire and unite all workers and farmers to get rid of Mr. Burns, once and for all.

Mr. Burns has attacked all workers, regardless of their political opinions. Now all workers should unite against him. Never before was there so favorable an opportunity for getting rid of this scourge of the labor movement. At the hearings before the Public Lands Committee, Mr. Burns showed himself in all his bestiality, in all his sneaking meanness and cunning hatred of the workers and in all his slavish, sycophantic loyalty to the bosses.

Mr. Burns, the supposed guardian of the country's security and peace, has allowed the use of the Department of Justice secret code to be employed by the millionaire thief McLean against the country which this Department is supposed to be protecting.

It was Mr. Burns who wanted this "dollar-a-year man" to resign from the Department of Justice in order to enable Mr. Daugherty to continue in office more comfortably and help the Sinclairs and Dohenys with less difficulty.

While the workers were being sent to die by the thousands in France and Flanders in the name of the fraudulent dollar democracy, Mr. Gaston B. Means, was in the employ of the German imperialist government. No sooner had the war ended and no sooner had Burns been given his present appointment by Daugherty than this same German imperialist spy was employed by the Bureau of Investigation.

And, while the country was being shocked by the astounding revelations regarding wholesale robbery of its oil resources, Mr. Burns, who calls himself the world's best detective, not only did not put at the disposal of the Committee his powerful agency, but did everything he possibly could to aid and abet the millionaire capitalist criminals.

Mr. Burns has been caught red-handed. Mr. Burns, the sworn enemy of all workers and farmers has been caught at his worst. Mr. Burns, the strike-breaker, the union-smasher, the labor-hater has been exposed in his true light as a most poisonous, dangerous rattlesnake menacing the working masses.

Now is the time to kick Mr. Burns out of office and out of business. Now is the time when the workers and farmers should unite in one mighty effort to rid themselves forever of this scourge that has been devastating the ranks of the laborers and farming masses for many years.

Let the workers and farmers get together and force the Government to throw William J. Burns out of the Department of Justice and to bring him to trial for his numerous crimes.

His Master's Voice

The Chief Executive of our imperialist government has come out flatly against granting the Filipino people national freedom. As standard-bearer of the world's most arrogant and aggressive coterie of capitalist looters, the American employing class, Mr. Coolidge minced no words. The President spoke his masters' voice. "Silent Cal" mercilessly thrust the dagger of oppression into the very heart of the Filipino people.

Of course, our President, who is the political bed-fellow and protector of the oil thieves Sinclair and Doheny, hid behind the time-worn hypocritical idealistic pretensions so characteristic of the lying lackeys of the imperialist gangmen.

Behind the President's smoke screen of poison gas, there was hidden the strikebreaker Coolidge, the pliant tool of American Big Business, the spokesman of the oppressors and exploiters of the Filipino and American masses. General Wood who has been handing out concessions to the capitalists who financed his disastrous primary campaign of 1920 to the extent of two million dollars is lauded and indorsed by the President.

The Coolidge message on the Philippine question is a challenge and a warning to the Filipino people and to the American working and farming masses. The brazen effrontery of our Puritanic president, his attempt to terrorize the Filipino people into submission to the autocrat Wood—are merely desperate efforts to stop the Filipinos from fighting for their national freedom and from exposing General Wood's guilt in numerous scandals in his administration of the Islands that would put the oil steal to shame.

The refusal of the Administration to give the Philippines the national freedom which should be theirs should be a signal for all our workers and farmers to line up solidly with our Filipino brothers to smash the clique of American capitalist Shylocks demanding their pound of flesh from the oppressed Filipino nation. It is the sacred duty of every workers' and farmers' organization to denounce the Coolidge attack on the Filipinos as an attack on the American working masses.

Get Real Investigators

When Senator Walsh was away from Washington recently many became disturbed over the manner in which the Committee on Public Lands was conducting its investigation of the oil scandals.

The situation has not changed fundamentally since the return to the Capital of the senior Senator from Montana. The fact of the matter is that the Committee on Public Lands is eminently unfitted for the task it is now charged with. If the country is to be given a thorogoing investigation of the whole rotten affair, if the country is not to be denied the undiluted truth about this gigantic steal then the Committee on Public Lands should immediately be discharged from the duty of going on with the investigation.

As its personnel stands today, the Public Lands Committee is burdened with such Senators as Lenroot and Smoot. Lenroot from Wisconsin is chairman. He has already shown himself to be distinctly prejudiced in favor of the corruptionists who have been despoiling the country's resources. He has been found to be informing the McLeans, the Falls and their lickspittles, thru circuitous and devious channels it is true, of the plans of the investigating committee.

Then there is Smoot, than whom there is no worse grafter and corruptionist. The Senator from Utah has been caught red-handed passing notes to Doheny at the very moment while he was supposed to be investigating Doheny about shady oil deals. This Latter-Day-Saint of the Mormon Church has been involved in enough scandals to make the Sinclairs and Dohenys blush with shame. We still remember his tariff steal in behalf of the sugar interests.

There can be no effective, real housecleaning, all the talk about it to the contrary notwithstanding, until the present Public Lands Committee itself is subject to some thoro house cleaning. The country has no confidence in the honesty and purpose of more than one of the members of the Committee now investigating the Teapot scandal. We must have a new committee chosen to prosecute the investigation. We must have a committee that will not allow any of its members to work in collusion with the criminals to be tried and that will resolutely set itself to ferreting out the thieves no matter how high up they may be in the Cabinet, the Stock Exchange, or the White House.

Remember Mooney

The frantic appeal that Hiram Johnson is making for the republican presidential nomination and his renewed claims to progressivism once more bring to the fore the cases of Mooney and Billings now rotting in California jails.

The cases of Mooney and Billings present the most elaborate and outrageous frame-up perpetrated by the capitalist class and its government in all the dark annals of workingclass persecution in America.

For nearly eight years Tom Mooney, the valiant fighter of the workingclass, has been in a California dungeon. Both Mooney and Billings have been shown to be innocent, to be completely innocent of any connection with the preparedness bomb explosion. This case has assumed an international significance, as the demonstration by the Petrograd workers for Mooney's freedom indicated.

Four of the witnesses whose evidence enabled the courts to frame Mooney and Billings have confessed perjury since. The judge who sentenced Mooney to be hanged has recommended a new trial. The attorney general of California, a federal mediation commission, and Mr. Densmore, the director of the United States Employment Bureau, have concurred in this recommendation. The innocence of Billings was established long ago. District attorney Brady who succeeded the notorious Fickert, declared more than two years ago that Mooney and Billings couldn't be convicted in a new trial. Yet, he is still languishing in the filthy Folsom jail and Mooney in the San Quentin prison.

But no governor of the state has ever dared to free these innocent workers. The State of California is in the grip of ruthless industrial interests who see in Mooney and Billings their mortal enemies and therefore keep them imprisoned. Only Senator Hiram Johnson can help move these powerful capitalist magnates. However, Hiram Johnson is not doing a thing to free the innocent workingmen. Today the guilt of the suffering and the continued imprisonment of Mooney and Billings is to be fastened on the head of Hiram Johnson who can secure their freedom with very little effort.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)
The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a peasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. The Communist company is summoned. The last issue tells of the counter-revolutionists murdering Robeiko before the eyes of the delicate little school teacher Lisa. She rushes out overwhelmed with horror only to run into further horror.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

CHAPTER X—Continued.

SHE wanted to scream and run, to run and scream again. But she subdued this feeling of instinctive, panic fear, and went up to the railing, straining to guess at the still indistinct outlines of the dark object. She came nearer; her feet sank in the deep snow, and suddenly, somehow all at once, she saw, recognized, and with a low cry sank on the ground.

Clothes torn to pieces, so that the blue naked body showed thru; a woman's clothes, a woman's body; a dark wound above the exposed left breast; stretched out naked hands and uncovered face; tightly screwed up eyes, bitten lips, disordered hair, loose and trodden into the snow. It was the face of Simkova.

Lisa did not scream now, did not weep, but crept over the damp snow to the body, raised the dead head and touched the cold cheeks with the palms of her hands.

And the sky grew blue to the zenith, and color poured over everything, the little houses of the outskirts, the brown road and the grey trees. One side of the sky turned ruby, brighter and brighter, just as if a bonfire had been lit there and was blazing up. From over there the sun would shine out, and a pure, almost imperceptible rosy reflection was added to the blue-white of the snowdrifts and the roofs of the houses.

Clearer and clearer Lisa saw Simkova's face, with its grimace of revulsion and anguish, that pale face with the dead, screwed up eyes, which she had seen so lately beautiful and full of the joy of life. It seemed to her that human life had come to its end. There was nothing left but the dead little houses, and the importunate, regular, also death-like, tapping of the machine gun.

What Do You Think of Our First Story?

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have published many installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. What do you think of the story, its setting, its character, as far as we have gone? We want our readers to let us know. Write down your views and send them in to the DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

And with dull incomprehension she looked at the simple joyful beauty of the Spring sunrise. . . . Who had any need of this marvelous transparency of the air, of that sun? And why was the noise of the machine gun broken by the joyful ringing of bells?

But the belfries were rejoicing. . . . The Easter bell-ringing floated over the town, and the sound of it was interwoven with the tapping of the machine gun and the noise of rifle shooting, which was rattling now at both ends of the town.

The Easter bell-ringing reminded Lisa of God. . . . God? Where was he? She no longer felt Him in herself. . . . She looked round. . . . Little houses with closed shutters, blue snowdrifts, pale sky. The tapping of the machine gun and the ringing of bells. The corpse of a girl, so lately full of joy, beauty and understanding. Where was God? In the Easter ringing of the bells, perhaps, with which the priests, in the name of God, were welcoming this day of violence and death?

Robeiko was right, and life was a struggle, and since, over there, from behind those little houses and grey railings, the sounds of rifle fire were clearly to be heard, the struggle was not yet over. . . . Perhaps life was still going on, since the Communists were still struggling?

Lisa raised herself from the the snow. She rose to her knees. She covered the body of Simkova, and kissed her cold forehead. She got up with difficulty, for her feet were benumbed, and then, as quickly as she could, she went in the direction from which, now quite near by, came the sounds of shooting.

CHAPTER XI.

THE door opened for a few seconds. . . . The doubtful light of an electric torch fell into the darkness and damp of the cellar. A few curses and blows and Klimin was thrust into the cellar. Again darkness in which was visible the dim blue ghost of the cellar window. There was the noise of steps going off up the stairs.

Klimin had been knocked down by a blow . . . He stood up and listened. It seemed to him that he heard some sort of rustling.

"Is there any one here?
"Klimin?"
"Stalmakhov?"

They knew each other by their voices and exchanged handgrips in the darkness. Suddenly Klimin groaned.

"Look out, Stalmakhov, my shoulder is shot thru," and, after the momentary happiness, both remembered their situation and felt sad.

"We have both fallen into one trap, Klimin. . . . All the same, I'm glad that it's with you and not with any one else that I shall spend the last night of my life. . . . But I'd be still more glad if you were not here just now, but up there where that shooting is going on. . . . How did you fall into their hands? . . ."

"Gornuikh found me and sent me to the Commission, but the lads had not waited for me in the Commission, but had retreated, fighting as they went, to the railway station. Probably that's why I heard the shooting not from the direction of the Commission but as if it were on one side, further to the left. I fell into an ambush close to the Commission. They shot me in the right shoulder. My arm, hung loose at once, like a whip. Or they would never have got me alive. They recognized me at once, of course. Who of that filth does not know Klimin? They knocked me about pretty badly. But now, Stalmakhov, it looks as if they had too much on their hands to think of us. Such a fire has started from the direction of the railway station, it's clear enough they are finding things hot, or they'd never have left us in peace. But did you find Karaulov?"

"No. . . . He had gone off somewhere. They got me with an ambush, too. But I laid one of them out all the same. The third shot I meant for myself but it missed fire. They kill you, that's nothing. But they will torture me badly. I did the corn collection thruout the district. So far they have not recognized me. But how I want to smoke, Klimin. It's more than I can bear. And, more than I want to smoke, I want to live." He tried to laugh but could not, and broke off with a sigh. "Klimin, you are here, and already I'm thinking of being saved. That's because you did save me from death once. Remember, during the collection of provision toll?"

"I remember. It was nothing."

"No, brother, it was not nothing. The noose was round my neck when you rode up with your lads. I was then expecting death for certain, but you brought salvation. Perhaps it'll be the same now."

"No. It seems this time we are really done for, Comrade Stalmakhov. I remember it well now, and pale you were when we were cutting the ropes off your wrists with a sword. That was when we became acquainted."

"True. A year and a half I've known you. After that we worked together on the District Committee. . . . I always liked being with you, and always wanted to say so, but when we met, it was never more than 'Good day,' 'Goodbye,' or 'Give me a light,' and that was all the talking we did."

Both were silent. The shooting over towards the railway station grew more distant, and sounded duller, and duller. What with blows, loss of blood and anxiety, Klimin was seized with weariness. He lay on the floor and touched the cold flagstones with his forehead. And he thought of how in this cellar of the Cheka many hundreds of people, sentenced to death by him, had awaited death just as now he, Klimin, was awaiting it. He remembered single sentences from Surikov's letter, his words about pity for the sufferings of another's organism.

A fellow by the name of Ed Howe—Dr. Frank Crane knows him—we don't, says that Russia is ruled by nine men. Ed does not like the idea. He thinks perhaps that's eight too many. The czar used to do the job all by his lonesome. And Ed, being a good American, is strong for efficiency. We have not heard, however, that the nine have been caught selling out Russia for a satchelful of dough. Whenever they catch anybody in Russia thinking of doing that he finds his thinking machinery missing. Here in the U. S. he would begin to enjoy life.

The grave diggers in Naples, Italy have gone on strike. They demand shorter hours, more pay and a higher standard of living. Since the Fascisti government came into power, the number of deaths has increased enormously, resulting in wear and tear on the bodies of the grave diggers. Mussolini threatens to give the grave diggers their own medicine unless they bury their demands with the dead.

Much joy was created in England recently over the announcement that the United States Shipping Board was to sell its ships at auction. This is a good chance for the man who was looking for a ship to bring freedom to Ireland wrapped up in ham sandwiches, as was predicted by Saint Columkille a few hundred years A. D.

J. P. Morgan went to Europe after shackling Japan with a $150,000,000 chain in the form of a loan. He plans to join his family at Naples on board the yacht Corsair—rather appropriate cognomen—after which he will "indulge in a lazy cruise of the Mediterranian idling among the Grecian isles and sailing as far east as Egypt." This should be gratifying to the wage slaves all over the world who are toiling to make Mr. Morgan's investment pay so that he and his family can idle among the Grecian islands.

The Chicago Tribune and the Herald-Examiner are engaged in a criminal-catching contest. It is a well known fact that the big dailies have their undercover men in the underworld, that they are on such terms with the police that the latter feel themselves under the obligation to tip off the newspapers when going to make a raid or capture a criminal or suspect. Indeed it appears that the business of arresting those suspected of crime is now largely the function of the capitalist press here and that the police only move when ordered to do so by the newspapers or perhaps come to the editorial offices and lug the prisoner away after he has been tracked down and apprehended by the press.

• • •

This is a very interesting situation and it is a matter of surprise that those political chiropodists known as liberals who are usually busy scraping bunions off the feet of the capitalist system have not already raised a loud outcry over this state of affairs. The capitalist papers actually commit crime in illegally arresting people whom they suspect of being in a position of information that will enable them to beat a rival. But there is no move made to stop this dirty work.

• • •

A few weeks ago the Herald-Examiner arrested a man suspected of being on the inside of the murder of a notorious gunman by the name of Dougherty and his wife. The suspect was detained for twenty-four hours in the Herald-Examiner prison jokingly called the "goldfish room" after the notorious chamber of horrors in the detective bureau where those who will not say what the police want them to, will say it with hose if not with flowers.

• • •

Bill Engelke, the gentleman of the underworld captured by the Herald-Examiner, has since been indicted, causing the newspaper responsible for his apprehension to chuckle with pride over its contribution to the cause of justice. This caused the Tribune to froth at the mouth. An editorial commenting on the ways of unscrupulous newspaper rivals appeared in that respectable organ. The Hearst sheet retorted with a loud haw! haw! which appears to have gotten under the hide of the "World's Greatest Newspaper."

CALL EDITOR McLEAN TO TESTIFY IN OIL PROBE

Dever Held Responsible For Brutality of "Boss" Crowe Thugs by Union Committee

Charging Mayor William E. Dever, democrat, with responsibility of the conduct of the special police from the office of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, republican, in brutally assaulting unionists involved in the dress makers' strike, a committee of four from the Chicago Federation of Labor, headed by President John Fitzpatrick, informed the mayor that unless there was a speedy change for the better in the attitude of the police toward the strikers, the organized workers of Chicago would hold him to a strict accountability.

The members of the committee that waited on the mayor, besides John Fitzpatrick, were Anton Johannsen, Victor Olander, and John Clay.

Mayor Dever was informed that the conduct of his uniformed policemen was no better than that of Attorney Crowe's plain clothes sluggers.

The mayor was informed that he had it in his power to withdraw all the state's attorney's office police assigned to duty there and thus effectively stop the activities of Crowe in attempting to break the strike. He said that organized labor would demand that the mayor do this unless Crowe at once recalled from strike duty all police he has assigned to such work.

The Manhandler.

The second point that Fitzpatrick made was that Captain John H. Alcock who has been put in charge of the strike detail of regular police was such a hard boiled person in handling prisoners and other people that he had been for years assigned to the archives section of the record department of the police. There he came in contact with no one and he did not have a chance to be hardboiled. Now he has been dragged from that job and put in charge of the strike detail presumably because of his reputation as a hard egg. Fitzpatrick demanded that he be removed from strike duty at once and put back in the record department.

At present, Fitzpatrick said there are hundreds of sluggers in the strike area. They are there for no good. Their job is to beat up workers and make trouble. Unless the police at once chase them from the strike area the labor movement of Chicago would consider that it is privileged to do the same as the bosses have done and hire sluggers.

In order to make it impossible for sluggers to beat up pickets and pose as police Fitzpatrick demanded that all plain clothes men on the strike detail be ordered to wear their badges on the outside of their coats. He said that scores of sluggers have beaten up hundreds of workers by posing as police officers.

Fitzpatrick also read the letter to the mayor which he sent to Robert E. Crowe.

After Fitzpatrick had finished Dever said that within an hour he would confer with the chief of police and if there was not a marked improvement in the way police handled strikers within a few hours the committee should come back and he would see that something was done.

About a dozen of the boss dress manufacturers have sent letters to their former employees advising them that they intended to open for business on a "strictly open shop basis." The workers were asked to let the bosses know at once if they intended to work. The reply of the workers has been to bring the letters offering jobs to the strike headquarters and turn them over to the secretary of the strike committee.

All the letters from the different bosses are exactly the same. The letters show that while the bosses want the workers to come back to work under the blessings of the "open shop" they themselves understand the value of the united front.

The letters all have the same sweet way of addressing the workers as "Dear Miss So and So." To workers who are used in the shops to having the foreman swear and curse at them this seems to be a pretty piece of hypocrisy.

The Invitation to Scab.

Here is what the letters say:

"We have decided to begin to operate our factory on a strictly open shop basis.

"If you wish to retain your position it is necessary that you should advise us as soon as possible.

"We have arranged for protection

JUDGE ISSUES LABOR GAGS ON DEMAND

Bosses Have Friend in Denis Sullivan

"Injunction King" Denis Sullivan doesn't want any mere circuit judge to interfere with his business of taking a poke at union labor by issuing injunctions. That was revealed yesterday when Judge Sullivan, who is robed in all the majesty of a superior court judge issued an injunction against the Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union on behalf of the Francine Frock company in spite of the fact that they already have an injunction. The old injunction was issued several months ago by the circuit court while the union was trying to organize the workers in the Francine shop.

Peter Sissman, attorney for the union, pointed out to the court that there was already an injunction almost exactly duplicating the one being applied for issued for the Francine company. "If the court please, there is already an injunction which this complainant has taken out against exactly the same people. There is no reason in the world for having two injunctions. It would be very irregular," he said.

Sullivan admitted that there might be something in the argument of Sissman but he signed on the dotted line and on a motion by Sissman to dissolve the injunction set it on the contested motion calendar. It may be weeks before it will be possible for the union thru its lawyers to tell the union's side of the story.

Weiss, Clothing Boss, Warns Chicago Citizen to Keep Off Streets

Thomas Holland, Labor Manager for the clothing firm of Hart, Schaffner and Marx and editor of a University magazine has an idea that he is entitled to the use of this city's streets for the legitimate purpose of walking on them.

Arthur Weiss, clothing manufacturer at 315 West Adams Street, has an entirely different opinion. Our readers will remember that Mr. Holland was arrested on Monday evening while in the vicinity of that gentleman's establishment by an officer from state's attorney Crowe's office and held in the lobby of the Weiss factory until the patrol wagon took him to the South Clark Street station. The charge against him was dismissed the following morning.

Mr. Holland being a man with definite human sympathies is interested in the progress of the strike of the ladies' garment workers. On Wednesday evening while sauntering in the vicinity of Market and Adams Street he was approached by Mr. Arthur Weiss of the dress making firm who tried to convince him that the workers were in the wrong. Mr. Holland just as strenuously argued in behalf of the workers' right for a decent wage and proper working conditions.

This infuriated the clothing magnate so he violently assailed Mr. Holland for holding such views and threatened to have the use of the streets forbidden to him. "I will see that you are kept off the streets," shrieked Weiss. Mr. Holland now echoes the DAILY WORKER querry "Who owns the streets?"

Kansas Miners' Convention By Unanimous Vote Invites Howat and Comrades to Attend Sessions

By TOM TIPPETT

Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press

PITTSBURGH, Kan., March 7.—An invitation to their deposed Kansas officials and any other coal diggers to attend the convention of District 14, United Mine Workers, in session here, was unanimously voted as the first order of business the day following the president's order to close sessions. The delegates then voted to prevent the chairman from adjourning the convention without a majoriy vote of the delegates.

Another proposition that kept the troubled waters churning was a motion that "no one but a delegate be permitted to speak on the floor unless given that right by a majority vote of the house." This was openly aimed at the five international representatives who are attending the convention, only one of them as a delegate. An unopposed amendment was offered to permit any one attacked the right to reply.

Resolutions calling for old age pensions and a demand on the Kansas governor to force coal operators to abide by state mining laws were passed. One resolutoon unique in size precipitated a lengthy discussion. Its full text is:

"We want an organizer here."

It uncovered the old Lewis-Howat wound that will be long in healing. There are approximately 4,000 non-union coal miners in Kansas. All formerly belonged to the 100% union of Howat days. They were expelled by the international in the revocation of local unions that followed the industrial court strike when Howat went to jail. Why these men are not in the union and how to reclaim them are unsolved questions. The $5 fine has been dropped by the present district administration—by agreement with the international.

The coal operators have taken advantage and forced down wages in the non-union fields. That threatens the organized standard and injures the unorganized men themselves. Elements of pride and revenge hamper the solution.

Ludendorff Treason Trial Nearly Killed by Lawyer Squabble

MUNICH, March 7.—Trial of General Ludendorff, Adolf Hitler and others for treason was resumed today, after Defense Attorney Kohl had apologized for the utterances which caused the prosecutor dramatically to break off the hearing on Thursday.

The judge warned that a repetition of the offense might endanger the defense's case and said he desired the cause continued without unpleasantness.

A minor witness was examined. Former Bavarian Dictator Von Kahr was ready to go on the stand.

STONINGTON, Conn., March 7.—Stonington's meanest thief stole a bible and an American flag from the G. A. R. hall.

FALL AND ZEV LADIES GET TANGLED IN WIRES THAT SNARED HUBBIES

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Mrs. Albert B. Fall and Mrs. J. W. Zevely were drawn into the oil inquiry today when the senate investigating committee directed the telegraph companies to furnish the committee all copies of telegrams sent to them or by them between Dec. 1 and March 6.

Mrs. Fall is the wife of Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, and central figure in the oil inquiry. Mrs. Zevely is the wife of Harry F. Sinclair's Washington attorney. Fall stayed at Zevely's apartment here when he became ill following his return from Florida.

Federal Jury Indicts Anti-Klan Officials of Williamson Co.

DANVILLE, Ill., March 7.—Sheriff George T. Galligan of Williamson county, who twice during the past few months was instrumental in calling state troops to the county, has been indicted by the federal grand jury here on a charge of conspiracy to violate the national prohibition law.

Galligan has not been arrested, but will be asked to report here for arraignment Monday.

John Layman, Galligan's former chief deputy, also was indicted on the same charge. Layman is missing.

Standard-Sinclair Gas War Worries Little Oil Fellows

Independent oil concerns today were fearful of a gasoline price war between the Standard Oil of Indiana and the Sinclair Oil company.

The Standard reduced prices here approximately two cents a gallon to oil stations. Sinclair is expected to follow.

Officials of both companies denied a price war is in prospect.

FINNISH SECTION OF WORKERS PARTY VOTES AID TO DAILY WORKER

The Finnish Section of the Workers Party, in convention assembled in Imperial Hall, Chicago, unanimously passed a resolution congratulating the DAILY WORKER on its rapid growth and the establishment of its own printing press and pledging the continued support of the Finnish Communists to the first Communist daily in the English language.

* * * *

The resolution signed by F. Burman and George Halonen reads:

The Convention of the Finnish Section of the Workers Party congratulates the DAILY WORKER and expresses its satisfaction that the DAILY WORKER has grown up so rapidly that it is already able to move into its own home and establish its own printing press:

The Finnish Section of the Workers Party will continue to give its moral and economical help and energy to build this our first English working class daily, a powerful weapon for the American working class.

On behalf of the convention: Fahle Burman and George Halonen.

Burns Stool Tries to Bribe Burns Boss: Is Indicted

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 7.—A federal grand jury today returned indictments charging conspiracy to bribe against Gaston B. Means, Elmer W. Jarnecke, his secretary, and Thomas Felder, a New York attorney, alleging an attempt to bribe Attorney General Daugherty and Col. William Hayward, United States district attorney for southern New York, in connection with the so-called "Glass Casket Company fraud."

Means' name has been mentioned several times in connection with the senate investigation into oil leases in Washington. He formerly was an agent of the department of justice.

Prisoners convicted in connection with Glass Casket frauds informed officials they raised $65,000 when they first learned action was intended against them and delivered the money to Means, Jarnecke and Felder on assurances the action could be prevented.

Later, however, they were indicted and convicted of fraudulent stock selling and started action to get their $65,000 back.

Gary and His Travels.

BUENOS AIRES, Mar. 7.—Judge Elbert Gary of the U. S. Steel Corporation, arrived here last night for a brief stay before continuing his South American tour with a visit to the iron mines of Minas Geraes, Brazil.

NEW TESTIMONY HITS THE REPUBLICAN SENATE WHIP; SMEAR DAUGHERTY AGAIN

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Clearing the way for a new climax of its investigation—the testimony of Edward B. McLean—the Senate Oil Committee today brought out additional disclosures, involving the names of Senator Curtis, republican whip of the senate, and Attorney General Daugherty.

McLean is to be called next Tuesday.

As these things developed, Daugherty returned from Florida, apparently unmoved by renewed rumors of his forced resignation and took up preparation of his defense before a senate investigating committee next week.

Senator Curtis was identified by Ira E. Bennett, editor of the Washington Post, McLean's newspaper, as "The Principal" named in telegrams from Bennett in Washington to McLean at Palm Beach, whose identity had been speculated about for days.

Later Curtis authorized a statement that he "absolutely and flatly repudiates" portions of Bennett's testimony.

After Senator Curtis issued his statement, Senator Walsh said he would recall Bennett to the stand tomorrow to clear up discrepancies between Bennett's testimony and Curtis' statement.

Curtis Wants to Go On Stand.

Curtis asked Walsh to permit him to go before the committee tomorrow to make his statement under oath.

"There was never anything that passed between Mr. Bennett and myself and I had no conversation with anyone that would make it possible to refer to me as the principal or to designate me in any other way than by my own name," Curtis said.

Curtis in his statement said he first saw Bennett early in January and then again when Senator Norris attacked McLean in the senate. Norris made only one attack upon McLean and that was on Jan. 30. The message that Bennett sent referring to "the principal" was dated Jan. 29.

Bennett had said he saw Curtis the day before he sent the telegram.

Bennett also identified an "H. D." in one of the telegrams as Attorney General Harry Daugherty, stating that he saw Daugherty regarding some phase of the oil matter and that Daugherty sent word thru him to McLean not to worry, that it was Daugherty and not McLean who was the real target of the investigation.

McLean On Stand Tuesday.

After questioning Bennett, Senator Walsh, chief investigator of the committee, announced he would try to clear up all testimony quickly and put McLean on the witness stand next Tuesday.

The committee also decided to take up tomorrow in executive session the nomination by President Coolidge of Samuel Knight, California attorney, to sue for return of sections 16 and 36 in the California reserves, now held by the Standard Oil company.

Talk With Cal.

After the cabinet meeting Daugherty remained with President Coolidge for a few minutes.

When he came out, he was asked if the situation had changed.

"How do I know?" he responded. "I haven't seen anybody."

Daugherty went from the White House to his office at the department of justice.

3 German Workers Die; 20,000 Locked Out in Anilin Fight

MAYENCE, March 7. — Three workers were killed and 38 wounded in fighting with police at the Badische anilin works at Ludwigshafen today. Five police were wounded. Serious trouble is feared.

One worker was killed yesterday and twenty wounded when the factory closed its doors, locking out 20,000 men.

BANKRUPTCY IMPENDING AS FRANC DROPS

Poincare Wildly Clutches At Currency Inflation

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, March 7.—Charging the Banque de France with "entering upon a policy of currency inflation," the Manchester Guardian today declares solution of the reparations problem is the only means to save the French franc from ultimate dissolution.

The franc opened at an unprecedented low of 109.55 to the pound sterling, approximately 3.90 cents.

* * * *

25.98 to Dollar.

PARIS, March 7.—At 2:30 p. m. the franc was at the unprecedented low of 25.98 to the dollar.

Premier Poincare announced he would explain in the chamber the fall of the franc and the reasons for increased circulation of Banque de France notes.

Apparently obeying instructions from the Government, the French newspapers refrained today from commenting on the latest record of the franc to unprecedented low levels.

Opening at 25.40 to the dollar, the franc gave no early evidence of recovery from its weak position.

Premier Poincare attributes the financial situation to hesitancy of the Senate in approving his program of fiscal reform.

The Echo de Paris says the premier sent a note to the Senate committee which is considering the financial measures proposed by the government, saying:

Hints at Dictatorship.

"France's enemies have placed their hopes in the Senate's hostility. Therefore I will not permit obstruction to the government's program in any form."

Senator Bernager, however, insists the crisis is due to treasury shortage. The Banque de France issued 3,500,000,000 in bank notes since the first of the year.

"Moreover," says the Senator, "the bank's advances to the state have reached 22,000,000,000. The legal limit is 23,200,000,000.

"We've nearly reached the roof. That's the brutal fact. It's useless trying to conceal it."

Allen Is Rebuff to France.

NEW YORK, March 7.—Maj. Gen. Henry T. Allen, former commander of the American army of occupation in Germany, does not intend to resign as the executive of the American Olympic committee because France objects to him.

Coolidge and "The Teapot Special"

OUR Teapot special will not spare Coolidge. It's now clear to everybody that the President has for sometime been one of the leading figures in the oil scandal. The story of Coolidge and the part he played in protecting the McLeans, Sinclairs, and Dohenys in their brigandage will be thoroly analyzed and told, in its entirety in our special issue.

Day in and day out it is growing more evident that the Teapot Dome affair is far from having spent itself. It is likewise growing plainer that the big interests are about to renew their energetic efforts to stifle the investigation. The Senators and Cabinet officers at Washington openly admit that to date only one-tenth, at most, of the facts have been revealed. These "gentlemen" are terror-stricken and dare not tell the workers and farmers how they have been running the government for the bosses.

The Teapot Special will be a classic achievement in supplying the workers with these facts which their bosses hate to have them learn and remember. The Teapot special will not be gentle, with the official fact-fixers of the government. If you want the truth about one of the blackest hold-ups committed against the masses of this country, if you want your friend in the shop, in the mine, in the mill, or on the farm, to know what's what about the government and the capitalists, then don't fail to order your bundle of the Teapot Special. Don't wait, order now. Tomorrow may be too late.

Suspected Congressmen Loudly Proclaim Innocence of Bribery

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Harrassed by knowledge that their names were being bandied about the halls of Congress in sensational gossip, Representatives Frederick Zihlman, Maryland, and John Langley, Kentucky, today came forward with statements denying they are the "two congressmen" involved in evidence of bribery laid before a Chicago grand jury.

Both Zihlman and Langley demanded specific charges, saying they are prepared to answer in detail. Their voluntary statements followed adoption of a resolution calling on the Department of Justice to give the House the names of the two congressmen involved in the Chicago grand jury disclosures and the charges against them.

BROOKHART HAS GOODS ON DAUGHERTY

Sensations Coming Monday; Harry Sees Cal.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Unshaken in his determination not to quit office under fire Attorney General Daugherty came back to Washington today to face renewed demands for his resignation and to plan his defense before the Senate Committee which next week will begin investigating him.

It was reported, tho without verification from any official source, that the president would ask Daugherty's withdrawal from the cabinet.

Sensational Evidence.

Plans of the senate committee investigating Daugherty included:

1. Decision to open hearings on Monday or Tuesday with some sensational evidence instead of with the federal trade commission cases, as was originally planned.
2. Issuance of a dozen subpoenaes, returnable Monday for persons whose identity the committee kept in deepest secrecy.
3. Announcement that Daugherty would be called to the stand early in the investigation to explain evidence with which he will be confronted.

Brookhart Got It.

The switch in the committee's plans for opening the hearings with the federal trade commission cases followed a secret conference between Senator Brookhart, Iowa, chairman of the committee, and someone vaguely identified as "in or formerly connected with the department." Brookhart admitted "substantial evidence" of a "very sensational nature" had been put in his hands. He immediately transmitted it to Senator Wheeler, Montana, committee prosecutor, who refused to discuss it.

Senator Wheeler today announced appointment of A. B. Melsener of Butte, Mont., as the legal assistant which the committee authorized him to employ to aid in sifting and arranging evidence for presentation to the committee. Melsener has been an attorney in Butte for 20 years and has been prominent in democrat politics in Montana.

Cal's Pipeline Tips Him Off to Senate Evidence: McLean Told Not to Worry In 'Count's' Wires

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Sensational disclosure that President Coolidge sent personal, friendly telegrams to Edward B. McLean during the oil scandal probe left the White House today the center of excited interest as the Senate Committee continued perusal of telegrams and examination of witnesses.

Repercussions of the committee findings were crashing thru the committee itself, the senate and up and down the rank and file of both old parties as charges of partisanship were flung back and forth.

"Leak" To President.

The Teapot Dome committee was plunged into dissension over indications President Coolidge had been "tipped off" in advance about messages concerning him.

Investigators were so aroused they threatened to carry the matter to the floor of the Senate, or summon witnesses to ascertain if evidence of a "leak" in the committee proved true.

The committee knows that senators outside the investigating committee received information on what transpired in the executive session of the committee Wednesday. They believe the senators went to Mr. Coolidge and informed him that his name had been found on telegrams to McLean, so that he could prepare statements regarding his motives for the telegrams.

Ira E. Bennett, editorial writer of the Washington Post, is expected to testify concerning this message, of which he was the author.

A half dozen more telegrams which may furnish new leads are to be read into the record.

The Palm Beach Telegrams.

Two new code telegrams to McLean at Palm Beach from a mysterious sender in Washington who either left the messages unsigned or signed himself "Count" were deciphered for the committee today by W. F. Friedman, army code expert.

Other code telegrams were signed "I. E. B." Ira E. Bennett is editor of the Washington Post, McLean's newspaper.

The messages follow:

> "Washington, D. C., Feb. 11.
> "Edward McLean,
> Palm Beach, Fla.
> "Telephoned me last night. Said tell you not to worry.
> "COUNT."

> "Washington, D. C., Feb. 14.

Friedman told the committee that X, Y, Z, Whyza, Yannf and Wuypa, were code symbols arbitrarily assigned to certain persons whose identity he could not establish from the messages.

As soon as the committee convened Walsh made the following statement:

Privileged Messages.

"Some days ago Mr. Renahan, attorney for Senator Fall, sent a letter to the committee protesting against introduction of telegraphic communications between Fall and his counsel. Renahan claimed these messages were privileged under the rules of evidence.

"The question was submitted to presidential counsel and they advised that such telegrams could not legally be introduced."

Walsh then moved that the telegraph companies be instructed to withhold messages passing between Fall and his counsel. The motion was adopted.

Walsh also made a statement in answer to criticisms that the committee was going outside its jurisdiction.

"I think the committee has kept fully within its rights," Walsh said.

Senator Kendrick pointed out that all evidence admitted had been put in on unanimous consent of the entire committee.

The Fruit List.

From Ira E. Bennett, editor of McLean's newspaper, the Washington Post, the committee first learned that a person referred to in the telegrams as "Apples," was Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, and with McLean, a central figure in the oil scandal.

Bennett said he did not know who "Peaches" and "Apricots," other persons referred to in the messages, were.

Referring to new code messages read today and signed "Count," Bennett said he was sometimes referred to by his associates as "The Count," because he had been decorated by the king of Italy.

Daugherty In McLean Wires.

The name of Attorney General Daugherty was designated in code in one of the McLean messages ,it was revealed to the oil committee today.

Ira E. Bennett, editorial writer of the McLean Washington newspaper, declared the "H. D." referred to in a message he sent to Edward B. McLean, was the attorney general.

The message stated that Bennett had an appointment to see the attorney general at 4 p. m., February 14, the date the message was sent.

Bennett said he did not know what he wanted to see Daugherty about but assumed "it was in connection with the case."

"Your conference with Daugherty was arranged apparently for one o'clock on Feb. 14?" Senator Walsh, chief prosecutor of the oil committee, asked.

"Yes, but I don't think I saw him until later, possibly the next day," Bennett answered.

Children Stories Wanted by Readers of Daily Worker

To The DAILY WORKER: I can't express my pleasure in seeing for once, a real working class daily paper. I have been working hard to build a daily working class paper, not only at the present time but in 1916 and 1917 when there was a campaign for a paper of this kind by the Socialist Party. However, the work of that time proved useless, since we had so many "labor fakers" in the organization.

When the real militants put their shoulders together they show results. I read the paper every day and after I am finished with it I distribute it in the neighborhood. I am satisfied with the news you put in but my children want to read more stories like the one about the gray dog and the colored slaves, also some funny stories. If they don't get these stories in The DAILY WORKER they cry for the capitalist papers. Please Comrades, do all you can to please these youths to save them for the militant working class.

Yours for a better world, JOHN LACKO, Chicago.

BURNS THINKS HIS STOOLPIGEONS 'FINEST' IN WORLD

No Body of Men Like Them, He Says

By LAURENCE TODD
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Bragging, blustering, sneering in turn, with the arrogant assurance of a plantation foreman wielding a blacksnake whip, Detective Burns, director bureau of investigations, department of justice, faced Senator Walsh of Motnana across the table of the senate committee on public lands and declared that he would have been "glad and eager to make an honest investigation" of the oil scandal if anyone had asked him.

Of the detective force under his control, in the bureau, he loudly announced that they were "the finest, cleanest investigating organization in the world," equal to any task, and made up of "fine, straight, honest clean men."

His Agent's Perjury.

He seemed so anxious to have this statement accepted, and so unconvinced that anybody present believed him, that Senator Dill of Washington felt compelled to ask him whether he read the testimony of his special agent, McLean, owner of the Washington Post, which amounted to a confession that McLean had committed perjury in an attempt to mislead the senate as to the Fall-Doheny corruption payment.

Dill then asked him whether he were quite sure of the honesty, purity and veracity of his staff. To which the detective replied, that McLean was "only one of these dollar-a-year fellers; they dont amount to much anyhow."

Burns' Go-Between.

Mrs. Jessie Duckstein, special agent under Burns since last November, and for two years previously his confidential secretary, told how she had been called to Burns' office on Feb. 2 and told to inform her husband, who is private secretary to McLean, in Palm Beach, that senators were inquiring into McLean's being a special agent of the department of justice. She was to hint that McLean should resign.

She took from Burns' office a copy of the secret code used in ordinary business in the bureau, and for the first time in her life sent a message in that code. The message read: "Special inquiries being made special agent department of justice; Burns thinks this important information."

McLean Still Agent.

Members of the committee were skeptical as to these words being designed to say that McLean's status as a special agent was being investigated. Burns, however, supported the testimony of his special agent, and said that he had thought to have the hint of resignation conveyed to McLean in order that "none of this Teapot Dome should be hung on the attorney general; he had troubles enough of his own." He confessed that McLean is still a special agent and has a code book.

Francis H. McAdoo, son of W. G. McAdoo, sprung a sensation when he testified that A. Mitchell Palmer was described to him in a letter from McLean, his client, as being attorney for Fall and Sinclair, as well as for McLean. Palmer, on the stand, a few days ago, testified that he never was counsel for either Fall or Sinclair.

Ex-Veterans Bureau Head to Appear for Trial March 17

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Charles R. Forbes, former Veterans' Bureau head, today gave $10,000 bond for his appearance before the federal court in Chicago on March 17.

Forbes appeared before the United States Commissioner George H. MacDonald here and pleaded not guilty to two charges of conspiracy to defraud the United States government and one charge of accepting a bribe.

Forbes was indicted by a Chicago grand jury on charges of accepting a bribe from contracting interests headed by J. W. Thompson, St. Louis, and of having entered into agreement with a group of contractors to allot them all Veterans' Bureau construction contracts.

John Henrichson Shakes Wicked Subscription List, as Big Contest Approaches Last Lap

Averaging more than 100 points a week, John Heinrichson of the Englewood English Branch is leading all other contestants in the "1,000 New Subscribers by March 10th" campaign, with a point score of 355 at the close of the third week.

Heinrichson, not in the least worried by the entry of the "Mystery Contestant," is plugging along to reach 500 points when the contest closes. If there is anyone in Chicago who can pass this mark for individuals, he will have to do some tall hustling.

Comrade Plav, the "mystery" contestant no longer a mystery, now holds second place with a score of 138. This can surely be considered a good average for the past ten days, when Plav started on the job. While for a few days he threatened Heinrichson for first place, he is now in the position of himself being pushed to maintain second place. With only six points to her credit five days ago, Anna Fox of the Douglas Park English Branch is now almost on the verge of passing the 100 mark.

Second place is by no means decided. Plav and Anna Fox are closely pressed by Tric Wickstrom of the West Side Scandinavian Branch, E. Trivia of the First South Slavic Branch. Shaffir of the South Side English Branch and Berglund of the Lake View Scandinavian Branch.

The way the Douglas Park English Branch, now holding place among the English branches with 147 points to its credit, has been coming to the front during the past week, their chances for passing the North West Branch with 181 points are exceedingly good. All indications point to the Englewood Branch carrying off first prize, but no predictions can be made as to second place. It is still a free-for-all.

The North West Russian Branch, the West Side and Lake View Scandinavian Branches, and the First South Slavic Branches stand at the head of the list for Foreign Language Branches. Predictions as to the standing when the contest closes can only be predictions, as the order has been changing nearly every day.

Chicago is wondering why news from Lake Erie has been so scarce. But then—that can be readily understood. There is at least some difference between a point score of 200 points for a month and 355 for three weeks. Chicago's spirit in the campaign is expressed in the slogan "DAILY WORKER means Daily Work for Party Workers," and with that Detroit or any other city cannot afford to rest on its "laurels."

Stock Gamblers Are Mauled During Bank Strike in Austria

(By The Federated Press)

VIENNA, March 7.—The strike of bank employes here, which began early in February, is spreading to the Austrian provinces. The demands of the bank clerks and other white-collar workers are being supported by the socialist and Communist parties. The strike, which has paralyzed the banking activities thruout the country, has given rise to several street demonstrations. During a recent outdoor meeting of the strikers, a banker and stock exchange gambler, Schwarzwald, narrowly escaped serious discomfort at the hands of the striking men and women. He fled under police protection.

HIGH PRICES FOR LUMBER; PAY REDUCED

Lumber Trust Makes Huge Profits

(By The Federated Press)

SUPERIOR, Wis., March 7.—Low wages paid labor in the logging camps of northern Wisconsin and Michigan make possible the huge profits of the lumber trust. Lumber is selling close to 100 per cent above the pre-war price level while the workers who endure the hardships are getting only from $40 to $50 a month, with emphasis on the lower figure.

The wages of these workers increased slightly in February when the companies could not get enough men to work for the low rates paid in January. According to reports to the Northern Hemlock and Hardwood Association, teamsters, sawyers, swampers and roadmen in northern Michigan got increases ranging from $1 to $3 a month. Woodsmen's wages in the Wisconsin bay shore district show increases of from $1 to $4 a month.

The report shows wages of common labor at the mills in northern Michigan running from $3.25 to $3.50 with an average of $3,33. a day Swampers are averaging $51 a month. In the Bay Shore and eastern Wisconsin districts common labor is getting from $2.75 to $3.75 a day with an average of $3.40. Swampers average $52 a month.

Militant Negroes On Picket Line: Put Scab Issue Before Churches

Success attends the opening of the campaign which colored girl strikers are waging to prevent the furnishing of scabs to the garment bosses.

At a rousing meeting of colored girl militants at 180 W. Washington street yesterday announcement was made that one of the largest Negro employment agencies has promised to send no scabs into the strike zone. Vigorous picket-line work by the colored and Negro volunteers from other industries was also reported.

The committees which had been elected at the last meeting reported. The committee which was elected to get the co-operation of the colored churches reported that they had written a letter to all the ministers of colored churches in Chicago asking them to call the attention of their congregations to the fact that here was a strike on in the dress and waist industry. Speakers will follow up the letter.

Letter to Churches.

The letter follows:

Reverend, Sir:

"We wish to call your attention to the fact that at present there is a strike of garment workers of this city against their employers. The strikers are demanding a ten per cent increase in salary and forty hours of work a week.

"There are a large number of colored girls in the unions and they, along with their white co-workers, are determined and devoted to the cause of organized labor. For they feel that only thru organization and resistance can the colored girl, who when not in the unions, is the most exploited and oppressed, procure a reasonable living wage.

"The greatest blow to the cause of the strikers at this moment is the constant stream of non-union colored girls, who are now being brought into the shops to defeat the strikers. These girls are being supplied by various colored labor agencies on the south side. This is unfair to the union girls of both races, and it is the thing that has contributed more to the state of antagonism existing between the two races today than anything else.

"We are kindly asking you to give this condition your most earnest consideration, and hoping you will help these girls in their ardent struggle by advising your congregation not to aid the employers to defeat the union by sending colored girls to take the jobs of the strikers. Thanking you for your co-operation, we remain, Sincerely yours, A COMMITTEE OF COLORED STRIKERS."

Urban League Behaving.

The committee on employment agencies reported that the Urban League has agreed not to furnish scabs to the dress manufacturers taking the stand that they will not help defeat the workers in their fight. But they bared the fact that scores of employment offices on the south side are trying to break the strike. The girls on the committee reported that they had been put out of one employment office for attempting to talk to the girls who were applying for jobs. Aggressive action is being taken by the militants.

These employment offices charge the people who want jobs anything they think they can get and make all rosy promises that girls who have worked in the dress industry for years realize cannot be kept. All the employment agents promise that the scabs will be transported to and from home in taxi cabs and then when the girls go to work they are told to pay the fare themselves and the boss will pay them at the end of the week. This is never done.

Negroes on Picket Line.

The colored girls who have been on the picket line since the strike began said at the meeting that they are receiving aid not only from the union, but also from many militant colored workers who are not in the dress industry. Many of the militant colored girls who are not garment workers have come out on the picket line and helped the strikers. One of the girls reported that she had a talk with a white detective who had been assigned to accompany colored scabs to and from work. "He told me that he did not want to be seen walking on the street with colored girls," she said.

Police Brutality.

"The treatment we colored girls get at the hands of the police may be accounted for by the fact that the police don't like helping colored girls and so they take out their resentment on the colored union girls. We all know and everybody knows that the police are twice as hard on the colored girls as they are on the white."

COOLIDGE BURNS TEAPOT OIL OVER DAUGHERTY

Final Straw Revelation of Parole Graft

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 7.—President Coolidge has "reopened" the question of Attorney General Daugherty's resignation, according to information from persons close to him.

Recent developments, which have furnished the president with additional information concerning the department of justice are held to be responsible.

While the senate committee named to investigate Daugherty was today sifting a great mass of tips and "leads" preliminary to beginning open hearings next week, Mr. Coolidge was understood, on excellent authority, to be again considering whether he should ask Daugherty to withdraw from the cabinet.

"Cal" is Doing Some Thinking.

Daugherty himself was on his way back to Washington from Miami, Fla., prepared to resume active charge of the department of justice and to defend himself before the senate committee.

When Daugherty left Washington hurriedly several days ago, it was generally accepted in the capital that President Coolidge had tacitly at least agreed to let him have his hearing before the senate committee before asking him to quit the cabinet. This view was based on the silence the president maintained.

Daugherty Morally Sick.

Disclosures regarding pardon and parole cases said to involve members of congress and other considerations not yet revealed are understood, however, to have prompted the president to reconsider. Strong arguments have been advanced to him that he ought at this time to have at the head of the department someone with a clean bill of health who would attack with vigor the work pending before the department.

Chinese Smuggling Narcotics, Marine Secretary Declares

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

SEATTLE, March 7.—The steady flow of illicit narcotics into the United States will never be stopped until the big American shipping companies discharge their Chinese crews in the steward's department, according to John R. Norkgauer, secretary of the Marine Cooks and Stewards union here. Norkgauer recently exposed the methods of recruiting Orientals for the American ships, demonstrating the inevitability of dope smuggling under the present plan.

Campradors (labor agents) in Hongkong and other Chinese ports have charge of employment of the Orientals. They charge $50,000 for signing a full crew of 130 men, the complement for an American transpacific liner in the steward's department. To meet the high charge, the Chinese band together for the privilege of getting jobs for which average pay is but $7.50 in United States currency.

Clearly, the jobs do not pay enough to justify the high employment fee. Norkgauer says it is understood by the comprador, by the American shipping lines, and particularly by the Chinese that their money will come, not from wages, but from the proceeds of smuggling narcotics, liquor and jewelry into American ports.

Hardly an American ship enters port without big seizures by custom officers but the Chinese manage to secrete most of their contraband and later to sell it thru go-betweens in the American ports.

Daugherty Felt at Home with Silent Cal and Fat Bill

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Harry Daugherty marched into the joint session of congress with Postmaster General New, Secretary of the Navy Denby, Secretary of State Hughes and the rest of the official family, on the occasion of the Harding memorial service.

Daugherty appeared to feel quite at home in the front row with the president and Chief Justice Taft, on this occasion. In the gallery sat General Sawyer, George Christian, ex-Senator Frelinghysen and other members of the Harding Memorial Association, listening to the eulogy pronounced by Secretary Hughes. It was a last review of the Old Guard.

Strikebreaking Collusion.

Collusion between Crowe's men and the police was shown again in the case of Albert Shaffer, active picket and speaker at strike meetings who was arrested by Crowe's men, taken to the Shakespeare avenue station and then to the state's attorney's office.

But after leaving the state's attorney's office the first time he was again seized by Crowe's men and taken again to the Shakespeare avenue station where he was held by the police.

Upon failing to give assurances that he would cease picketing Shaffer found himself again taken by force to the strikebreaking state's attorney's office where he was roundly abused by Crowe's bullies and ordered to promise not to picket. From there he was moved, late at night, to the W. Chicago avenue station and imprisoned all night without bail. In the morning, to his surprise he was charged with felonious assault and released on $5,000 bail. Union attorneys are furnishing the facts to the Federation committee which is probing Crowe.

The following strikers arrested in the Loop yesterday will appear in police court today where they will demand jury trials: Mary Meuhlaujet, Rose Wolf, Marcella Haron, Marion Brosdik, Tillie Gasiorek.

Ford's Cheap Manure Plan, Cheap Only for Flivver Maker

WASHINGTON, March 7.—Opponents of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals today prepared to unloose another flood of amendments designed to nullify the bid.

Because of the many amendments offered, House leaders feared a final vote on the McKenzie bill providing for acceptance of the Ford offer would not be reached today.

The chief amendments pending would cut Ford's lease on the power property from 100 to 50 years and force him to put the plan under the jurisdiction of the Federal Water Power act.

Tuberculosis and Other Diseases Find Fertile Breeding Ground in Congested Workingclass Districts

Unsanitary and congested housing conditions in the workingclass districts in Chicago are greatly to blame for the increase in tuberculosis and other diseases, according to anti-tuberculosis societies which have investigated these regions where the landlords, seeming to take no account of human life, in their greed for more profit, have turned dilapidated former mansions into overcrowded rooming houses.

"The rate of death from tuberculosis varies directly with the crowding of the population into tenements," is the conclusion of one anti-tuberculosis society, "and is five times as great in the downtown tenement section as in the outlying districts."

While the extravagant mausoleums and monuments costing many millions grandly adorn the landscape in the fashionable cemeteries, the workers, crowded together in filthy, unlighted rooms, die in increasing numbers from the dreaded white plague which thrives in small bedrooms and dimly lighted halls. The money used by millionaires to build themselves fancy palaces should be used to decently house the workers, Robert Todd declares in a report of an extensive investigation he conducted for the Municipal Tuberculosis Sanatarium at a time when Chicago housing conditions were not so desperate as they are at present (1918).

"If a good house can be constructed in a large city for ten to twenty thousand dollars, absolutely complete for the physical welfare of its occupants, on what are the values in excess of that sum, which exist in thousands of mansions based?" asks Mr. Todd in his survey. "Billions of dollars are invested in sentiment, which covered 22 blocks scattered west of North avenue.

"Billions of dollars are invested in sentiment. They have no base except the mental values that exist in the mental life of the owners. Millions of dollars have gone into elaborate monuments and mausoleums in the cemeteries of the larger cities. If there are phases of the mental life among the prosperous that seem different from the mental life of industrial workers, the differences are due to the results of the privileges which the prosperous have.

"The tenements of the crowded districts must have better value in them for the same reasons that the prosperous apply to their elaborate homes. The congested district is the great stronghold of disease."

"The congestion of the population is one of the reasons for the excess of the disease," another part of the report declares, "and tuberculosis is one of the great reasons why congestion should be reduced. Boarders in the homes of the industrial classes are universal. The risks of the ordinary family in the crowded district are greatly increased by this practice. Excessively large numbers of extremely small bedrooms in Chicago induce crowding. The pressure of economic necessity is back of much of this crowding."

Make It a Real Investigation

John Fitzpatrick, acting on the authority of the Chicago Federation of Labor, appointed a committee of fifteen to investigate the conduct of State's Attorney Crowe's office, in its relation to the strike now on in Chicago, involving the dress manufacturers and the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

In a letter to Robert E. Crowe, John Fitzpatrick charged the state's attorney, with having assigned police attached to his office to strike duty. He charged Crowe with having his police acting the role of agents provocateur by mingling with the people in the strike district and fomenting discord.

There are other charges contained in the letter that appeared yesterday in full in the DAILY WORKER, which call for the most thoro investigation.

The committee of fifteen appointed by John Fitzpatrick to make an investigation of the anti-labor conduct of Robert E. Crowe's office owes it to the workers of Chicago to make a thoro probe, not alone of Crowe's office, but of the offices of Mayor William E. Dever and Chief of Police Collins.

The members of the committee appointed by John Fitzpatrick are:

Anton Johannsen, Carpenters' Union.
Robert Fitchie, Milk Wagon Drivers' Union.
Oscar Nelson, Post Office Clerk's Union.
Agnes Nestor, Woman's Trade Union League.
David McVey, Lathers' Union.
Frank Buchanan, Iron Workers' Union.
John O'Neill, City Firemen's Union.
Victor Olander, Seamans' Union.
Anna Fitzgerald, Womans' Label League.
Chester Semple, Molders' Union.
John Clay, Laundry Drivers' Union.
John A. English, Printers' Union.
Harry Van Artsen, Pressmen's Union.
Charles Glover, Blacksmiths' Union.
Harry Sheck, Union Label League.

At the first meeting this committee held on Thursday last in the office of the Chicago Federation of Labor, it was charged that the plain clothes thugs employed by Crowe are also on the payroll of the city administration.

We find State's Attorney Crowe, the republican, and Mayor Dever, the democrat, and alleged "friend of labor," both equally responsible for the actions of the police in assaulting strikers and protecting strikebreakers at the behest of the manufacturers.

The committee might ask Mayor Dever, why [illegible]ptain John Alcock, notorious man bruiser, [illegible]s transferred from the record department, [illegible]ere he was placed because of his unsavory [illegible]putation for manhandling prisoners, to the head of the army of policemen detailed by Chief Collins to guard the strikebreakers and beat up the strikers.

In order to retain the political friendship of certain labor leaders, Mayor Dever may promise the committee, that the present mishandling of the strikers by his police officers will cease. But the committee should not be satisfied with empty promises.

If Mayor Dever wishes to have order in the strike district he can do what a genuine workingclass mayor does, when a strike develops within his jurisdiction. Appoint a force of special officers recruited from the Chicago labor unions. Such a committee would be interested in maintaining order. The police and the gunmen from Crowe's office are not.

The workers of Chicago are watching the committee of fifteen. They will expect an investigation that will go to the bottom of the situation, regardless whether those affected are democrats or republicans. The DAILY WORKER is firmly convinced that a real investigation will show that in this strike the officialdom of Cook County, in the City Hall as well as in Crowe's office is carrying out the orders of the dress manufacturers and the Chicago Chamber of Commerce.

The almost deadly silence maintained by the capitalist press of Chicago is also proof that every agency of capitalist power in the city is solidly lined up against the workers. The DAILY WORKER alone is throwing the searchlight on the strike and giving the garment workers the necessary backing and publicity.

The DAILY WORKER urges the committee of fifteen to make a real investigation!

The garment workers have heard a good deal during the last year about the disruptive tactics of the Communists. This strike has demonstrated that the Communists are always the staunch supporters of the workers, not confining their help to lip service, but getting down on the firing line with them.

A certain labor paper that stands for independent political action, had a pretty editorial on the front page prior to the last mayoral election in Chicago which gave Mayor Dever credit for being a friend of labor. But the strikers do not find the clubs of his police any too friendly

Congress Next

In a country like ours where the plundering of the national resources and the looting of the national treasury by capitalists is the biggest industry, it is no surprise to find second-class crooks go unnoticed and remain unknown for some time.

This is the condition that prevails in the United States today. The Teapot Dome explosion happened to break out first and now the lesser thieves are unmolested, reaping a harvest. But despite the fact that the Teapot scandal has dwarfed everything else, the corruption and graft with which our whole capitalist governmental system is reeking is breaking out in putrid scabs on our national body-politic.

The exposure of the debauchery in the Veterans' Bureau has brought to the forefront two Congressmen charged with having received bribes for their efforts to secure pardons for certain prisoners. We are told that Congressman Zhilman of Maryland, chairman of the House Committee on Labor and one of the worst labor-fakers in the game, and a gentleman from Kentucky, Congressman Langley, a stalwart reactionary, have taken for themselves a handsome sum for "services rendered."

This charge against the two representatives is interesting from one angle, to say the least. Only the modest sum of $200,000 is supposed to be involved in the graft handed out here. What a difference! When cabinet officers and senators and presidents are engaged in the game of serving big business and grafting, their fees and their transactions run into the millions; but when mere congressmen get into the mess, their money turnover is limited to so paltry a sum as several hundred thousand dollars. And yet some would say we have no classes in this country!

One by one every division of the government is being shown up in its true role—an agency in the hands of the bosses against the workers. First it is the cabinet. Then it is the senate. The president get his turn, to be sure. Now it is the poor, powerless congress. Truly, this last tidal wave of graft establishes at least one point that all workers and farmers ought to remember about the capitalist government running the United States: More and more it is becoming evident that the amount of money passing hands in the relations between the government and the big business interests is directly proportional to the power the particular governmental subdivision involved has. The higher the official the bigger the price. Whatever may be said against this practice, it can not be denied that this is good business sense in the eyes of the moneyed men. And these are the men who run our government and industries today.

Strange Generosity

American marines are engaged in serious fighting in Honduras. It looks as if our military forces will suffer unexpected casualties in shooting Wall Street democracy into the helpless Latin-Americans.

But there is one aspect to the bloody affair that would be ludicrous enough to make the most dismal misanthrope howl with laughter if it were not so tragic fundamentally. Our military and naval headquarters charged with the operations of the marines and cruisers against Honduras would have the world believe that it was the death of an American Negro at the hands of the native population that awakened in our government its great sense of duty to protect its citizens and brought about American intervention.

Whom do the kept editors and military publicists think they can fool now? Do they think that they can fool all the people all the time? One might very well answer these menial servants of our imperialists that they ought to know that charity begins at home. If these uniformed and ununiformed protectors of our lives are so anxious about the security and welfare of the Negroes why don't they take steps to guard the lives and improve the conditions of the colored masses in the United States where protection could be secured without any loss of life being suffered by the saviors and protectors?

The Government of ours is now violating the independence of Honduras on the pretense of avenging the loss of life suffered by a Negro in the Latin-American Republic in civil war most likely caused by conflicting American and other capitalist interests struggling for the control of the natural resources of the country. The number of Negroes lynched in the United States, the number of these lynchers who have gone scot free, the intolerable conditions forced on the Negroes in the South and elsewhere, belie the high humanitarian motives now claimed by our capitalist government. Last year close to a half million Negroes, 478,000 to be exact, fled from the South to the Northern industrial centers. Nearly a hundred Negroes were officially reported to have been lynched in the last two years in this country. But the Government has not lifted its finger or even raised the faintest voice of protest against these outrages perpetrated against the Negro. Why, then, the sudden fit of generosity on the part of our capitalist Government?

The answer is very simple. The United States Government is not at all concerned with the safety of the Negroes or any other poor working people. The Government is merely using the loss of life by the unfortunate Negro as an excuse for getting into Honduras to protect the heavy investments, the property, of our millionaire bankers and manufacturers. The military and naval forces in Honduras are there not to save the lives of the workingmen but to do the dirty work of the capitalist class whose servant it is.

Head of the Government--Tail of Finance Capital

By JOHN PEPPER.

CALVIN COOLIDGE the chief executive of the nation is likewise the chief executive of the Teapot Dome scandal.

That's the newest and biggest result of the senate investigation.

Coolidge, the president of the United States by the grace of Wall Street sent his private secretary Bascom Slemp to McLean, one of the criminals of the oil corruption.

Coolidge the head of the United States and the tail of finance capital sent secret messages to Florida, offering his help and protection to McLean who is at the same time the publisher of a bad-smelling paper, a one dollar a year secret service man and proven liar by the senate investigation.

One day McLean is forced to admit that he lied before the whole nation, that he did not give the $100,000 loan to Fall. And the next day Calvin Coolidge sends him his telegram of sympathy, his message of solidarity and assurance of help.

It's the custom in political history of the United States for the president to send messages to Congress. Calvin Coolidge has initiated a new political customs. He sends messages to the criminals of corruption.

Where is there the innocent child who believes that the defenders of President Coolidge in the senate, told the truth about the reasons and circumstances of Coolidge's messages to McLean? Who believes that it's only an accident that lawyers, secret service men, employes of McLean, and secret service women sent hundreds of telegrams to McLean warning and advising him at the same time that Coolidge sent his warning and advising telegrams to McLean?

Truly, the president of the United States is in good company! Mr. McLean must know a great deal and must have a lot of power if everyone in Washington hastens to his aid, the retained lawyers, the secret service men, the chief of the detective bureau of the Department of Justice, ex-secret service men who are hired now by McLean, journalists of doubtful calling, individuals who would be thrown into the greatest quandary if they were asked what their profession is, and the president of the United States.

Where is the expert who could tell today where the White House ends and the private business of McLean begins? The chief of communication of the White House, E. W. Smithers, is also the employe of the private wire of Mr. McLean, to make "easy access" to the White House possible for the proven liar of the Fall investigation. Bascom Slemp, the private secretary of the president rushes to Florida to McLean, and if the president wants to communicate with his private secretary he sends his wires to McLean because it is not the president but McLean who knows the private address of the private secretary of the president. The chief of the ushers of the White House, McKenna, renders his services not only to the president but is busy advising McLean about the goings and comings of the private secretary of the president. The thousand times secret code of the Department of Justice is not only placed at the disposal of the government, but at the same time is placed at the unrestricted disposal of Mr. McLean and his employes of various kinds and shades. Where is the expert who could tell where the public sphere of the White House ends and the private sphere of Mr. McLean begins?

One of the employes of Mr. McLean wired to Florida that he saw the "Principal" who assured him that there will be no rocking of his boat and no resignations or removals, and that the oil scandal will be smoothed over. Who is this "Principal?" Senators have asserted that the "Principal" of the wire to McLean is no less than the Principal of the American nation, the president of the United States.

Calvin Coolidge is the Principal of the oil scandal and of the United States. Who believes that it was an accident that Calvin Coolidge named as counsel of the government, one after another, men about whom it was proven that they were connected with oil interests? Who believes that it was an accident that while forced to accept the resignation of Denby, Coolidge expressed his solidarity with his Secretary of Navy, who is one of the guilty ones of the oil corruption? Who believes that Coolidge has not very important reasons for not forcing the resignation of Daugherty the head of the Department of Justice, who neglected to prosecute the criminals of the oil corruption?

We ask and the whole nation must ask the question: Why does silent Calvin Coolidge remain so silent on the oil corruption? Has he nothing to say or is he afraid to incriminate himself? Is he so ignorant about the basic facts of our oil politics or is he exercising the right granted to every citizen of the United States of not giving incriminating evidence against himself?

Coolidge is silent, but the masses of workers and farmers are aroused and they demand an answer. The workers and farmers distrust Coolidge who became president of the United States because he is a proven good strike-breaker and who is now protecting and serving finance capital.

The workers and farmers are asking what will be the next statement of the president: a message or a confession?

The workers and farmers want an "easy access" to the White House, and they want to drive out the big capitalists and the president of the big capitalists from the White House. The Workers Party is only the mouthpiece of the laboring masses when it demands the immediate impeachment and ousting of Coolidge.

Impeach and oust Coolidge!—that must be an irresistible demand of the masses. Mass meetings must proclaim these demands. Trade unions and farmers organizations must send this demand to every Congressman, to Congress itself. Impeach Coolidge and with him the kept government of big capital, and establish the government of workers and farmers!

THE PARTY AT WORK

Mobilize Party Strength For Farmer-Labor Party Struggle

The work of mobilizing the machinery of the Workers Party for the campaign for a mass Farmer-Labor Party to enter the presidential campaign this year is getting under way.

Public meetings are being organized in every part of the country on the lessons of the Teapot Dome exposures, resolutions calling for the formation of a mass Farmer-Labor Party at the May 30th Convention in the Twin Cities are being introduced and adopted in the trade unions, fraternal organizations and other labor and farmer organizations.

Branches of the Party which have been asked to contribute to the $15,000 fund the Party is raising for the campaign are making enthusiastic responses to the call. Altho the circulars covering the appeal for the campaign fund have been in circulation only for a week and only a few branches have had the opportunity to act upon them, the first installments of the fund are already reaching the National Office. In addition to the branches which were reported as having sent in their quota a few days ago contributions have come from the following Party units:

Checko-Slovak Branch No. 1, Chicago	$11.00
Dilles Bottom, O., South Slavic Branch	7.00
Neffs, O., South Slavic Branch	8.00
Jewish Branch, St. Paul	4.25
City Central Committee, Syracuse	5.00

The appeal of the National Office calls for a contribution of $10.00 from each branch with up to 25 members and $25.00 from each branch with over 25 members. The Party Branches are selling Mass Farmer-Labor Party labels for the members dues books as the means of raising their quota of the fund.

Every Party branch must take up the question of raising its quota of the Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund at its first meeting during the months of March. The funds for the Farmer-Labor Party campaign are needed quickly and the Party branches must prove their ability to function effectively by a prompt response to meet the needs of this campaign.

The Party is facing the most important and most critical struggle in its history thus far. The help given the National Organization by the party units will make possible the winning of a great victory for the Party and the revolutionary working class movement in this country.

Youth Views

By HARRY GANNES

Sammie Is Waiting for Them to Grow Old.

Eight months have passed since Sam Gompers talked to represntatives of the Young Workers League of America about the problem of organizing the American youth into the trade and industrial unions. At a conference held in Chicago, the league representatives presented the old man of labor with a definite, clear-cut program that would be of benefit, not alone to the youth, but the entire sorely harrassed American working class. Gomper's stuck his pudgy finger to his nostril, supposedly in deep thought, and exclaimed in a poise of profound wisdom, "Wait!"

There was method to his madness, however. You see organizing the youth is a youth problem. So, thought Gompers, if I let these young brats grow up until their heads are bald or gray and probably when many of them have been killed off by intensive labor, of the brutalities of the mine and mill it will be no more a youth problem and I can handle them ilke I do their fathers and uncles (provided Jehovah is willing.)

But the class struggle, like the tide, stays for no men and especially is it impossible to push it back.

The past year has shown an official increase of 38 per cent in children leaving school in order to work. Most of these kids are 14 years of age and come under the category of youth labor. Some of them are 15 and 16 and are put to work in places ordinarily occupied by men and women.

Since talking with Gompers the league has uncoverd the crafty plan of the building trade bosses to supplant adult, union labor, with scab, boss-trained apprentices; and no action has been taken against this union smashing policy, not alone by Gompers but by the entire officialdom of the building trade unions.

How young fellows were taking the places of the older skilled workers in the automobile industries is common knowledge in the automobile sections of the country and to all those who read the Young Worker. Again, nothing done about it.

But the Gomper's policy of "watchful waiting," will not solve the problem. The army of youth labor grows and as the struggle intensifies as it is now doing with the half million of unemployed, the solution offered by the only working class youth organization, the Young Workers League of America, will meet with the favor and support of the working youth.

Still He Is Endorsed.

Shipping Companies Protest Sending Rich to Ellis Island Gaol

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 7.—According to a decree issued by the commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, all aliens arriving second class or on "one cabin" steamers will hereafter be obliged to pass thru the ordeal of Ellis Island just as steerage passengers on the transatlantic liners.

Managers of the steamship lines are up in arms against this verdict, which would subject the remunerative business in foreign tourists to the rules applying only to immigrant workers. Their attitude is resentful that foreign gentlemen of property should be stewed in the same melting pot as European proletarians.

The steamship owners have started a campaign to revoke the decree. Their sole interest appears to be to save inconvenience to comfortable travelers, while permitting the authorities to vent their incompetence, parading as Americanism, upon the poorer immigrants.

Changes in Agricultural Relations in United States

By OSCAR PREEDIN.

(Concluded from Last Week)

HOW high is already the toll imposed by landholders and mortgagors? How much values are taken from the people by "manufacture" of land rent and mortgage profits?

We have no direct answer on this question neither from census investigations nor from any other official investigation. All what pertains to the operations of financial capital on this field is kept in a harem-like secrecy. Census investigations carefully record every cent paid by farmers to workers, paid by farmers for fertilizers, etc., but census reports are silent about amounts paid by the farmers to financial capital in the form of rents and mortgage dues.

Economists who were interested in above questions, having no ready statistical material, were compelled to apply deductive methods to find some conception about the amounts of land rent and mortgage dues. One of the most interesting estimates about this was made by the staff of National Bureau of Economic Research. This bureau came to conclusion that "income of land which goes to persons outside of agriculture" was in millions of dollars:

In years	In the form of interest on mortgage	In the form of rent of tenants
1910	120	560
1920	252	1,082

("Income in United States, Its Amount and Distribution, 1909-1919," by National Bureau of Economic Research. Figures taken from table on page 303, vol. II.)

Total amount paid by farmers in 1920, according to this estimate, was then 1,334 million dollars.

From explanation of this bureau (page 305, vol. II) how the above estimate was deducted from available more or less reliable statistical material we can see that amounts of land rent paid by new farmers to "persons outside of agriculture" in the form of prices of land, that is, as capitalized land rent, were not considered by the bureau at all. Amount of total mortgage indebtedness is taken by the bureau as being 4 billion dollars. But we know from the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture himself that this amount was rather over 8 billion dollars. Thanks to this and some other omissions in the calculations of this bureau their estimate without question represents only a part of the true amount which is paid by farmers "to persons outside of agriculture."

But this estimate, even as it is, gives sufficient conception about crops which are gathered already now by agriculture for landholders.

There was and still is ear-breaking cry in all the bourgeois press about high wages of farm labor, which, they say, destroys the agriculture. The census investigation found by careful records that in 1920 farmers paid in cash to farm workers 1,101 million dollars and that "rent and board of farm hands" was worth additional 262 million dollars. These suppose to make out the total amount of wages in cash and in goods 1,363 million dollars. Therefore, if we accept above estimates, then the wages of over 4,000,000 farm workers seem to be a little more than total payments to people who own nearly two-thirds of all "land in farms" and very much outside of these land—for doing nothing there!

The new relations in agriculture, which are established now on large scale as permanent and enable "persons outside of agriculture"—financial capital—to snatch enormous quantities of values directly out of agriculture, in their development are creating the following conditions:

First. The land suitable for agriculture is going over and most of it is already in ownership of non-cultivators.

Second. Previous free farmers-owners are transformed into tenants or in nominal owners who are dependent from their mortgage holders and are temporary on the bridge leading to tenancy or to the class of workers.

Third. The system of tenancy, as established at present in the United States, differs from systems of tenancy in other capitalistic countries with centralized land ownership by the fact that the class of land owners is here invisible, being in a physical unity with ruling financial capital.

Fourth. This unity is in itself the possible highest centralization of land ownership. In regard to tenants this creates such economic dependency from land owners which nowhere existed in capitalistic relations. In regard to special agrarian interests this allows to utilize means about which the separate classes of land owners in other countries could only to dream, because opposition to measures for increase of land rent, which land holders in other countries met in groups of manufacturers, trades and even bankers, is here excluded by the very unity of land holding with financial capital. In regard to foreign relations, imperialistic forces in politics of the United States are increased and made more parasitic, more reactionary and, therefore, more inclined to oppressive measures as at home, so abroad.

Fifth. The financial capitol of the United States in changing the relations in agriculture is changed itself and by its increased means and power for oppression and exploitation will rapidly create conditions where the large oppressed and exploited masses will be pressed as never to find ways and means and to use them for a change of the order itself, which is founded on oppression and exploitation.

THE AWAKENED BEAR

A Bolshevik Ballad.—By JOHN S. CLARKE.

There are folks whose constitutions shrink from "bloody" Revolutions,
Who at such upheavals "never could connive";
They can hear the distant drumming of the one that's surely coming,
But they "hope it doesn't come while they're alive".
They admit the putrefaction of a regime of reaction
Would make, with satisfaction, Satan grin:
But if you dare to mention that it is your firm intention
To root it up by force—why, that's a sin!

When a man is sentimental, and his heart is soft and gentle,
You can wager that his head is soft as well;
From the wit of his decision you can fix on his condition,
And his mission is what God alone can tell.
An unpalatable crisis isn't piquanted with spices,
And you've got to stick a mental pin in this—
The warfare of the classes isn't honey or molasses,
And you'll need a sharper weapon than a kiss.

Can you call to recollection an eventful insurrection
That Privilege has never labelled CRIME?
From a strike for better wages to that glory of the ages,
When the guillotine was working overtime!
Call it ghastly, call it bloody—but assiduously study
The foundations of a justified revolt!
Then against a Reign of Terror weigh a thousand years of error—
Ye may then with sober judgment fix the fault.

Prithee! say who disregarded, who rejected or retarded,
With a selfish and tyrannical design,
Each and every declaration by the spokesmen of a nation—
The peaceful "Third Estate" of 'eighty-nine!
When the royal butchers blustered and upon the frontiers mustered,
When Brunswick's sanguinary thirst beset him,
When he swore that he would slaughter until blood was cheap as water—
Had the folk to stand with folded arms and let him?

When they heard Reaction thunder, do you genuinely wonder
That a people born anew should burn with zeal?
Do you think they'd hesitate or shrink from stringing up a traitor,
Or to tear the filthy guts from a Bastille?
If you cannot feel elated o'ver a king decapitated—
One who never tried to act upon the square—
Then, for God's sake, take your exit from the movement, do not vex it,
For it isn't just exactly your affair.

For the wolves again are howling and the hyenas are scowling,
And the jackals they are prowling on the plains,
For the peasant, soldier, weaver, from the Volga to the Neva,
Have risen to their feet with broken chains.
While the tyrants sat a-scheming, they, instead of pious dreaming,
Hitched Emancipation's wagon to a star:
And the seal of their reliance, and the gage of their defiance,
Was the bullet-riddled carcass of a Czar.

And you'll find the counter-plotters, with a horde of foreign rotters,
In the land that hasn't time its wounds to lick!
You will find them just the same—minus manhood, minus shame—
At a foul and filthy game to turn the trick.
But the folk who work the double are the folk who strike the trouble;
Had I but a single rouble I would bet it,
That the knaves now teasing Bruin are INVITING blood and ruin—
And I hope it won't be long before they get it.

The Train from Jena.

In the train from Jena to Weimar, Germany, a workingman was reading the special election edition of the Communist newspaper. A candidate for the Landtag of one of the capitalist parties who was sitting beside the working man was highly indignant when he saw the paper and asked the workingman whether he knew what distance there is between a respectable person and a criminal. The workingman calmly took a tape measure out of his pocket, measured the space between himself and the candidate for the Landtag and answered "75 centimeters."

Economic Depression and Unemployment

the state reported 139 job hunters for every 100 jobs in October, help is still wanted, but at lower wages and longer hours."

The Herald and Examiner of January 5, 1924, reports a turn for the worse: "Superintendent Boyd, of the State Employment Agency, estimates 75,000 men out of work in Chicago alone and said there were 195 men for every 100 available jobs—nearly two to one."

And the latest report of the Illinois Department of Labor, which sums up the whole January situation, is again forced to announce a new aggravation in January as compared with December. The decline of employes in January was 2 per cent. "Probably the most important change during the 30 days has been the collapse of car building. The drop of 40 1-2 per cent in the slaughtering and meat packing industry was but little more than the average for all food industries. In the offices of the Illinois Free Employment Service in thirteen principal cities in the state, the excess labor supply in January was the largest that has been reported since early in 1922. Places could not be found for 10,000 applicants for jobs. There were in the state as a whole 166 applicants for each 100 jobs. This was measurably worse than at any time in 1923." The DAILY WORKER of January 31, 1924, reported that in Chicago: "A large number of the offices of the labor agents which used to line West Madison street are closed because no one is hiring workers."

"Few Jobs Can Be Supplied."

The November and December reports of the Industrial Commission of Wisconsin show that since August, month to month the number of employed workers fell, and in December reached a point 7 per cent below the peak of 1923.

The Federated Press reports from San Francisco: "Unemployment is rife in California, and the employment agencies are reaping a harvest." The Gompers agency, the International News Service reports: "Each day 5,000 men and 500 women apply for work at the Los Angeles City Employment Bureau. Do they get the jobs? What do they do when they don't get the jobs? Organizer George E. Bevan doesn't say except that: 'Few can be supplied'." The Federated Press reports from New Orleans on February 2: "Conditions in this city from the standpoint of the workers are deplorable. Despite official reports, unemployment is on the increase."

The very important report of the New York State Department of Labor issued in the middle of February establishes the fact that unemployment is steadily growing in New York City too: "Employment went down about 1 per cent in New York factories in January. The three successive decreases in November, December and January have now brought the level of employment somewhat lower than it was in January of, last year."

IV.

All these figures do not give a complete picture of unemployment. All these statistics speak only of the factories and mines which were shut down and which discharged their workers or of establishments which work only part time and threw out a part of their workers. But beside this factor we must take into consideration five other factors, if we are to measure the magnitude of unemployment. These factors are:

1. The hundreds of thousands of farmers who have become bankrupt and have moved into the cities to become industrial workers.
2. The great migration of Negroes from the South to the industrial centers of the North and Middle West.
3. The immigration from Europe which, altho limited, increases the number of those seeking for work.
4. The immigration from Mexico which makes itself felt in the steel industry in Illinois especially.
5. The seasonal unemployment of agricultural workers and migratory road construction workers who in winter time are forced to seek work in cities and industrial centers.

All these factors make unemployment a mass phenomenon today.

V.

The economic depression, curtailment of production and unemployment is releasing a new offensive of capital against the workers. The power of resistance of the unions is very much weakened because the workers drop out en masse. The bosses are making wage cuts everywhere and more and more generally. Most of the categories of workmen accept the wage cuts without any resistance (for instance, the completely demoralized railroad workers). Some categories put up some fight (the clothing workers). Other sections of workers again, are willing to continue the present wage rates in spite of the increasing cost of living (United Mine Workers). How the depression is wearing down the power of resistance of the workers is shown best by the January report of the Department of Labor: "Considerable numbers of wage increases have been reported each month of 1923, increasing rapidly each month from January to May, when 1,279 were reported, and then decreasing to 147 in October. During these months decreases in rates were reported from 1 to 9 establishments only, each month, but in November the decreases totalled in eleven industries." The number of strikes is ever decreasing as the depression and unemployment is growing. The report of the New York State Department of Labor says that there were 105 strikes in New York state in 1923. Sixty of the strikes were during the four-month period from March to June, each month thereafter showing a smaller number of strikes, with December "Making what was practically a record in industrial peace in this state."

"The idea becomes power when it penetrates the masses."

Economic Depression and Unemployment

By JOHN PEPPER

THE economic depression makes rapid and great advances—production is decreasing, and unemployment is growing.

I.

The great economic prosperity which started in 1922 reached its high point about May, 1923. In many respects this prosperity shows record figures in the expansion of means of production and in volume of production. But from the middle of 1923 we see a constant, gradual aggravation of the economic situation. Three figures illustrate best of all the great change. The monthly unfilled orders of the Steel Corporation reached their peak in March, 1923, with 7.40 million tons. In December, 1923, only 4.44 million, which is a decline of about 40 per cent. The May, 1923, average daily output of pig iron was 124,764 tons. In December, 1923, 94,225, which means a decline of almost 25 per cent. And a third figure is the average decline of 16 per cent on the stock exchange in the second half of 1923. The iron and steel industry reports showed a decrease of full time operation from 90 per cent in May to 68 per cent in October, to 58 per cent in November, and to 57 per cent in December. In December only a third of the full time operating establishments were utilizing their full capacity. Exports of iron and steel were running on an average of about five million tons a year (for about six years, until early in 1921); exports of iron and steel in 1923 fell a few thousand tons short of two million tons.

Slump In Mining Production.

Coal mining is in a catastrophic condition. Dr. Honnold, statistician for bituminous operators of the Illinois fields, declared that "the November demand so far has dropped 28 per cent below that of last year. It means a slump of about 30 per cent in production in both the Illinois and Indiana fields. At least 72 mines in Illinois with a potential daily capacity of 100,000 tons and 69 in Indiana with 50,000 tons have been closed or abandoned since January 1. Of the mines still active at least 75 per cent are operating upon only 40 per cent of normal time. The situation is occasioned solely thru lack of demand. Every day scores of cars are loaded at the mines and left standing on switch tracks. More mines have been closed in Illinois during the last six months than at any previous period in the history of mining in the state."

The total value of building undertaken in December, 1923, fell by 4 per cent below November.

The textile industry is almost completely paralyzed thru the depression. The number of active cotton spindles in December was about 700,000 less than a year ago and fell over 300,000 in November alone. In Massachusetts, the center of the textile industry the December report of the Department of Labor shows a majority of the establishments on a part capacity basis. Dun's January 5, 1924, review said:

"Curtailment of production is continuing in many cotton, wool and silk goods centers . . . In cotton goods this tendency is expected to increase."

Shoe Industry Decline.

In the shoe industry the Massachusetts December report shows that only 34 per cent of the leather shoe establishments were operating at full capacity. In Haverhill, a shoe town, in November and December, 30 per cent of the workers have been laid off and only 5 out of 34 establishments are operating full time and full capacity. In Lynn, only 6 of the 32 shoe establishment report normal operations.

The December report of the Department of Labor of the United States showed that not less than 23 per cent of the industrial establishments reported part time operation and 2 per cent were entirely closed down. And in addition to that one-third of the establishments reporting full time operation were operating below full time capacity.

In connection with the tremendous decrease of the volume of production there is a decrease of railroad traffic and a decline of railroad operations.

II.

The propaganda of the capitalist press, government and banks' attempts to make the public believe that with the beginning of 1924 the economic conditions are changing to the better. That is just as little true as the deceitful propaganda which was conducted by the same elements with President Coolidge at their head, during the growing depression in the second half of 1923. It is true that the unfilled orders of the Steel Corporation have showed 353,090 tons in January. But this small increase makes very little change in the general situation. We should not forget that the unfilled orders of the Steel Corporation at the end of January, 1924, were less by 2,112,000 tons, or over 30 per cent, less than at the same date in 1923. Iron production was in the last week of January 6 per cent less than in the same month of 1923. The New York Times of February 4 was forced to admit that: "To predict repetition of the wholly abnormal industrial boom of the early months of 1923 would be a little rash." And the same New York Times states about the textile industry in the same article: "The singular dilemma in which the textile mills are placed, between raw material costing 25 per cent more than a year ago, and finished goods which are selling 5 to 10 per cent lower, with consumers ECONOMY Depression—Galley 2 .. holding out obstinately against advances, no doubt reflects the exceptional character of the cotton situation. But to the extent that it indicates unwillingness among buyers of goods to follow a rising market in their purchases (unless they have absolutely used up their stocks of goods), it has its bearing on the general business situation. A sensational 'trade boom' must in the nature of things rest on the taking of the opposite attitude by consumers, and if they will not take it in the cotton trade where, if anywhere, it is warranted by the actual supply-and-demand position—then it can hardly be expected elsewhere."

Efforts to Check Depression.

The Philadelphia Reserve Bank's monthly summary of business conditions covering 36 various trades says that of the 36 trades at the end of October, 6 trades could be classified as good, at the end of November only 5, at the end of December, 3, and at the end of January, 1.

It is true that the capitalists are making big efforts to check the aggravation of the economic depression. The new two billion dollar railway construction program and the big orders for Japanese reconstruction are the last great reserve of the capitalists which they can muster against the economic crisis. But it would be entirely anti-Marxist to believe (as some comrades are inclined to do) that the capitalists, notwithstanding big monopolies which eliminate competition on a national scale (thus making it so much the sharper on an international scale) that these capitalists are in a position to change the normal cycle of "vitality, prosperity, over-production, crisis, and stagnation" of industry, as Marx puts it.

Despite that the number of business failures is growing from month to month, that in individual sections the small banks fail by the hundreds, the economic depression thus far has not assumed the character of a panic. The main reason for this is the unusual abundance of money. The Federal Reserve ratios recently reached its highest point since 1917. The unheardof plentifulness of money is due to three causes: (1.) The export of American capital decreased in 1923 because of the insecurity of European conditions. (2.) The United States is today the creditor nation of the world and the profits of exported American capital and foreign securities bought up, bring an uninterrupted stream of gold into the country. (3.) Foreign capital flees from Europe to the United States. The first wave of fugitive capital came from Germany; the second wave, recently, from France and Great Britain. We cannot pass final judgment today whether the present economic depression will turn gradually in a slow process to the worse, or whether it will turn into a dramatic panicky crisis.

III.

The curtailment of production, the closing up of factories, or putting them on part-time operation caused an ever-increasing unemployment of big masses.

The United States has no real unemployment statistics, so that it is not easy to form a complete picture of the breadth and depth of unemployment. But the figures and facts which we could ascertain suffice to characterize the situation.

We have no figures on unemployment in the steel industry.

The unemployment among the coal miners is especially very heavy. The Illinois Industrial Review of December 6, 1923, stated: "The miners are face to face with a winter of unemployment. In Illinois 20 per cent of the mines have been closed. In Indiana one in every three mines has shut down. Over 25,000 Illinois miners are out of work, and close to 50,000 are employed only about one-fifth of their working time. In the non-union fields the suffering of the workers is taking an even more acute turn."

Mines Closing Down.

A. E. Lafferty, a West Virginia mine inspector, said in December: "Coal mines thruout West Virginia as well as Ohio and Indiana are closing down. The business slump has grown in almost an incredible volume, and its effects are deplorable. It will be a hard Christmas for thousands of miners."

The official "Journal" of the United Mine Workers stated in November: "It is no theory when we say that our organization is composed of a vast army of reserve members that only get to work, in hundreds of instances, one day a week, and not even that in many localities." And the unemployment among the miners has been growing recently, too. The report of the Illinois department of Labor for January says: "Coal mines in Illinois and adjoining states have closed down throwing hundreds out of work.

The railroad workers are virtually decimated thru unemployment. The reports of the Interstate Commerce Committee show that in August 1,973,505 workers were on the pay rolls of all railroads. In November only 1,899,545. That means a reduction by 73,760 or nearly 5 per cent. But at the same time a big part of the railroad workers were forced to do part time work. In the middle of November there were 81,246 fewer workers on full-time jobs than in the middle of August. That means a reduction of almost 5 per cent. The unemployment increased still further in December. A single railroad, the Pennsylvania, discharged not less than 26,185 workers in December.

The condition of the workers in the textile industry is frightful. The director of the municipal employment bureau of Boston estimated the number of unemployed workers in Boston in January at not less than 60,000.

The "Lawrence Labor" shows that masses of workers are getting paid only for a five-day, a four-day or even a two-day week.

Unemployment In Chicago.

Unemployment in Chicago under the influence of the Illinois situation shows a very serious character. Even a capitalist paper, the Chicago Evening Post, wrote on January 19, 1924: "The problem of unemployment is with us again. The apologetic gentlemen who suggest that they are in need of a meal 'an' most starving' are approaching the prosperous in appearance along West Madison street."

Carl Haessler wrote in the Federated Press of early December, 1923: "Jobs are hard to get in Chicago. Trade union secretaries say so. The chief statistician of the Illinois Department of Labor says so. And a study of the classified ads under the headings of Wanted Male and Wanted Female Help, proves it. Altho

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE) The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a peasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. The Communist company is summoned but, perhaps, too late. Robeiko is dragged out of his house and shot, Klimin's sweetheart is butchered and Klimin and Stalmakhov are overpowered and hurled into a dungeon. The counter-revolutionaries are in possession of the town, with the Red Army away.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

BUT suddenly the vivid remembrances of Simkova cut into his mind like the blow of a whip. Simkova, Aniuta! He was not going to see her again! But that was impossible! He must see her! In his head began to spin a fiery, many-colored kaleidoscope of plans of escape. He thought of the big oaken bolts of the door, of the little cellar window. . . . But as President of the Cheka, he knew too well that during the whole time of his work, there had not been a single case of an escape from this cellar. It was clear that there was no hope. . . .

But the noise of shooting became nearer and nearer.

"Our folk are coming nearer," said Klimin, and Stalmakhov began to swear. His curses, long, cynical and filthy, rang with the notes of a burning, flaming hope.

On the other side of the door there was a sound of steps, and then the turning of the lock.

"For us," said Stalmakhov. And Klimin had no time to answer before they had laid hold of him and were pushing and knocking him about. . . .

"Take the swine to the Chief!" a stentorian voice shouted into the darkness.

Klimin tried to fight himself free, but they hit him on the head with a club. He lost consciousness and they dragged him up the narrow staircase with its rotting, wooden steps, as if he were a heavy sack. Stalmakhov walked up by himself, and his pock-marked face, covered with blood, was calm as ever.

The night had wholly dispersed, and there was a blue sky with a ruby East. Stalmakhov looked at the pale face of Klimin, whom they were dragging along by the arms, and threw a glance round the big inner courtyard of the Cheka, which was shut in by two-story buildings and a high stone wall. A blue flag was leaning against the wall of the little house in which formerly had been the refectory of the Cheka workers. A pile of rifles were scattered about and a boy with a blue cockade in his cap was fitting locks to them. The torn skin on Stalmakhov's forehead smarted from the fresh wind.

"Ah, whom have we here? . . . Comrade Stalmakhov who so carefully collected the corn-toll from the Dmitrov district? See what a bird we have caught!" Stalmakhov heard the malicious, mocking words. Grey, insolent eyes looked at him out of a pink, clean-shaven face under a shaggy fur hat. A well-built figure, gripped at the waist by an officer's broad leather belt. . . . "You don't recognize me, eh? But we are old acquaintances. Besides we met quite recently. Surely you have not forgotten the Military Specialist, Repin, whose documents you looked thru during the search? We did not happen to thank you then for your careful collection of the corn-toll, but we will settle our account now. . . ."

Klimin came to himself when a bucket of cold water had been thrown over him and, at once, tottered to his feet. He was shivering with cold and his head felt as if it were flying to pieces.

As soon as he stood up he saw Stalmakhov, whom two young fellows were holding by the arms. A third in nothing but a blue shirt was flogging Stalmakhov on the back with back-hand blows, satisfaction shining on his bony browless face, with its narrow slit eyes. Stalmakhov groaned now and again, and, together with his groans, bitter curses flew from his mouth. Repin was standing on the steps. He turned to Klimin, smiled maliciously and insolently, and was just going to say something when some one shouted for him and he unwillingly went out.

They were carrying a wounded man thru the yard. A grimace of pain was twisting his pale face, but he, with difficulty lifting his head from his comrade's shoulder, cried out to the men who were flogging Stalmakhov:

"That's the stuff, brothers. . . . Lay into him, Vaska!"

The rifle shots were rattling not more than half a verst away, and sometimes a ricocheting bullet flew over the yard with a resonant wailing hum. And suddenly, breaking thru the monotonous rattle of shooting, there gushed out a powerful wave of shouts of anger and triumph, mingled with shrieks and groans. . . . After that the shooting came suddenly nearer, bullets flew more and more often over the courtyard, every other minute smashing windows in the upper story of the building.

Repin ran into the yard and with him another officer, on whose shoulders Klimin saw epaulettes.

"Harness the horses!" shouted Repin, and the two of them went hurriedly out of the gates.

The flogging of Stalmakhov came to an end of itself. The bandits rushed to harness horses to a cart, and Stalmakhov, no longer supported by any one, tottered and fell in the snow, thin streams of blood pouring from his back.

Klimin ran to him and began to lift him to his feet, getting his hands smeared with the blood. Stalmakhov groaned, trembled and cursed but none the less stood up, tottering. He looked with agony in Klimin's eyes, and whispered with grey lips: "It's cold. . . . Death has come, sure enough . . ." Klimin took him by the shoulders, and putting him into a little barn at the far end of the yard.

"Come on. We'll hide, and perhaps they'll forget us."

In the twilight of the barn, the back of his head pressed into the horse dung on the floor, lay the mutilated body of Ziman. His entrails, scraps of scarlet, white and and purple flesh, mixed up with rags of clothes and horse dung, were scattered on the ground, and a heap of corn had been poured into his ripped-open and disembowelled stomach. Terrific suffering was written on Ziman's little, thin, sharp-nosed face. One of his eyes was wide open, and into the other had been pushed a broken splinter of glass from his spectacles.

"He, too, carefully collected the corn-toll," Stalmakhov whispered hoarsely, dropping on a log and covering his face with his hands.

The shooting came still nearer. One of the bandits was wounded in the yard and sank with a scream on the snow. They carried out the wounded and put them in one cart and shoved a pile of rifles into another. Two officers ran out from the doors of the Cheka building, and with them a civilian in a very good new shuba (fur coat) and spectacles. He carried several portfolios of papers, and in the hands of the officers were revolvers. They had made ready for the victoria, the same in which, so lately, Klimin had driven to meet Simkova. Stalmakhov and Klimin, it seemed, were entirely forgotten. Suddenly Repin, on a foaming horse, rode into the yard. His face was pale, anxious and angry.

"Bring the prisoners here," he shouted. "Where are they?"

Democratizing Honduras - By JAY LOVESTONE

NOW Honduras is to be given a baptismal bath of Wall Street democracy in a rain of bullets. Marines from one of our cruisers have been landed on the northern coast, ostensibly to protect the American consulate from attack by opposing revolutionary forces.

From what we know of the history of our marines this is most unwelcome news to the working and farming classes of our country. The capitalist government running and ruining our country today has always assigned its dirtiest work to the marines. It was these soldiers of the sea that raped Haitian independence. It is these mercenaries of Yankee imperialism that have outraged the national existence of our Latin American republics and have engaged in capitalist brigandage in far-off China. It was the marines who were sent by Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt to drive the poor settlers off the Teapot Dome oil reserves so that Sinclair might be able to consummate his crooked deal with Fall.

Why doesn't the United States first send a note to Honduras to request the safety of our consulate, as our department of state ordinarily does when such cases arise among first rate powers? Why is the despatching of the cruiser Denver and the landing of marines our immediate and first step here? Besides, why is it that our consulate has been singled out for attack by the conflicting groups?

These are all pertinent questions. They arouse us to some rather unsavory conclusions about the mission of our marines. American capitalism is rapidly extending its imperialist gold over the less developed and weaker countries. Our ruling class doesn't pussyfoot with recalcitrants. Our capitalists are arrogant, aggressive, and pursue a policy of boldness marked by recklessness.

Last year there were floated in the United States, Latin American government bonds to the value of $120,000,000. In addition to these loans there were placed in American hands industrial issues totalling a value of more than $50,000,000 in 1923 alone.

These gigantic investments of the surplus value wrung from our working masses by our capitalist exploiters must be protected. A challenge to the security of these investments in any one country is a menace to the safety of these bonds in every country. Unsettled conditions in Honduras tend to undermine the security of our bankers' and manufacturers' investments not only in this little afflicted republic, but in every sphere of influence where the American dollar is on the offensive.

The marines landed in Honduras are there to inflict a heavy dose of dollar democracy, of capitalist tyranny on the people of the weak country. The marines are landed in violation of the sovereignty of Honduras. The landing of the marines is in utter violation of that holiest of principles of self-determination of nationalities, for which hundreds of thousands of our workers and farmers were wounded or killed during the world war.

The marines were landed in Honduras to protect our capitalist bonds and investments and nothing and nobody else. And being the proletarian guards of our capitalist imperialist clique, our marines will pour hot lead and thrust cold steel into the poor exploited masses of Honduras as they have done to the Haitians, Nicaraguans, and Dominicans.

The Priest Speaks

By WILLIAM GAMALIER SHEPARD

Scene: Madison Square Garden, New York City.

Time: 1923.

The speaker has been talking a long time, his peroration is heard in a high singing voice above the heads of a monster crowd.

Brother Gods, behold the crawling ant, the lion, the tiger, the crow, the toad, the crayfish and the elephant, little and big beasts to dress the world for us. And the birds to sing.

And we . . . oh see me beat my breast and do a few steps of the shrine mandance . . . why we sit on the top roost crowing over all, with one foot in God's Home and one on this ash-pile. . . Did you ever see the likes of this? Never on sea or land such majesty was seen as a man coming out of the white palm of God, the walls of darkness light-shattering to greet him. Look no further for the finest. Acid Proof Made for the Whole Family. Non-shrinkable. Send it to the laundry and get it back new.

Who's your Tailor?

Stick to God. With a thread and a patch of beef he sews up angels. The Miracle Man.

A secret. Listen. Shut that typewriter. Turn in the radio.

God sat all night in seance with the stars that breathed Him forth in a gust of light, studying the blue prints of his new invention, lopping off a corner here, adding a beam there. When he wrote Appd. and broke a package of Fatimas to celebrate labor's end he handed it to His angels yet lacking that round turret packed with square mirrors. The copying clerk added this detail. And the Hosts of Heaven stood to see the strange new beast whose first words, "I, Am," stirred a shudder in Demigorgon.

Eventually, why not now? Lay your heart and your dollar on the right altar, you can't miss dividends.

Your bread is buttered on the right side, children of God. Keep your eyes on the grand old nag.

Don't Forget to Grease the Gears. It takes grease to get there. Not Three-in-One either, but Gargoyle.

In the night my soul, my daughter, cries, clinging to a raft of greenbacks, and lo! Christ! . . . walking on the water, with a harp and a handful of signed receipts.

Glory . . . And the harp has golden strings. Glory, And the harp has . . golden . . . strings.

The Trade Union Movement in Poland - - - - By J. LENSKY

THE last year was for the trade union movement in Poland a period of exceedingly hard struggles against capital. The enormous depreciation of the Polish mark in connection with the general financial catastrophe, caused by the reactionary policy of the ruling classes—capitalist and landowners—forced large masses of the working class, even those under the influence of the opportunist and conservative leaders to enter the fight for existence. The last year, therefore, has witnessed such big and stormy strikes as independent Poland had never experienced before. There were the heroic struggles of the workers of Lodz, Warsaw, the Dombrovo coal district, Upper Silesia, and others, which began merely as demands for higher wages to keep up with the ever rising costs of living, and ended with big political demonstrations and regular battles with the police. The apex of these fights was the Cracau revolt of the railroad workers with the assistance of the entire working class and a part of the army. The workers were victorious, inasmuch as the old historical capital of Poland was in the hands of the workers up to the minute when the exprienced social-traitors of the Polish socialist party handed over to the reationary government the position acquired in blood.

Economic Situation Grows Worse.

After all these hard struggles and betrayals the labor movement weakened. The economic situation of the country is getting worse. The exchange rate of the dollar grew from 3,600,000 in November to more than ten million in January.

The inflation, mainly under the influence of the reforms for stabilization, took on such proportions that not only did it rob the laboring masses of a big part of their income, but it even undermined production. The wages, whose real value falls continually with the rise in the cost of living, were lower in December than in November. The rise in the cost of living, according to the reckoning of the central bureau of statistics, in the two halves of the month of December, amounted to 51.06 per cent and 53.67 per cent, respectively, in December, 66.89 per cent and 62.50 per cent, respectively. The wages fell considerably more wherever the bosses regulate them monthly, as, for instance, in Starachovitze.

Still more dangerous for the laboring masses is another outcome of the present period of inflation—unemployment. The impoverishment of the internal market as well as the considerable rise in the price of industrial products as a result of the expensiveness of raw material and foreign machinery, and the high risks, with the depreciation of the mark, and finally, the policy of financial economy—all this produced further curtailment of production. This holds true especially of the export branches of industry, mainly in the textile industry, as well as those branches of production which are dependent upon financial economy, such as the metal industry, the tobacco industry, etc.

Unemployment Increases.

In the textile industry unemployment gradually affected a number of small factories in Lodz and Bielsk. More than a thousand workers altogether are unemployed there, and more than half work from two to five days a week. In the metal industry those factories were affected which worked on government orders (mainly railroad cars), as these orders were in part cancelled and in part curtailed.

There has been a shrinkage of work also in the Upper Silesian coal and steel district. As a result of the move to lease out the tobacco monopoly the crisis has also affected the private tobacco industry.

The deterioration of the market made itself evident also in the branch of industry which has been the strongest up to now—in the coal industry, despite the fact that the turnover tax was reduced by 25 per cent on Upper Silesian coal and by 22.5 per cent on Dombrovo coal, and despite the fact that the tax was lowered further by 5 per cent for export. The Dusseldorf agreement between the German and French capitalists, which brought about an increase in the production of coal in the Ruhr area, creates new difficulties for the development of the Polish coal industry.

The standard of living of the workers, which is very low as it is, has lately sunk still lower.

The tremendous increase in the cost of living, the proposal and adoption of the stabilization of taxes, together with the phenomenal fall in the rate of exchange forced the question of the stabilization of wages on the order of business. All taxes must be paid in Polish marks according to the value of the French franc. The merchants are demanding francs for their merchandise, but they do not want to pay the workers "stabilized" wages. In various branches of industry the workers put up concrete demands as regards wages, based upon pre-war wages in gold.

Trade Unions Weakened.

A sharp defensive fight was waged only in cases of curtailment of work, as this threatens the existence of thousands of workers' families.

The trade unions were weakened numerically and otherwise by their feeble activity as well as the tactics of the opportunists, who failed to co-ordinate the individual struggles, and prevented decisive action. It was in this way that confidence in the trade unions diminished. The existence of the trade union is being undermined still further by the financial crisis. The trade unions are no longer in a position to satisfy their most elementary needs, they cannot, for instance, pay their secretaries, traveling expenses, or cost of publications; they have to ask the local unions to pay even for postage.

In order to meet the financial crisis the opportunist Central Executive Committee of the trade unions simply raises the dues, regardless of the fact that there is a great drop in membership. The Left Wing proposes the increase in the number of dues payers rather than the amount of the dues. Raising the fighting spirit of trade unions, gaining back the confidence of the masses, setting up of factory councils which would embrace the broadest masses—that is the only and durable means, in the opinion of the Left Wing, to bring about the salvation of the unions and to increase their funds.

Besides raising the dues in keeping with the rise in wages the left wing of the trade unions favors as an immediate measure the abandonment of the present apparatus of officials and instituting elections for the leading positions.

In addition to the general causes for the weakness of the trade unions there is also the persecution of radical organizations by the government. And this interrupts their normal activity from time to time. There is only one representative of the lefts at present in the Central Committee of the Trade Unions, and a second one is prevented from taking part in the meetings. Individual unions are being massacred. In December there was not a single new trade union registered. What is more, a law was promulgated that a trade union which has once been closed could not be opened again.

Left Wing Active.

As a result, the situation of the left wing of the trade unions is very difficult, but still it has been able to hold its own, and even to make some advance, as, for instance, in the building trades, among the chemical and lumber workers. In Lemberg the left wing received more votes in the last elections in the trade unions than ever before. In Upper Silesia the left wing brought about a union of the Free Trade Unions (of a left tendency) which came into existence under the influence of the Polish socialist party, with the Central Committee of the German radical trade unions. Provision is made for a greater unity campaign; and by the time of the Congress the left wing is assured of about half of the places in the Central Committee of the Free Trade Unions.

The hardest fight for the left wing was in those organizations which are of great political significance, principally in the Warsaw Central Committee of Trade Unions. Since the November strike certain Polish socialist party elements are doing their utmost to destroy the influence of the Left Wing, and are going so far as to persecute the Left Wing. This sort of action was occasioned by the meeting called by the central committee on December 16 to discuss economic questions (minimum wage, weekly regulation of wages). On the day before, on December 15, the Witos government fell, and it became apparent that the meeting would assume a political character. For this reason the meeting was attended by the deputies of the Seym faction of the Union of City and Village Proletariat.

Socialists Are Betrayers.

Their presence focused the attention of all the thousands at the meeting upon them, especially as there were workers present who had been delivered up to the bosses and the government by the Polish socialist party. The crowd did not allow the chief speaker, Deputy Gardetzky, to finish his spech, for he attempted to put all the blame on the workers for the bad conditions. The socialist officials seized this opportunity to close the meeting without having discussed the new government. The left wing was blamed for it, and a resolution was published by the central committee charging that the left wing had broken up the meeting, and condemning the Communist Deputies of the Seym and the Communist Party. But the representatives of the Left Wing retorted with a strong resolution protesting against such high-handed methods and calling for an impartial investigation. The resolution of the Left Wing representatives ended with an appeal to the membership of the trade unions to preserve the unity endangered by the leaders of the Polish socialist party.

Lately there has been a tendency in a certain part of the Polish socialist party toward splitting the trade unions. This is due to the sharpening of the social conflicts, and to the effort of the Polish socialist party to prevent mass action. The Polish socialist party is intent upon destroying the influence of the Left Wing in the trade unions at a time when the Polish socialist party has time and time again gone over to the support of the capitalist government and participation in it.

Those members of the Polish socialist party in the trade unions who realize that splitting the trade unions with their present internal weakness and their financial crisis would result in their complete downfall are of a different view.

As the creation of separate, red trade unions under present conditions cannot be successful (difficulties with the police and indifference of the masses) and as such action harbors the danger of curtailing the Party's area of activity and the danger of the slackening of the tension in the economic struggles, it is our duty to come out strongly for the defense of the unity, of the existence and the power of the trade unions. It is our duty to reveal the real motives of those who are for the split and to make it easier for those in the Polish Socialist Party who are for unity of the trade unions to win a majority.

Left Wing Demands Unity.

A strong resolution for unity was passed on December 29 by the Trade Union Department of the Communist Party. It reads in part:

"The principal tactic of the Left Wing shall continue to be the unity of the trade unions.

"The most important perequisite for this unity is full freedom of criticism and agitation for the left wing within the general frame-work of organization of the unified trade unions."

With the view that the agitation for the formation of factory councils hangs together with other problems, the trade union department links this agitation with the current trade union questions. In view of the weakening of the trade unions it becomes a pressing necessity to recruit new masses, and the surest way to do this is to use the factory councils as a support. At the same time, this policy breaks down the opposition of the opportunists who sense in the factory councils a dangerous competitor; the chairman of the Warsaw Central Committee of Trade Unions, Gardetzky, came out decisively against the factory councils.

In order to plant the ideas and existence of the factory councils in the masses we must defeat, not only the opposition of the opportunists, but also the indifference of the masses. Wherever such factory committees exist in their modern form—in Upper Silesia—they are dominated by a Polish or German opportunist majority and the masses have as little confidence in them as in the opportunist trade unions. The role played by the central executive committees formed during the November strikes proved amply what the factory councils can be, if revolutionary workers stand at their head. The task of the left trade unions is to transform the existing factory councils into actual fighting organizations.

BOOK REVIEW

The Government of India, By J. Ramsay MacDonald, published by B. W. Huebsch, New York.

THIS book gives considerable information on the political machinery of the British government in India and at the same time gives a good picture of the alleged radical Ramsay MacDonald. The premier of Great Britain, and the possessions beyond the seas, won a reputation for progressivism and pacifism, but his attitude toward India is not clearly distinguishable from that of an avowed Tory, and on his coming into the office of premier one of his first moves was to order the construction of seven warships. This is a novel form of pacifism but—that is Ramsay MacDonald.

The British—to judge from Mr. MacDonald's book—were forced by an unkind fate to assume political dominion over India. In 1858 as in 1914 the British Empire did not desire "a foot of territory." The Queen said in 1858 when assuming sovereignty over what were the East India Company's possessions "We desire no extension of our present territorial possessions." How like Lloyd George in the early days of the world war?

Another quotation may give our readers an insight into Ramsay MacDonald's imperialistic mind: "As I have indicated, at a very early time the British nation regarded the transactions of the merchants in India as being something more than trading affairs. WE felt we were undertaking political responsibilities and consequently the long drawn out history of the relations of the Company and the Government tells the story of how the nation's sense of its obligations to India overshadowed the original purpose of the Company . . . We regarded the people as wards and we governed as trustees. . . . India has not been kept by the sword but by the law; not by fear but by trust in Parliament."

This monumental charlatan, posing as a socialist speaks the language of British imperialism more eloquently than Lord Curzon. The Sepoy Mutiny is glossed over. We read nothing of the blowing of Hindoo rebels from the mouths of cannons. This hypocritical specimen of the most slimy, canting, robber-ruling-class in the world "carries the white man's burden" and exalts the pirate traders and buccaneers of old England to the status of saviors and leaders of backward races, into the paths of progress. The fate of the countless millions of Indians who have starved in the midst of plenty while British plunderers at the point of the sword burglarized their country does not arouse MacDonald's righteous wrath but the blessings of Parliamentarism are held before the beggared Hindoos as the Sacred Cow of the New Dispensation.

We do not quarrel with Mr. MacDonald's facts. We rebel against his conclusions. This may not be a review of his book but it is a brief glimpse at the real MacDonald. That is of greater importance than the book. Many of our readers may be disappointed in MacDonald or the British Labor Party's achievements. They should read the book not for what they may learn about India, but about MacDonald.

Stalin on Tasks of Russian Communist Party

Note.—THE DAILY WORKER today publishes the concluding part of the speech delivered by Comrade Stalin to a large meeting of party workers on the problems confronting the Russian Communists at the present time. Our readers cannot help but admire the frankness with which the Russian leaders discuss their weaknesses. Smaller men would try and gloss over or excuse them. Not so the Russian Communist chiefs. They know that organizations are composed of men and women who are liable to err and the best way to remedy mistakes is to acknowledge their presence and find a cure for them. We urge you not to miss a single part of this important discussion. In our next issue we will publish the first portion of Comrade Zinoviev's speech. He is Chairman of the Communist International and President of the Petrograd Soviet.

* * * *

Comrade Stalin Continues:

In the seventh place, it is necessary to do more work among the non-partisan workers. This is one means by which the inner Party situation and the activity of the Party masses can be bettered. I must say that our organizations still pay too little attention to this. Too little attention especially to the presence of non-partisan workers in our Soviet organs. Comrades, I believe that if we do not put a certain minimum of faith in the non-partisans, we shall evoke a very great mistrust of our organizations on the part of the non-partisans.

Faith of Non-Partisans.

This faith on the part of the non-partisans is imperatively necessary. Comrades, it is imperatively necessary to force the Communists to drop their candidatures. No speeches should be held maintaining that Communists only should be elected. The non-partisans must be encouraged, induced to take up state work. We shall gain only advantage from this, and will receive as a reply the trust of the non-partisans in our organizations.

In the eighth place, work among the peasantry must be intensified. I do not know why our village nuclei, for instance, cannot be set to practical tasks: First, of being the interpreters and distributors of the Soviet laws bearing on the life of the peasantry, and secondly, of being agitators and spreaders of elementary agronomical knowledge, if no more than to teach that the fields must be sown at the right time, the seed cleansed, etc.

I should like to mention two extremes, two exaggerations which have appeared in some discussion articles in the "Pravda" with respect to the questions of the workers' democracy.

Danger of NEP.

The first extreme is in regard to nomination by election. This consists of the efforts made by some comrades to carry out nomination by "election" to the utmost possible point. Election having once been admitted to be the right method, then go on electing at any price! This view, comrades, is a mistaken one. The Party will not accept it. To be sure we are no longer living in times of war, we are passing thru a period of peaceful development—but we have the New Economic Policy. Do not forget this, comrades. It was not during the war that the Party undertook the task of purging itself, but after the war. Why?

Because during the war the fear of defeat held the Party closely together, and various elements corroding the Party internally were obliged to fall into the line of the Party which was struggling to the death. These bonds are no longer there to hold us together, for there is no war. But we have the NEP, we have permitted capitalism to re-enter, and the bourgeoisie is striking fresh roots. It is true that all this furthers the work of purging the Party, of placing it upon a firmer foothold. But on the other hand, it envelops us in the atmosphere of the rising and growing bourgeoisie.

Sifting of Party Membership.

It was precisely after the NEP that the Party undertook a sifting process, reducing its number by one-half. It was precisely after the NEP that the Party decided that the security of our organizations against the NEP required, for instance, that it be made difficult for non-proletarian elements to gain admittance to the Party, that lengthy membership of the Party be made condition to appointment as a functionary of the Party, etc. Did the Party act rightly in taking these precautionary measures, which limited the "broad democracy?" In my opinion it acted rightly. It is just for this reason that I assume that the democracy is necessary, that nomination by election is necessary, but that the limiting measures prescribed by the XI and XII Congresses must still remain in force, at least, the most fundamental of them.

The second extreme deals with the question of the limits of discussion. Some comrades demand that discussion be unlimited; they consider the Alpha and Omega of Party work to consist in consultation on all questions and forget all other sides of Party work, that of real activity demanded by the execution of the Party decisions in real life. The Party is not merely a union of persons acting in like manner; it is a fighting union of participators in like action, fighting on the basis of common ideology of their program and tactics.

I conclude my address, comrades, by warning you against these two extremes, and proceed determinedly and straightforwardly on the course towards inner Party democracy which was laid down by the Central in September of this year, then we shall assuredly experience a great uplift in our Party work.

In the Domain of the Children's Struggle

By NAT KAPLAN.

IT is lucky for us that the Communist children's movement in America suffered its birth pangs at the time when its legitimate parents, the youth and adult Communist movement had already evolved from out of their isolated conditions and became live fighting bodies engaged in mass activity.

The favorable conditions surrounding the birth has naturally reflected itself in the stradling infant—the Junior Section of the Young Workers League—in so far as it has retained its identity from the very start as an organization engaged in the class struggle.

Many of the parents of the 3,000 young communists in the Junior Section do not recognize this important feature of the organization and when it is brought to their notice "via the gossip route" many untrue and distorted conceptions of the matter are formed. It is at this point that the parents take advantage of their economic superiority over the child to force it to sabotage this phase of the Junior Groups' activity. Even Communist parents—members of the Workers Party have been known at times to sabotage the class struggle feature of the children's movement. This sad factor is not new and can only be rectified thru the establishment of a better understanding and relationship between the adults and the children. This is already being partially accomplished in the Junior Groups.

On the Field of Battle.

The battle field of the children's struggle centers in the public school. Even as the shop, factories, mines etc., form the center of the class struggle for the adult proletarians, so the public school class room forms the battle field—the center of the class struggle for the proletarian child.

It is here that the child is confronted with the iron heel of the teacher's dictatorship. Everything is done for the child. The child can do nothing for itself. It would astound a great many parents were they to listen to an ordinary discussion in one of the Junior Groups. "Oh! Our teacher doesn't let us ask questions!" speaks up one child. "We can only answer the questions which our teacher asks us," verifies another. And so it goes, a complete subordination of the personal initiative of the child to the so-called superior knowledge of the modern bourgeoisie pedagogs. The child with a strong will, a rebellious spirit—in other words, a child who would make a good class fighter, both now and for the future—has to have that will and spirit broken by the teacher's dictatorship in the school and by the parential dictatorship at home. It is only natural that the child should rebel against this state of affairs.

Not only is the method of education in vogue in the public school based on the erroneous application of the principle of the "Right of the stronger," but the education itself—the material utilized as lessons—is nothing but the vile propaganda of American imperialism. History is the glorification of capitalist wars. Reading is the glorification of bourgeoisie ethics; the inoculator of superstitious ideas; the weaver of mysticism around the memories of dead bourgeiosie heroes, etc., etc. Arithmetic is the glorification of the profit system. The combination of the method and the education proper of the public schools can only serve one purpose and that is: To make servile wage slaves of the workers' children.

The struggle against this state of affairs for the child also has its forerunner: The struggle against the immediate rotten conditions in the schools, such as, insufficient number of seats, veritable fire trap school buildings, unsanitary conditions, etc., etc. Special care must be taken to link up both features of the struggle in every campaign undertaken within the public schools, or else we will be faced with seeming contradictions. Thus a fight for more schools to curtail a seat shortage must be coupled at all times with the demand of "Down with the Nationalist and Religious propaganda of the public schools."

How the Battle Is Conducted.

It is marvelous to watch how very naturally the children take to the class struggle activities, and how they can utilize League and Party experience for their own ends. An interesting example of this is portrayed by our Daisytown, Pa., Junior Group. One week the group reported that they had been playing some Communist games, among them one which is called: "Catching the shop nuclei organizer." Thru the medium of this game the children grasped the entire idea of the nuclei form of organization and the week following the game had already divided their Junior Group into four school nuclei, which today functions right on the field of battle.

As a generalization you can lay out the form that the battle takes as follows: The children having gained a Communist perception in the Junior Groups; having made a study of the true nature of history, etc., will naturally rebel when the teacher presents these subjects in the usual manner. At times a solitary little rebel will get up and: "Oh! teacher, in our Junior Groups we found out that George Washington was a wicked man who bought and sold black and white slaves." This little rebel will no doubt be defeated and forced to submit to the will of the teacher. At other times the other children will be won over by the solitary little rebel and join him in his fight—or else the existence of a Junior Group School or even class nucleus will serve as the basis for the winning over of ever greater masses of the school children to the fight on hand. At no time is the child permitted to feel as tho the struggle is the machination of some older comrade. Everything that the children do is done on their own initiative as a group. They formulate their own demands and lay the basis for their own fight. The older comrades, the leaders and teachers of the Junior Groups, thru hints and suggestions endeavor to guide the decisions of the children into the proper channels, and they can only do this after they have won the confidence of the children by becoming part of them in their struggle, play and educational work.

United Front of Parents and Offspring.

The bourgeoisie educational system has long recognized the necessity of winning over the parents for their system. Thus there has come into existence powerful parent-teacher associations whose purpose is to coordinate the home life of the child with the life of the child in the schools. The Junior Section recognized this problem especialy at the time when the class struggle features of the Junior Section became intensified and the parents loomed up as an opposition in certain cases.

The solution of the problem is in the words of the Hammond, Ind., Juniors, as follows: "We are for the united front with the grown-up in the battle for all who toil." In carrying out this principle the Juniors thruout the country are today organizing parent's conferences, where the Juniors report of their activities and where the life and work of the child in the Group are discussed and acted upon in an advisory capacity. These conferences are made very interesting by the children when they arrange little programs: plays, recitations, child speeches, etc., for their parents. Hence, we see that the Junior Section is getting the parents more and more interested in the activities of the children and is laying the basis for the better relationship between the adults and the children: A principle which can only reach perfection after the conquest of power by the proletariat.

UNCLE WIGGILY'S TRICKS— A LAUGH FOR THE CHILDREN

"I can't hear any music from that hand organ!"
"Hold your paw there, Mr. Bob Cat, and you'll hear music"
YIP!! YOW!!
"Listen to the music now!"

Marx in Words and Action

By C. E. RUTHENBERG

NO better illustration of the wide gulf between the formal, sterile acceptance of Marxian principles in words, and the use of those principles as a guide in formulating policies for a party engaged in leading the workers in the class struggle against capitalism, can be found than that which appears in an article by Louis B. Boudin in the February issue of the American Labor Monthly.

Boudin has acquired a reputation as a Marxist. He has written a book on "The Theoretical System of Karl Marx," which the writer confesses to have studied as part of his Marxian education something over a decade ago. Like Kautsky, Boudin knows the principles which Marx developed from his study of history and analysis of capitalist society. Undoubtedly he could make brilliant theoretical presentation of these principles. But when Kautsky and Boudin stand beside the seething ocean of our present day social order, in which the waves of conflicting class interests dash hither and thither and break in great torrents as they meet, their Marxian theories remain sterile intellectual formulas which they are unable to apply to this seething ocean of social forces and thus formulate the guiding policies which carry the working class movement to its goal thru these stormy waters. Because of this intellectual twist the Russian Revolution was for Boudin "the tragedy" and for Kautsky something much worse.

Boudin's inability to carry Marxian principles into the field of actual class struggle is expressed in comment on the policy in relation to the development of a "Third Party" in the United States, presented by the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party to the convention of the party in December. To Boudin this appears as "The United Front—Berger and Ruthenberg." For him there is no difference between the reformism of Victor Berger and the Socialist Party and the Revolutionary Marxism of the Workers Party, because for the moment there is agreement between the two policies in striving for, what is in appearance, the same end.

In passing it is worth while correcting Boudin's historical recollections. He states that Ruthenberg and Berger have formed a United Front before—at the St. Louis Convention of the Socialist Party in favor of the manifesto against the war. The fact of the matter is that Victor Berger was bitterly opposed to the St. Louis Manifesto, threatened to write his own manifesto and fell in line only when he found that his position had no support in the St. Louis Convention. It may be worth while recalling, too, that Boudin's resolution introduced in the same convention, was regarded by the Left Wing delegates who dominated that convention, whether he intended it to be so or not, as a pro-ally statement, which they rejected for a clear-cut declaration in opposition to the war, which no one could misunderstand.

Let us return to the main question, however. Boudin sees it thus: Victor Berger is for LaFollette; C. E. Ruthenberg is for LaFollette; thus there is a united front of the "right" and "left." By the method of throwing the question into the terms of individuals Boudin may give the uncritical reader the impression of the correctness of his statements, but that is hardly a Marxian method of making a point. We shall try to make clear the fundamental differences which Boudin obscures thru this method.

Victor Berger is unquestionably for LaFollette. Victor Berger is for the individual LaFollette because LaFollettee favors certain measures of reform also favored by Victor Berger. Victor Berger, and probably also the Socialist Party, are for a "Third Party" which LaFollette will lead because the policies of such a party would undoubtedly be the petty bourgeoisie reform measures which are the policies of the Socialist Party. Victor Berger and the Socialist Party can identify themselves with LaFollette because fundamentally there is no difference between them. LaFollette and the "Third Party" represent the realization of the Socialist hopes. He is their Ramsay MacDonald.

This is not the road to the proletarian revolution, Boudin would say—if he is still a Marxist, which one may doubt from his comment "History A La Mode" in the same article in which he criticizes the Workers Party. The working class can only win its emancipation thru a revolutionary political struggle thru which it becomes the ruling class, he would argue. Since the Workers Party is in a United Front with Berger and the Socialists on the question of LaFollette and the "Third Party," it is guilty of the same opportunism which characterized the Socialist Party.

Thus, for the Marxist for whom Marxism is a mere formula, the case would be complete against the Workers Party.

But is that all that there is to the present situation in the United States? Let us see whether Marxism does not offer us something more than what is contained in this sterile formula.

It was Marx who wrote that the bourgeoisie was not "one reactionary mass." There are divisions and conflict of interests within the bourgeoisie. Particularly there is a deep-going conflict of interest between the petty bourgeoisie and the capitalist class. What, for instance, does the present struggle in Congress over the Mellon tax plan represent but a struggle whether the petty bourgeoisie or the big capitalists shall bear the burden of taxation resulting from the huge expenditures during the war and its aftermath?

The conflicts within the capitalist class, between the big capitalists and the petty bourgeoisie, and between the capitalist class and the working class have all been intensified in this country since the end of the war. This intensification of the economic conflict has its expression politically.

The two old parties have both been dominated by the capitalist class, yet they have had as their supporters capitalists, petty bourgeoisie, workers and farmers. What we are witnessing at the present time in the "Third Party" movement and the Farmer-Labor Party movement is crystallization of political parties representing the petty bourgeoisie and the workers and exploited farmers respectively—the birth of the political consciousness of these classes. At the present time the petty bourgeoisie "Third Party" and the working class Farmer-Labor Party movements are inextricably intermixed; LaFollette and the "Third Party" has the support of both movements.

Is there nothing of interest to a revolutionary Marxian party in these developments? Is it of no importance from the standpoint of the proletarian revolution that the centralized power which had the support of capitalists, petty bourgeoisie and workers alike is breaking up? Is it of no importance to the proletarian revolution that a petty bourgeoisie "Third Party" is being created, which will array itself in opposition to the ruling capitalist power? Is it of no importance that within and alongside of this "Third Party" movement there is the tendency for the creation of a mass working class party?

For the Marxist for whom Marxism is more than an interesting theoretical formula these movements are of the most vital significance, for it is the very essence of Marxism that it is thru this crystallization of the class struggle in political struggles, thru the weakening of the ruling capitalist power in this process, that the way is opened for the victory of the working class.

Shall we stand aside while this process goes on and in splendid isolation protect our revolutionary virginity? Is that our role as a revolutionary Marxian party—a Communist Party?

We answer a thousand time no. To do so is to hold ourselves aloof from the development of the revolution itself. We must enter into this movement. We must play our part in it. We must throw all our strength into hastening the crystallization of the petty bourgeoisie "Third Party" and at the same time of the mass Farmer-Labor Party.

We will not be deterred from carrying out these tactics by the fact that seemingly we are working in a united front with Victor Berger and the Socialists. We know that while the Socialist support of a "Third Party" is an expression of opportunism, that our tactics are revolutionary Marxism because we are aiming at a different goal.

The Workers Party is not for LaFollette as an individual. The Workers Party is not for the measures which LaFollette the individual favors, not for the measures which a LaFollette "Third Party" may favor. The Workers Party tells the workers and farmers frankly that neither the measures which LaFollette favors nor the measures which a LaFollette Party will advocate, will open the road for their escape from the exploitation and oppression of capitalism.

But the birth of a "Third Party" will weaken the centralized capitalist power. It will place the petty bourgeoisie definitely in opposition to that centralized power. That is an event of great revolutionary importance. The Workers Party is ready to throw all its strength into the balance to bring about this situation.

Boudin may know Marxism in words. But the Workers Party is applying Marxism in action.

Capitalism Offers No Choice

By SCOTT NEARING

Changes in the ways of making a living cause misery and suffering. The time must come when such alterations in the economic structure can be effected without the terrible upsets that now accompany them; but while one class holds special privileges, it will almost inevitably resent changes which threaten to destroy its vested interests. Under present circumstances, important changes in economic life invariably involve very heavy losses.

During the past few years Russia has been held up as a horrible example of the Soviet idea. "See how the Russians have suffered," cry the critics. "Do you want to try communism and pay the same price? Can't you be content to let well enough alone?"

No Freedom of Choice.

Such remarks presuppose that the world is free to choose between capitalist prosperity and Soviet hardship. Consequently, the argument finds general favor at this present moment it is true for the United States. Ten years ago it would have also been true of Germany, but meanwhile German capitalism has ripened and rotted. As between Russia and Germany the choice is Soviet hardship with hope, or capitalist hardship with despair.

During the past half century Karl Marx and his followers have insisted that the capitalist system would ripen and rot, and that from it would drop the seeds of a new social order.

Germany and Russia.

The Russian revolution came before Russian capitalism had ripened completely on prematurely by the failure of the Russian bureaucracy during the war. This made the task of the revolutionists doubly difficult, since they were compelled to transform and to build at the same time.

German capitalism had developed more completely however, and the war-crisis merely hastened its maturation. The events of the last few years in Germany therefore probably point the way that will be followed when matured capitalist countries race a life and death crisis.

What is that way? Here are two answers written by men supposed to be upholders of the present order.

"The Germany of today is a huge economic organization that is not functioning," writes Prof. E. M. Patterson, Professor of Economics in the University of Pennsylvania. "The problem is not one of shortage of labor or of fixed capital and a dearth of raw materials, while all production is carried on at such costs that competition with other countries in the world market is in many lines entirely impossible at present. The result is widespread unemployment and suffering."—(New York Evening Post, Jan. 10, 1924.)

Professor Patterson sees an economic organization that will not work—a machine that has failed to live up to the anticipations of those who built it. Far more emphatic is the summary of Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman, Consulting Statistician of the Prudential Life Insurance Co. and Dean of the Advanced Department of the Babson Institute. Professor Patterson is disturbed.

Dr. Hoffman is appalled.

"The situation in Germany today is as tragic as it is incomprehensible. It goes without saying that the rich are growing richer while the poor are growing poorer. There is a frightful and disgusting contrast of ruthless extravagance and sordid poverty. Proportionately, the rich and parasitic element is probably more numerous today than previous to the war. The once wealthy and highly educated middle class has been forced to the wall. All the old time investments and savings have gone for nothing. All of the life insurance in force previous to 1921 has lapsed. All pension funds, including those of the Government, are bankrupt, and the pensions are of no intrinsic value. Paper money of enormous denominations has become ridiculous. Incredible confusion reigns everywhere, and prices for articles or services of real value are preposterous, and often higher than in the United States and Europe."—("The Economic World," Jan. 12, 1924, page 41.)

Complete Descriptions.

These two descriptions are almost complete—idle men, idle land, idle machinery, mounting wealth, deepening poverty, the destruction of the middle class, the degradation of the worker, misery and chaos. This is exactly what Marx and his followers said would happen when a capitalist society ripened, and in almost their words. Neither Professor Patterson nor Dr. Hoffman are Marxists. Both would repudiate the suggestion. But both of them, surveying the conditions of economic life in a dying capitalist system, picture, in Marxian terms the form of the catastrophe.

No Hope in Capitalism.

What will happen to a society that treads the path of capitalism? Class war, international war, disaster, desolation. The inhabitants of the capitalist world cannot choose between capitalist prosperity and soviet hardship. Capitalism will bring elsewhere, what it has brought to Germany—terror and want.

The people of the capitalist countries face a simple choice: capitalist hardship, with the despair of a dying order; soviet hardship with the hope of a new world.

IMPEACH COOLIDGE!

LENIN

He burned himself out
To feed a larger flame;
And now his ashen body
Lies within the Kremlin walls—
Soon to pass to naught.

We bow our heads in sorrow
That our leader's gone.

But Lenin is not dead.
He lives in the heart of great Russia;
In the heart of the lowly Hindu;
In the workers of France and Germany;
In all the workers and peasants
And all the exploited of the earth,
He lives.

He carried the wounds of a martyr,
And suffered the shame of an outcast.
He was hated like a hound of hell
By all the Plutes thruout the world.

But Lenin held within the depths of his brain,
The mighty pillory which rocked
The whole network of capitalism,
And on this rock he built his dream
Which is marching on triumphantly;
While all about, capitalism
Falls to ruin.

All hail! To the Workers' Republic,
The work he loved so well.
Lenin is not dead,
His monument lives, forever.

The Job of Rebuilding Russia

By ANNA LOUISE STRONG

EVERY month the organization of Russia improves, under the stimulus of the new economic policy and the continued peace. When I first entered Russia, in August, 1921, at the beginning of the famine, I carried my own bedding and food with me, and prepared for disinfection at the journey's end. Nine months later, in June, 1922, when again I entered, there was already on the fast trains an attempt to provide blankets for those who had none, but sheets were only available for the first comers. I succeeded in getting one sheet, which appeared to have been washed, but not ironed.

By mid-summer, even a year and a half ago, it was possible to take trips in all directions without fear of disease. A strong and well organized health department, reinforced at last with hospital and disinfecting supplies thru the American Relief Administration, had cleaned up the centers of disease along the railroads. Until autumn there were regulations against traveling south of Moscow without a certificate of inoculation against cholera, but step by step, as the months advanced, the area of cholera was limited.

Travel Is Easy.

At present, travel is easy and not very expensive thruout Russia. I have been so far north as the Arctic Circle, three days above Petrograd, visiting mica mines and feldspar quarries; and as far south as the Crimea, where the entire coast is one great health resort under the Department of Health. I have been to the oil fields of Baku, where 157 new wells were being drilled, and where production was steadily increasing according to a program which will reach pre-war about 1925, from the proceeds of the fields alone and without foreign capital. I have been in Tiflis, capitol of the Caucasus, which suffered less from civil war than any city in the Soviet Federation, and which is gay with home-woven silks and delicious nougat and Georgian wine. To Kiev also I have been, the ancient capitol of the Ukraine, which endured during the civil war some sixteen bombardments, as it changed hands to Germans, Poles, Denikin, and many other bands, but which is now rebuilding its shattered dwellings under the capable and sacrificing direction of a tired-looking youth named Vidensky, who dreams of making here on the banks of the Dneiper the greatest garden city of the world.

In all these directions, and in many others—out across Siberia to Vladivostok or Peking, southeast across the plains of Turkestan to the heart of Asia—traffic is regular, equipped with sleeping-cars and dining-cars, and, most surprising of all, on time. The Russian trains run slowly, but for the past year, traveling in all directions, I have not once been noticeably late. An accumulated delay of two hours on a four days journey to Baku, reduced by one hour on the following day's run to Tiflis, is something that might happen on any American railroad.

City Life Improving.

City life in Russia has also vastly improved. The stores all over Moscow are open, and many of them have the appearance of flourishing greatly, tho others close spasmodically from time to time, saying that they have been ruined by their heavy taxes. Under the hotel where I lived in Moscow was a bakery which would do credit to any American city. Some thirty or forty varieties of bread and rolls might be obtained here fresh every morning. Inhabitants of the hotel above developed extreme individuality of choice among raisin breads, whole wheat, French rolls, and various mixtures of rye and white flour.

Clothing also has improved perceptibly. Two years ago I saw a red soldier in the Minsk railway station, barefoot, holding his rifle by a piece of rope. The following winter, peasants in the Moscow market were, in general, rags wound round their feet with string. Now, everybody wears shoes, mostly of Russian make, ranging from high boots to sandals. Large, newly painted stores of the State Textile Trust display cotton goods of all kinds from sheerest voile to velveteen and corduroy.

Prices were high this past summer, tho I myself, never discovered the fabulous prices I have heard others quote, such as $35 for a pair of American made shoes and $150 for an ordinary suit of clothes. I bought in September, a satisfactorily pair of low shoes for $9, and wide blue linen for a dress at sixty cents a meter. A little higher than New York prices, and this in a country where wages were still from $20 to $75 a month and where all food products were exclusively cheap.

The Swinging Pendulum.

The peasant was highly discontented at these prices, which in some regions, displayed such great discrepancy between the cost of grain and the cost of manufactured articles that he had to pay more to buy sacks for his grain than the grain itself was worth. The previous harvest, the first good return after the great famine, had paid the peasant well, for the price of food was relatively high, at the cost of the city workers. Last autumn the pendulum had swung in the other direction.

The pendulum will swing back and forth in this way for several years to come until there is a reserve of capital in Russia, either thru foreign loans or thru the slower process of gradual accumulation within the country itself. There will be periodic "economic crises," each one a little less severe than the one before. For Russia is pulling herself up out of a condition of utter exhaustion such as no one in America can adequately visualize. It is enough to say that no nation in the modern world ever carried on an extended war without borrowing heavily on the future, in order to pay for munitions and uniforms and soldiers. But Russia, in the long years of war that followed the revolution, had no means of securing loans or any sort of credits.

When peace at last came, and with peace, the actual planning of industry, which took the form of the new economic policy, there was in all Russia no reserve either of materials or money, which could take the place of credit.

Drastic Measures Used.

Only by drastic measures can industries accumulate capital, since they cannot borrow from abroad. For the coming year it is quite possible that state industries will again run below cost in order to distribute goods widely and enable the peasant to produce. Thus jerkily, and throwing its reserves of strength to the point of greatest strain, has Russia managed to do a phenomenal account of reconstruction without any capital to start with. It has been a forced process, not one of choice. Two years ago she was already offering terms to foreign capital, in many ways more profitable terms than she is offering now. For now she has accumulated her own reserves, which, altho far below her needs, yet put her in a much better situation than two years ago.

The case of the State Bank illustrates the drastic measures used in the restoring of Russia. The bank started two years ago with a capital of ten million dollars worth of paper; a year later it had twenty millions worth of gold; now it is issuing one hundred and forty million dollars worth of bank notes, backed half by gold and half by commercial paper. For a year, the bank was allowed to pursue a "robber policy" towards the industries. It loaned paper roubles to the fur trusts, and took in return pounds sterling in London, where the furs were sold. It exacted not only interest, but half of the profits on such transactions. At the end of a year the cry of the industries led to a relaxation of this policy; but meantime the State Bank had a gold reserve, which has since given Russia a stable coinage, the first war-injured country in Europe to attain it.

Gold Standard Possible.

The drastic policy of control of exports and imports has also made the gold standard of money possible in Russia. No imports are allowed but articles of primary necessity. Tractors and trucks, for instance, may be imported; but automobiles are classed, not indeed as luxuries, but as articles of secondary necessity. Only for important government purposes may they be imported into Russia. Even necessary goods, such as cotton cloth and shoes, are severely limited, if they can be produced within Russia. This policy is not only for the purpose of protecting the revival of war-ruined industries, but to improve the balance of trade. As a result of this policy, Russia's exports during the past year have exceeded her imports by forty-five million dollars, a result which a year ago seemed incredible in this war-ruined land. It is this excess of exports over imports which gives her a gold reserve of American dollars and English pounds.

The rapid repairs in Russia's cities, noticeable to anyone who has lived there for two years, are achieved by still another method. Two years ago, the car lines of Moscow and Kiev and other cities had practically ceased running; the water works were so ruined that water pressure came only to the second floor in the hotel where I lived; the houses were incredibly dilapidated. Now the Moscow car line has built twenty-five miles of extensions, paid for from earnings; the water pressure is good thruout the city. Houses, streets and side-walks are repaired in every direction; in one summer 100,000 square yards of city paving in Moscow were repaired.

Yet Moscow had no taxes and no possibility of issuing city bonds, the only two methods of finance known to the modern city. She wanted city loans, but the conferences at Genoa and the Hague failed to secure them. She has rebuilt herself by the rents from her stores and market-booths, which, since the revolution, are municipal property. The large apartments where people live do not yet pay profitable rents to the city, but thru various forms of contract their rents provide for their own repairs and improvements. These contracts are drawn in such form that it pays people to repair quickly, since they get the use of the improved property over a term of years without other charge than that of repairing.

State Control of Housing.

The state keeps ultimate legal ownership of all land, renting it out on certain terms of taxes to peasants or maintains ultimate legal title to buildings, tho it may give up these rights over long terms of years or leases. The state keeps control of basic transport and basic resources. And finally, the state keeps rigid control of exports and imports, far more rigid than any tariff America has ever experienced, using this control to build up some necessary industry, or to establish a gold reserve thru favorable balance of trade, or to allow entrance, under pressure, for cheap goods for the peasants.

The general policy of reconstruction remains the same; but the details may swing like a pendulum every six months or year, causing confusion in the interpretation of Russia by the outside world. For Russia has not the reserves of capital necessary to provide for unbroken advance in any one field; nor is she willing to sacrifice permanently her cotton industry, for instance, to the peasant's immediate need of cheap clothes. She uses her reserves at the point where strain seems greatest, and as soon as either the bank or industry or agriculture seems capable of standing extra pressure, the reserves are ruthlessly removed to another weaker point. Thus the whole country struggles forward and will continue to do so, even if she receives no aid from any foreign land. Foreign aid would, however, make the process of reconstruction steady and without the jolting strain which now accompanies it.

What Lenin Thought of Wilson

(At the opening session of the Second Congress of the Communist International at Petrograd, July 17, 1920, Lenin made a report on the international situation. Analyzing the book by Maynard Keynes on the "Economic Consequences of Peace" published a short time before, he took the occasion to speak of Wilson and Wilsonism.)

* * * *

"I DO not believe that a Communist or revolutionary manifesto in general, could compare, by its vigorous language, with those pages of Keynes dealing with Wilson and Wilsonism. Wilson was the idol of the lower middle class and of the pacifists of the Keynes sort, the idol of the big personages of the Second International and even of the Second-and-a-half International, who were overcome with joy over the 'Fourteen Points' and even published very scholarly tomes on the reasons of the Wilsonian policy, which was destined, according to their hopes, to save social peace by reconciling exploiters and exploited thru social reforms.

"Keynes shows Wilson in the situation of a fool, and describes the fading of all his illusions from the moment of first contact with the real policy of capital as conceived by Clemenceau and Lloyd George.

"The laboring masses now see more and more clearly by their daily experience, and the erudite pedants might have drawn the conclusion from the very book of Keynes, that the roots of the Wilson policy spring from an ecclesiastic emptiness and a lower middle class phraseology implying a total lack of understanding of the class struggle."

British Strikes and the Labor Government

By EARL R. BROWDER.

RAMSAY MacDONALD had not even time to warm the Premier's chair when he was put up against the question of questions for the Labor Government: For Labor or for Capital? The railroad strike, carried out by the Amalgamated Society of Locomotivemen and Firemen in spite of the desertion of the National Union of Railwaymen (headed by Thomas, a cabinet member); the dockers' strike, tying up all ports in Britain and threatening the country with starvation; the promised strikes of building tradesmen, textile workers, and miners—all of these put to MacDonald the same question asked by workers the world over: "Are you really a Labor Government or are you a Capitalist Government?"

Capitalists Also Want to Know.

That the capitalists are anxious to know just how far MacDonald takes his socialism seriously was shown, as was also MacDonald's tactics of evasion, by an incident in the House of Commons on Feb. 26th. Sir W. Davidson asked the Prime Minister if he "could give assurance that neither he nor any members of the government were any longer in any way connected with the Socialist International." MacDonald replied that all members of the government had resigned from official positions in the international, and that the Labor Party affiliation "was purely voluntary and could be terminated at any time, should necessity arise."

This reply was evasion, so far as the workers are concerned, but the capitalists understood the real answer behind it, which is plainly: "The international is good camouflage to keep the workers fooled; but don't worry, we'll smash it if it interferes with government as usual." Strike policy of the Labor government is a similar mixture of evasion, assurances to the employers, and covert activity against strikers.

Cabinet Member Calls for Scabbing.

J. H. Thomas, Colonial Secretary in the MacDonald cabinet, is at the same time head of the National Union of Railwaymen. His organization was party to resistance to the wage cuts, in common with the locomotive men and clerks, but deserted the enginemen when the wages board issued a decision in favor of the companies. The N. U. R. is an industrial union and in the past has looked down upon the Amalgamated Society as craft-conscious and conservative. But now the roles were reversed. The conservative enginemen struck, putting up the first national wage battle since the ill-fated Black Friday of 1921, while the "progressive" N. U. R., under the leadership of Thomas, issued a manifesto calling upon its members to stay at work as if nothing was going on. The manifesto said, among other things:

"Some discussion on the word blacklegging has taken place but the member of the N. U. R. who ceases work or refuses to do any job that he would have done if there had been no strike is a blackleg to the signature of his accredited representatives. . . ."

The cabinet member, Thomas, who signed this official scab order, is the same Thomas who broke up the triple alliance of railroad workers, transport workers, and miners, on Black Friday; his 1921 treason inaugurated the period of decline, 1921-23, during which the British unions lost over 2,000,000 members. But his present treachery, according to present indications, is only going to hasten the process of disillusionment within the Labor Party, and the formation of a left wing therein. The strike wave now on shows no signs of being checked by his action.

"Labor" Government Really "Liberal Bourgeois."

The truth is becoming plain to the British workers, that the so-called Labor government is really more cautious and conservative than the liberal bourgeoisie. It is, at the same time, putting over policies that would bring a storm of protest from the workers if Lloyd-George was in charge. In colonial affairs, for example, under the direction of the same "labor leader," Thomas, the government issued a stern note to the revolting Hindu workers that it would not tolerate any action other than the "constitutional" means of petitions, etc. And while this threat is on its way to the 300,000,000 workers of India, Thomas paraded thru a big "British Empire Exposition" in London to survey "his colonies," and boasted of the loyalty of "his subjects."

When the dockers' strike began MacDonald went into the country for a week-end, instructing his secretary to issue a statement denying that he would intervene unless "called upon." The strikers adopted a resolution calling upon him "to use at once emergency powers to take full control of all shipping and docks, and pay the increase asked for by the dockers until the employers and the union has reached a solution to the difficulty." Certainly a modest demand! But MacDonald evidently did not hear the "call"; he was not yet "called upon" by the employers. The dockers, aided by the overwhelming public opinion, including sections of the capitalists but not the "Labor" government, finally won half their demands with a promise of the rest on June 1st. But MacDonald and his government did nothing but issue warnings that the food supply must be insured, making his warnings equally threats against the workers and capitalists.

Division in the Labor Party.

All these are things not reported in the capitalist press, and are the real cause of the ferment going on within the Labor Party that promises the development of a militant left wing with mass support before long. Evidences of the many conflicting elements within the Labor Party are seen by glancing over the pages of the Daily Herald, organ of the Labor Party and Trade Union Congress. While the railroad strike was on this paper carried, indiscriminately, manifestos of the strikers, manifestos of Thomas denouncing the strike, government proclamations, advertisements from the striking unions, and advertisements of the railroad companies. In other words, it was nonpartisan—it took the typical liberal bourgeois attitude. Meanwhile large sections of the labor movement were energetically supporting the strike, even including many minor leaders. The slogan of the Communists: "A craft union that fights is better than an industrial union that funks," gained great popularity. Another evidence of the conflicting views within the Labor Party is seen in the February issue of the Labor Magazine, official organ of the Labor Party, which carries, along side the typical class collaboration bunk of Fabianism, a strong eulogy of Lenin, hailing him as "the greatest leader of the working class of the world."

Liberals Overreach Themselves.

All of these developments were doubtless forseen by the Liberal Party leaders when they put the Labor Party into power. They depend upon the growing division in the Labor Party to check its growth and put the Liberals back into power more securely than ever, with much dirty work done for them without charge. But they were too smart for their own good; they over-reached themselves. Because what they are actually accomplishing is that work of disillusionment which Lenin pointed out as the prerequisite for a revolution in England. In the words of Thalheimer, leader of the German Communist Party, writing on the situation in Britain on February 14th:

"If the astute English bourgeoisie is reckoning rightly that the next political move on the political chessboard will be in its favor, it is overlooking the fact that it is precisely inevitable disappointment of the English workers over the policy of their liberal Labor government that will lead the English working class upon the way of proletarian revolution."

Marxism, Blanquism and Street Action - - -

By J. DURET

EDUARD BERNSTEIN in his famous book, which is given up to a criticism of Marxism tried to show that revolutionary Marxism was not a homogeneous whole. According to him the fundamental doctrine of Karl Marx which should have led to evolutionist and reformist conclusions was deformed and deviated by a strong influence of Blanquism.

This criticism is unfounded.

According to the Blanquist doctrine the Revolution should be the work of small and closed groups, but closely united and disciplined; they profit by a difficult situation in which the capitalist government finds itself, to overturn it by a daring coup and to establish a dictatorship of the revolutionary party.

Marxism is revolutionary in a different way altogether.

The Revolution in itself is not a coup carried out by a small heroic group, it is the inevitable outcome of the development of capitalism, provoked by the action of millions of workers advancing to the assault under the leadership of their class organizations.

Marx Opposed to "Putch."

Marx was an irreconcilable enemy of the "putch." The fight against Bakunin within the First International has proved it sufficiently.

The Third International has remained resolutely within the Marxist path in adopting at its Third Congress a thesis closing the door to all Blanquist deviation. This thesis specifies that to make the Revolution triumph the majority of the working class must be converted to Communist idea.

It would be dangerous to conceive of this slogan in a mechanical way. It will be impossible to determine by the help of statistics whether the majority of the working class has been won over to Communism.

Only in the course of the struggle is it possible to determine, in the final instance, the influence of the party, and the response among the masses to our slogan.

But the importance of the abovementioned thesis lies, above all, in the directions which it gives to the Communist parties for their daily struggle.

For in order to win over the majority of the working class it is necessary to go to the masses, to fight for the everyday struggle, to prevent "putches" and to transform the Party more and more into a true mass party.

But, even tho condemned by the Third International, traces of Blanquism still remain within the international revolutionary movement. It is in France, the country of Blanqui, that these traces make themselves felt most clearly.

Street Action.

One of the most important forms of revolutionary activity is the street demonstration. However, the sense, the form and the purpose of these demonstrations will vary completely according to whether they are inspired by a Blanquist or Marxist spirit.

For a Blanquist, the street demonstration must serve above all, to keep track of the flexibleness and elasticity of the Party, to determine whether the whole mechanism obeys with sufficient promptitude the orders of a central command.

The Blanquists prepare a demonstration in great secrecy, so as to take the enemy always by surprise.

Nobody, except the initiated, know the place, the date, and the purpose of this demonstration.

In showing himself at the right moment to the helpless mass, the Blanquist chief should be able to lead the mass after him, and that is why Blanquist action always takes on the air of a conspiracy.

A demonstration possesses, for Marxists, a totally different character.

If, on the one hand, the Party should use it for getting its apprenticeship of revolutionary fighting, on the other hand, and above all, it should serve to train and educate large unorganized masses by direct participation in the struggle.

That is why the purpose of a demonstration should be systematically and amply explained to the masses.

The masses ought to feel the necessity for the demonstration, and wherever the circumstances permit, the masses should be carefully prepared by meetings, by a campaign of the press and by every means at the disposal of the Party.

Danger of Blanquism.

All those who were present at the Fourth Congress still remember the marvelous analysis made by Trotsky of the causes of the failure of the general strike called after the events of Havre, and which could have been entitled: The necessity for a systematic and serious preparation.

If the street demonstrations form the best weapon and the most effective means of propaganda for a revolutionary party, it is so much the more dangerous to use it wrongly.

What is the effect produced by a demonstration in the organization of which Blanquist influences make themselves felt?

It is nefarious for members of the Party to form an erroneous idea of what an action of the masses should be and to contribute to the creation of a Blanquist and putchist mentality; it is still worse for the unorganized masses who thus begin to believe that the Revolution can be the work of a secret organization outside of them and without their participating actively in the struggle.

This conception increases its passiveness.

The problem of the relations existing between the Party and the unorganized masses is an elementary study for the whole Communist tactic.

Isolation From the Masses.

By its inaction, a party always isolates itself from the masses; curled up on itself and absorbed together by questions of organization, it soon becomes a sect incapable of all serious action.

But, it can also isolate itself by a badly prepared action.

In presenting this problem it is absolutely necessary to take into consideration the relation which exists between the numerical force of the Party and that of the unorganized masses.

The failure of the policy of the German Communist Party in March, 1921, ought to serve us as an example.

In France, where the numerical importance of the Party is feeble, it is ridiculous to think that the masses will be set in motion on a simple order of the Party and without a big campaign of propaganda and agitation having sufficiently prepared the ground beforehand.

Street action, carefully prepared, in which the working class fights to attain an aim which it has learned to know and the full necessity of which it understands, binds the Party and the masses; a Blanquist or badly prepared action isolates the Party.

FARM-LABOR FORCES MEET IN ST. PAUL

Big Demand Is For the May 30th Conference

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. PAUL, Minn., Mar. 9.—Representatives of the Farmer-Labor Party movement from all over the United States are gathering here to formulate definite plans for a national Farmer-Labor Party convention in which the Farmer-Labor movement will be crystallized.

The conference which begins Monday is a continuation of the November 15th conference in this city at which plans were made for a national convention on May 30th. Since that time new events have created a situation which required re-indorsement of the plan to hold the convention on that date.

Expect Good Attendance.

The organizations which are expected to be represented in the conference are the Farmer-Labor Parties of Washington, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, the Progressive Party of Nebraska, The Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party, the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, The Committee of 48 and the old Farmer-Labor Party. The Buffalo Labor Party will also have a representative present, showing the extension of the Farmer-Labor movement to the east.

Some suggestions have been made that the date of the May 30th Convention be changed to a later date. Advance information received from representatives of the organization which will participate in the conference indicate that there is very little support for this proposal. Practically all the state Farmer-Labor Parties stand firmly for the original date before the two old party conventions, because they feel that the actions of the old party conventions have no relation to their attempt to form a National Farmer-Labor Party which will embrace all the existing organizations.

Minnesota Organizations Meet.

On March 12, following the conference of the organizations participating in the May 30 call, the Farmer-Labor Federation of Minnesota will hold its convention. This is an organization made up of representatives of the trade unions and farmer organizations which is expected to be a deciding factor in the work of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party.

Under the Minnesota laws party organization is entirely decided by voters in accordance with the provisions of the law. The Farmer-Labor Federation is an organization within the legal Farmer-Labor Party which is the directive force in it.

Select State Convention Delegates.

With the conferences here next week representing practically every group in the United States which stands for the organization of a Farmer-Labor party on a nation-wide scale the decision made will unquestionably be of historic importance. All things point to a decision which will mean a great convention of farmers and industrial workers on May 30 in which these groups will build a party which will henceforth carry on the struggle for their political interests, fighting against the two old capitalist parties.

County groups of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party met last Saturday to select delegates for the state convention to be held at St. Cloud, Friday, March 14.

Call for Convention.

The call for the state farmer-labor convention, Minnesotat, follows:

"In compliance with requests from many voters of the Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota, and with the approval of a majority of the members of its state central committee, a state convention of the Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota is hereby called to meet at the armory in the city of St. Cloud, on Friday, the fourteenth day of March, 1924, at 10 o'clock in the afternoon, to give attention to the further organization of the party, its policies and program for the future, its plans for the coming campaign and

What Is Chicago Labor's Answer?

No Postponement of May 30th Convention Is Sentiment as Farmer-Labor Delegates Meet

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 9th.—A canvass of the delegations here from the states where Farmer-Labor parties are organized and functioning shows unanimous sentiment for the May 30th conference. From Washington comes Wm. Bouck, national chairman of the Federated Farmer-Labor party and head of the Progressive Farmers organization in his own state, John C. Kennedy of the Washington State Farmer-Labor party, from Montana, Charles Taylor, editor of Producers News, and Budden from Nebraska. J. Beebe and W. H. Green from South Dakota, Tom Ayres and Alice Lorraine Daly and from North Dakota, Dad Walker and H. R. Martinson. New York is represented by Campbell, of the Buffalo Labor Party. Joseph Manley is here for the Federated Farmer-Labor party. These men and women speak for the Farmer-Labor organizations in their respective states and every one of them has come pledged to work and fight against postponement of the May 30th convention. A panorama of the north western agricultural area and the conditions obtaining there is contained in the statements given by these militants in outlining their position on May 30 as against July 4th.

They feel that they cannot agree to further delay and express the wishes of their state organizations. H. R. Martinson, for instance, secretary of the Farmer-Labor Party of North Dakota, president of the Fargo Trades and Labor Council, states that a year ago the railway unions in this territory were for a farmer-labor party. They went to the Non-Partisan League conference believing that it would form such an organization but were disappointed and they are now solidly behind the recently formed North Dakota Farmer-Labor Party.

Both Martinson and Dad Walker agree that only for lack of finance due to the poverty stricken condition of unions and farmers the complete organization of North Dakota would be an easy accomplishment. "We are forced to delay organization work, except what can be done by correspondence until the cows come in fresh and the hens begin to lay," said Martinson.

On record for a farmer-labor party in North Dakota is Senator Frazier, in a letter which Dad Walker has brought to this conference and which reads as follows:

"Judging from the developments that are coming out of the investigations here I do not know but what the time is ripe for such a movement and with good chances for success in the coming election."

Numerous influential farmers now state officials have endorsed the Farmer-Labor Party and promised to organize their counties, according to Martinson and Walker. "We can absolutely count on eighty thousand votes for a farmer-labor program and candidates, which is enough to put us in the position of the second party in the state at least," said Dad Walker.

The same story of lack of finance is told by Tom Ayres, who tells of a meeting of a hundred farmers recently which he addressed and who emptied their pockets for organization work.

The total was less than nine dollars. "Most of the farmers in my state are desperate and have lost hope in everything," said Ayres. "They talk more about buying rifles and ammunition than they do about detailed organization work, but with a national farmer-labor organization launched they will begin to hope and work."

The practical nature of the problem with which the delegates have come to deal is shown by the fact that they are engaged no longer in estimating and weighing sentiment for a national mass, class party, but are talking of what the conference can do to solve the technical matters of finance and organization.

GLENN YOUNG AGAIN BRINGS WAR TO HERRIN

Kluxers Protect Him with Machine Guns

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MARION, Ill., March 9.—Klan and anti-klan organizations narrowly avoided a clash here today when eight auto loads of Knights of the Flaming Circle dispersed without making their threatened attack on S. Glenn Young and Ku Klux Klan dry forces.

Half of the state troops stationed at Herrin were sent here when it was reported that members of the "Circle" were planning to war upon Young and returned to Marion last night.

Several hundred klansmen with four machine guns mounted guard thruout the night, barricading a garage where Young sought refuge when news of the attack reached him. Word that the "Circle" was coming was sent from Carbondale near here.

New Discovery May Revolutionize War and Transportation

NEW YORK, March 9.—Transmission of power without wires—a discovery that may revolutionize transportation and war—was announced by Professor Nikola Tesla, radio scientist, according to a published story here today.

With his discovery Professor Tesla declared it is possible to transmit power for the operation of ships and aircraft great distances with less loss than on relatively short metal circuits.

Tesla is preparing to erect a power station to prove his statement. His discovery, he said, is the result of two years' effort.

The system is explained as a sort of electrical generator which delivers its energy into the earth from which it can be delivered by stations possessing the proper key.

NEW SINCLAIR, DOHENY ROLE TO BE SHOWN

McLean Tries To Shield "Principal" Coolidge

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 9.—That the oil robbers, who looted the Teapot Dome and Naval Reserve No. 1, were responsible for the recent civil war in Mexico, is the latest bombshell to be thrown into the political kettle in Washington.

The senate committee investigating the Department of Justice expects to prove that E. L. Doheny, Harry F. Sinclair and Albert B. Fall were involved in the recent Mexican counter-revolution and had helped to finance the attempt to overthrow the Obregon government because the latter refused to turn over the oil wells of Mexico to the oil barons as Fall, Denby and Coolidge did in Washington.

That Senator Wheeler of Montana, who is conducting the investigation of the Department of Justice will have the aid of former members of the Department of Justice in running down the relations of the D. of J. with the Teapot grafters, was stated today. Their identity has not yet been revealed.

The denial of Senator Curtis that he was the "principal" mentioned in the White House-Palm Beach telegraph correspondence as stated by Ira E. Bennett, editor of the Washington Post, throws the quest back again to the White House and into the office of Calvin Coolidge.

It is whispered here that Bennett on the advice of McLean is endeavoring to shield Coolidge from the exposure that would follow his direct connection with Ed. McLean on the Teapot scandal. Senator Curtis, however, is not willing to be made a sacrifice to the presidential ambitions of the huddled little figure in the White House.

Senator Curtis was one of the Republican chiefs who insisted on having Daugherty thrown overboard to lighten the ballast in the Coolidge political balloon.

Oil as medicine has come in for some uncomplimentary references here, since most of those implicated in the Teapot scandal have taken sick. Palm Beach is their favorite sanitarium.

The Public Lands Committee is still wrestling with the McLean code names. Bennett identified Fall as "Apples", but Bennett claims he is some other kind of fruit. McLean sure kept a rich orchard!

"Get Rid of Harry."

Senator Curtis of Kansas, republican whip of the senate, advised President Coolidge to get rid of Attorney General Daugherty on the grounds of Daugherty's ill health. Ira E. Bennett, editor of the Washington Post, today testified before the senate oil committee.

"Curtis told me that the new president had asked him for some advice about the new duties imposed on him," Bennett said. "Curtis said he advised him to get rid of a certain cabinet officer. It was Attorney General Daugherty. He said he told the president that Daugherty was in

Mayor Dever Thinks All's Well in Strike of Garment Workers in Spite of Arrests and Injunctions

Mayor William E. Dever, of Chicago, doesn't know what is happening in the strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union against the rapacity of Chicago's garment bosses.

He doesn't know that the police, both the city police and those working out of office of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, have been used on the side of the garment bosses and against the garment strikers, trying to better their conditions.

He made these declarations to The DAILY WORKER on Sunday afternoon, saying that he expected to see the members of the Citizens' Committee investigating the brutalities of the strike, at his office on Monday morning, at ten o'clock.

Knows Nothing Wrong.

"So far as I know there has been nothing wrong with the handling of the strike by the city police," he said. "I have no information to the contrary. I have asked for a report."

This in spite of the fact that a sub-committee of four, of the "Committee of Fifteen" of the Chicago Federation of Labor called on Mayor Dever, at his office, on Friday afternoon and protested against the alliance of the city police with the forces of State's Attorney Crowe from the north side.

To all of the questions put to him about the strike, Mayor Dever declared he could make no reply, because he didn't know anything about the strike, he had heard no complaint against the police. This also in spite of the fact that the daily press has been full of stories of arrests of strikers, while the courts have been granting injunctions against the workers, and the forces of private detective agencies have been massed against them.

The Mayor and the Strikers.

Mayor Dever was spending the Sunday afternoon comfortably at his home, 5901 Kenmore avenue, in the fashionable North Shore District when reached on the phone by the DAILY WORKER. He was not averse to talking. But it was difficult to discuss the strike with him, since he so very conveniently didn't know anything worth while about it. He was not concerned, apparently, with a struggle that concerned tens of thousands of needle workers in the city of which he is the chief executive.

It was on this same Sunday afternoon that the strikers were preparing for another week of struggle, in homes without food or fuel, as a new snow storm hit the city. They were getting ready to face the clubs of private detectives, allied with the city and county police forces, on the picket line in the struggles for victory that means a little more of the necessities of life for them and their families.

While Mayor Dever basked in his ignorance two committees, the "Committee of 15" of the Chicago Federation of Labor and the "Citizen's Committee" announced that they were going ahead more strenuously than ever to get all the facts of the strike, not only before the mayor, but also before the workers of the whole city.

Will Tell Mayor.

"If Mayor Dever does not know the facts about the police brutality in the strike he will be informed when the citizen's committee sees him," said Alex Elson, an investigator who has been working with the committee.

"The Citizen's Committee, headed by Walter R. Mee, executive secretary of the Chicago Church Federation, has made a careful investigation and finds a long list of brutal acts and unwarranted arrests which it will

No Hope Held Out For 183 Coal Diggers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 9.—One hundred and eighty-three men are believed to be trapped in the Utah Fuel Mine No. 2 at Castle Gate, Utah, as the result of an explosion that occurred in the mine here.

The reports state that 183 men entered the mine Saturday. No word has yet been received as to whether any of the supposed entombed men have been able to make their way to safety.

One of the rescuers sent down was killed and bursts of deadly gas hamper the work, as black damp fills the mine. All hope for the escape of the men is lost.

Another battalion of the army of labor has fallen. The greed of the capitalists knows no limits and only a catastrophe like this brings to the attention of the workers of the United States the dangerous conditions under which the miners toil to roll up millions for their masters.

Most of the miners were married and have families. The scenes around the mine are indescribable. Frantic women, attempting to burst their way to the pit are held back by guards.

The first explosion occurred between 8:15 and 8:30. It was violent. Two more blasts followed in quick succession.

The rescuers are working frantically.

Soviet Republic Is Recognized by the Greek Government

ATHENS, March 9th.—The Greek government recognized the Soviet government yesterday. The agreement was made and signed in Berlin and accords full diplomatic recognition without any conditions. The signatories to the agreement, were, on on the Soviet side, Counselor Aussgm and M. Canellopoulos, the Greek minister to Germany.

Over Weeks' Protest.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Opposed by Secretary of War Weeks, the bill providing for an elected governor in Porto Rico has been favorably reported by the house committee on insular affairs. Weeks protested that "the time is not yet arrived" for the Porto Ricans to be entrusted with this power.

Where Will the Teapot Scandal Stop?

THE committee investigating the Department of Justice and Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty has given an international turn to the revelations of the Teapot Oil Scandal. Mr. Daugherty is to be called upon to explain the part played by him and his agents in the last Mexican "revolution". It is openly charged that the last military struggles in Mexico were fomented and financed by American oil magnates and that these oil interests were working hand in glove with the United States Government thru the Department of Justice.

Our Teapot Special will lay before the workers and farmers a mass of startling evidence to show how the government has been a willing tool in the hands of the biggest oil interests in Mexico, Colombia, and in other countries.

Everybody is asking: Where will the Teapot Scandal stop? When will it end? From the President down every capitalist politician has gotten his feet wet in oil. The Cabinet is soaked in the politically poisonous liquid. The Republican whip, Senator Curtis of Kansas, has been dubbed the mysterious "principal". Washington observers now expect the disclosures to continue at least until June First when Congress is expected to adjourn.

What do all these events mean to the working and farming classes of our country? Will the Teapot Scandal bring about the organization of a third party? What are the chances for launching a mighty national farmer-labor party on a class basis? What is the outlook for the coming big political struggles?

These are only a few of the questions which our Teapot Special will answer. In the Teapot Special we will present facts which will rock the country from center to circumference. You can't afford to miss it. Order your bundles now. Use the blank on Page Two. Help yourself to this treat. Help your friends. Help your shop mates and your fellow workers. Get behind our campaign to bring the Teapot Special into the homes of the workers and farmers the country over.

Soviet Republic Is Recognized by the Greek Government

ATHENS, March 9th.—The Greek government recognized the Soviet government yesterday. The agreement was made and signed in Berlin and accords full diplomatic recognition without any conditions. The signatories to the agreement, were, on on the Soviet side, Counselor Aussem and M. Canellopoulos, the Greek minister to Germany.

Over Weeks' Protest.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Opposed by Secretary of War Weeks, the bill providing for an elected governor in Porto Rico has been favorably reported by the house committee on insular affairs. Weeks protested that "the time is not yet arrived" for the Porto Ricans to be entrusted with this power.

Where Will the Teapot Scandal Stop?

THE committee investigating the Department of Justice and Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty has given an international turn to the revelations of the Teapot Oil Scandal. Mr. Daugherty is to be called upon to explain the part played by him and his agents in the last Mexican "revolution". It is openly charged that the last military struggle in Mexico were fomented and financed by American oil magnates and that these oil interests were working hand in glove with the United States Government thru the Department of Justice.

Our Teapot Special will lay before the workers and farmers a mass of startling evidence to show how the government has been a willing tool in the hands of the biggest oil interests in Mexico, Colombia, and in other countries.

Everybody is asking: Where will the Teapot Scandal stop? When will it end? From the President down every capitalist politician has gotten his feet wet in oil. The Cabinet is soaked in the politically poisonous liquid. The Republican whip, Senator Curtis of Kansas, has been dubbed the mysterious "principal". Washington observers now expect the disclosures to continue at least until June First when Congress is expected to adjourn.

What do all these events mean to the working and farming classes of our country? Will the Teapot Scandal bring about the organization of a third party? What are the chances for launching a mighty national farmer-labor party on a class basis? What is the outlook for the coming big political struggles?

These are only a few of the questions which our Teapot Special will answer. In the Teapot Special we will present facts which will rock the country from center to circumference. You can't afford to miss it. Order your bundles now. Use the blank on Page Two. Help yourself to this treat. Help your friends. Help your shop mates and your fellow workers. Get behind our campaign to bring the Teapot Special into the homes of the workers and farmers the country over.

CABINET NEAR FALL AS THE FRANC DROPS

Poincare Threats Ignored by Finance Commission

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PARIS, Mar. 9.—The French Foreign Office has issued its long awaited Yellow Book, with documents showing the French negotiations for her security, during and after the peace conference.

The documents show that France envisaged detachment of the Rhineland from Germany and creation of an independent state, under the League of Nations.

Despite the utmost efforts of the government to uphold it, the franc crashed to new lows as the money market opened here Saturday.

At 10.20 a. m., dollars were quoted at 26 francs 80 centimes each and the pound sterling at 115 francs, both new low records for French paper money.

There was wild excitement as buyers and sellers scrambled in the market and quotations fluctuated rapidly.

Ignoring Premier Poincare's demands and threats the finance commission yesterday decided by a vote of 18 to 7 to recommend rejection of several degrees in the government financial project.

This is regarded as a serious blow to the Poincare government. The premier declared Friday he would resign, unless the senate commission approved the decrees before Tuesday.

Premier Poincare summoned the cabinet to meet immediately to decide upon its course of action.

Premier Poincare appeared before the senate finance commission this afternoon and demanded it report out the financial projects exactly as they were voted by the chamber in time for the senate to discuss them on Thursday.

Otherwise, the premier said, the cabinet stands to resign.

Poincare re-affirmed the necessity for the senate's voting the financial projects as quickly as possible to halt the fall of the franc.

Voting of the projects will improve the money market immediately, he said.

The premier previously demanded that the commission report out the financial program by Tuesday, but the senate adjourned until Thursday.

The sub-committee of experts under Owen D. Young of the United States met yesterday and resumed discussion of the question of allied control of German industry and transportation, in connection with the general program to determine German ability to pay reparations.

The main committee continued unofficial discussion of the plan to create a German bank under allied supervision. It was believed final touches to the scheme will be completed Monday or Tuesday.

Ludendorff's Friends So Insulting That Prosecutor Quits

MUNICH, March 9.—The trial of General Ludendorff, Adolf Hitler and eight others for treason, was broken off spectacularly as the state prosecutor declared he would no longer put up with attacks and insults such as those to which he had been subjected by attorneys for the defense.

It was finally agreed to continue the hearing tomorrow, altho the prosecutor had at first declared he would not continue at all.

So many challenges to duels have been hurled at General Lossow, former head of the Bavarian army, as a result of his alleged treatment of General Ludendorff, as told by witnesses, that Lossow is unable to accept them all. The general was charged with having been in sympathy with the beer cellar putsch that failed last November and with deserting the cause.

Crowe Is a Blackbird! Make His Feathers Fly!

ROBERT M. BUCK, editor of The New Majority, official organ of the Chicago Federation of Labor, speaking to a body of striking garment workers last week, declared that Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney for Cook County, whose office is in the Criminal Courts building, should be "on the other side of the partition which separates his office from the County Jail," meaning that Crowe should be behind the bars.

Mr. Buck said: "In 1908 when I was one of a committee investigating election frauds in the 19th ward, we got enough evidence on this blackbird to send him to the penitentiary for a stiff term."

The "Committee of Fifteen" appointed by the president of the Chicago Federation of Labor to investigate Robert E. Crowe's conduct during the strike should lose no time in exposing his record to the workers. That his shady reputation is not one of recent origin is indicated by the statements of Editor Buck.

What are the crimes committed by Robert E. Crowe for which he should have been placed behind the bars? It is up to the "Committee of Fifteen" to throw the spotlight of publicity on the record of this agent of the Chicago Chamber of Commerce and the open shoppers.

The "Committee of Fifteen" should bring to light the facts concerning State's Attorney Crowe's use of armed sluggers against the dress makers in this strike. They should ask why Mayor William E. Dever, alleged friend of Labor, placed Captain John Alcock, notorious Cossack, at the head of the large force assigned to strikebreaking work.

Captain Alcock was retired to the record department on Mayor Dever's assumption of office, but he is now trotted out to lead the strike police.

Since this strike was called it is quite clear that all the officials of Cook County, including the state's attorney's office, the office of the Mayor and that of the Chief of Police were in a united front against the striking dress makers. The workers of Chicago, who are misled into voting for these capitalist lackeys, should know the facts.

It is the duty of the committee to give them the facts without any delay. It is no exaggeration to say that the success or victory of the strike depends to a great degree on the vigor with which Mr. Fitzpatrick's committee will prosecute this investigation. The rank and file of the workers of Chicago are prepared to rally behind the striking dressmakers. They know that defeat for those on strike today will mean a defeat for them tomorrow.

They want a lead. They expect the "Committee of Fifteen" to give them that lead. Every hour counts. The bosses have the capitalist press, the courts, the state's attorney, the mayor and his police on their side. The strikers depend on organized labor for assistance. It is time the labor movement of Chicago should throw itself wholeheartedly into the battle and prove to the bosses that the workers know how to put up a united front as well as they can.

LET THE INVESTIGATION BE QUICK AND THORO! LET US HAVE ACTION!

SECOND WEEK OF GARMENT STRIKE GETS UNDER WAY

Citizens to Talk to Mayor Today

present to the mayor. He cannot escape responsibility.

A Dozen Investigators.

"All last week a dozen representatives of the committee have given their time to a study of the strike facts and the civil liberties' issues involved. They have been on the picket line every day as impartial observors. They have seen girls walking quietly along placed under arrest. They have seen acts of brutality against strikers. The attitude of the police is aggressive and disagreeable to visitors to the parts of the city where the strike is going on.

"The worst conduct by the regular police force has occurred on West Adam street in the vicinity of the Weiss company. Here policemen, officers attached to State's Attorney Crowe's office and numerous thugs of private detective agencies are congregated and several acts of brutality have taken place against the strikers.

The Weiss company zone has already been shown up by the DAILY WORKER. Here the bosses' Crowe has been paying his political obligations to Weiss by concentrating on breaking the strike in his factory.

Second Week of Strike Begins.

The beginning of the second week of the strike of garment workers this morning will see the return of 350 workers to 21 shops which settled with the union Saturday. This makes a total of 54 shops employing more than 900 workers which have settled. The workers who have returned to work contribute 10% of their wages to the strike committee for carrying on the strike.

Injunction Failed Boss.

The truth of the union motto, "Injunctions Won't Sew Clothes," became so evident to the firm of Jack Shure & Co. yesterday that they told the union officials that they would sign up today for the return of their employes to union conditions. Shure & Co. was one of those for which Dudley Taylor had procured an injunction from Judge Denis Sullivan. They told Perlstein that the strike was proving too expensive for them: the last charge was a bill for $5,000 which Taylor sent them for his services in trying to break the strike.

Another firm which settled today was that of Matthew Amsterdam, of 33 S. Market street.

Eighteen of the shops that settled Saturday are members of the North West Side Dress Manufacturers' Association. The other four are independent shops.

Boss Attacks Girl Striker.

Florence Corn, one of the strikers, will appear in South Clark St. police court this morning to ask for a warrant charging assault against Leonard Wolman, who owns a dress shop at 317 So. Market street. Saturday morning Wolman drove up to his shop in an auto with a girl. Florence Corn who was doing picket duty walked up to the girl as she got from the machine and tried to talk to her. Wolman sneaked up on Miss Corn and struck her a vicious blow on the back of the head. She was completely knocked out. When she came to she was being hustled into a patrol wagon with Elianor Sadlowska and Emma Goldberg. She was taken to the S. Clark St. police station where the officer who had arrested her said that she had beaten up Wolman and the girl with him. He admitted that he had not seen Florence beat anyone but that he had seen Wolman beat Florence. The charge against Emma Goldberg and Elianor Sadlowska was that they had been with Florence. Because Elianor had been arrested several times before for picketing she and Florence Corn were charged with disorderly conduct. Emma Goldberg was released.

Keep Tab on Mayor Dever.

The case against both girls will come up in S. Clark St. police court this morning. Sophie Altschuller, who was also arrested Saturday morning, will be arraigned this morning.

Because picketing was only done for a half a day Saturday the strikers have no idea if the police have been told to behave by Mayor Dever, as a result of the visit of a committee of four from the Chicago Federation of Labor.

The union learned yesterday that J. Hiller, of the Graceline Dress Co., who is president of an association of dress manufacturers that was formed since the strike began for the purpose of fighting the union, has been bankrupt several times. Hiller's association retained Dudley Taylor, infamous union baiter, to get an injunction for them from Judge Dennis Sullivan. One of the officials of the union said: "In Hiller the bosses have picked a fine leader. If he can't lead them to victory over the union his experience should make it easy for him to lead them to bankruptcy."

NEW SINCLAIR, DOHENY ROLE IS TO BE EXPOSED

McLean Tries to Shield Cal Coolidge

ill health and that no one would blame him if he changed his attorney general."

President Coolidge replied, according to Bennett, that he did not want Daugherty to resign because he had "several important cases pending."

Who Is "Principal?"

Bennett's testimony was forced from him after Senator Curtis had taken the stand and denied that he was "the principal" mentioned in the telegrams from Bennett to McLean in Palm Beach. Recalled to explain further following Curtis' testimony, Bennett insisted he had two or three conversations with Curtis which the senator had not told about. He at first declined to reveal them on the ground that he did not want to spread scandal but when he was ordered to tell, he said he first consulted Curtis, on instructions from McLean to get advice about how the Washington Post should handle the oil scandal in its columns.

Says Bennett Is Here.

The outstanding mystery—who is the principal mentioned in the telegram exchanged between Edward B. McLean in Palm Beach and his agents in Washington during the early stages of the oil probe—remains as much a mystery as ever following yesterday's hearings of the senate committee.

Senator Curtis, republican whip, testified under oath that much of the testimony given by Ira E. Bennett, editor of McLean's Washington Post, was either false or misleading and Bennett sought to refresh the senator's memory on conversations which the latter said never occurred.

Mystery Deepens.

Out of the maze of conflicting utterances—Curtis seeking to show he couldn't be the "principal" and Bennett endeavoring to demonstrate why Curtis was the "principal", the question of who really is the "principal" remained unproved in the minds of the committee.

Daugherty Refuses Names.

Attorney-General Daugherty refused to give the House the names of the two members of Congress involved in charges presented to a federal grand jury in Chicago.

In a letter to Speaker Gillett, Daugherty said it was incompatible with the public interest to make public the identity of the men involved. Such a move, he said, would tend to hamper the investigation the Department of Justice is making of the charges.

Republican leader Longworth, after Daugherty's letter was read to the House, moved that the whole matter be referred to the judiciary committee.

Get After Daugherty.

Stirred to indignation by the refusal of Attorney-General Daugherty to give it the names of "two congressmen involved in charges presented to a Chicago grand jury," the House ordered its judiciary committee to report at once what should be done to bring the names and thus clear suspicion of all members who are not involved.

Daugherty in a letter to Speaker Gillett in response to a House resolution refused the names of the men, on the ground to make them public would hamper the Department of Justice investigation of the charges.

Haul Him In By Neck.

Reading of the letter caused a storm of protest in the House, in which it was suggested that Daugherty as "creature of Congress" be haled before the House and forced to reveal the names.

His special assistant John W. H. Grim, who presented evidence to the grand jury, also was assailed, on the ground he had spread the names of the two members about Washington by telephone.

Chicago League Celebrates Commune; Engdahl, Minor, Shachtman, to be Speakers

The fifty-third anniversary of the glorious page in proletarian history, the Paris Commune, is to be celebrated in Chciago by the Young Workers League. Altho the bloody hangman of the bourgeoisie, Gallifet, thought that he had obliterated all traces of the Commune by the wholesale murder of the workers, the revolution still is the banner of the workers of the world.

The Chicago meeting, to be held March 16, 7:30 p. m., at the Douglas Park Auditorium, Ogden and Kedzie avenues, will be one of the best yet held in this city. Among the speakers are such well known comrades as Louis Engdahl, editor of The DAILY WORKER, Bob Minor, editor of The Liberator, and Max Schachtman, editor of The Young Worker. With such an array of speakers, no one can afford to miss this meeting, especially since there will be an excellent musical program and the admission will be free, no charge.

Come in masses to this meeting! Young workers and old, fill up the hall and help to commemorate the first workers' revolution, the Paris Commune!

This Bunch of Garment Bosses Have Brains Enough to Admit Defeat

Here is the latest list of the bosses who have had sense enough to know that the union has won a decisive victory in the present strike. They have settled:

Doctoer and Redman, 1324 Milwaukee Ave.; G. & S. Dress Co., 1355 Milwaukee Ave.; Resnikoff and Alberts, 1324 Milwaukee Ave.; Terry Grenn, 1318 Milwaukee Ave.; Phillip & Guss Dress Co., 1259 Milwaukee Ave.; Nathan Alexander, 1379 Milwaukee Ave.; Weinberg & Brandon, 1355 Milwaukee Ave.; Groner & Fingerruth, 1351 Milwaukee Ave.; Sobie & Davis, 1524 Milwaukee Ave.; L. FARMER-LABOR FORCES MEETING IN MINNESOTA

Big Demand for the May 30th Conference

such other matters as it may choose to consider.

"The said convention shall consist of delegates from the several counties of the state, chosen as hereinafter directed. Each county shall be entitled to one delegate at large and in addition thereto, one delegate for every 1,000 votes, or major fraction thereof, cast in 1922 for the farmer-labor candidate for governor, as shown by the accompanying schedule. If there shall be present in the convention at any time from any county a number of delegates less than the number allowed under this call, the delegates who are present from such county may, by majority vote, cast the votes who are absent. Otherwise each delegate shall have one vote and there shall be no proxies."

Many Meetings Planned.

Other meetings planned during the week are the following: :

Women's Non-partisan clubs, state convention, Minnesota Daily Star building, Minneapolis, March 11 and 12.

The Non-Partisan league and the Working People's Non-partisan Political league state conventions; the first in the Star building, the second in Richmond halls, March 13.

In addition the republicans will have a series of conventions this week and the democratic state central committee will meet at Ryan hotel, St. Paul, Tuesday. The main purpose of the latter meeting is to make arrangements for the democratic state convention, and the preliminary arrangements for the presidential campaign activities.

Democracy Means Nothing, German Steel King Says

PARIS, March 9.—"Democracy with us means nothing," says Fritz Thyssen, steel magnate of the Ruhr valley, in an interview granted to the correspondent in Germany of the Journal des Debats. Thyssen therefore argues that France can only obtain favorable terms from Germany if it will tolerate a Right, that is, a reactionary government.

Such a government would, in the opinion of Thyssen, make the workers labor for longer hours. "Our people must work more than ever to liberate themselves," he says. "It was a grave mistake of the republican regime in Germany not to tell the workers that work is an imperative national duty, now more than ever."

It is significant that men like Stinness and Thyssen who, more than any other, urged Cuno on in his reckless policy of passive resistance, and who at the same time flattered the workers into thinking they were doing a patriotic duty by offering resistance, now are the first to give interviews in the French press, denouncing the republican regime and pretending that under their guidance things could have been done much better.

Stinnes Gets Cold Feet in Deal for Yankee Coal Fields

BERLIN, March 9.—The oil deal made between the German capitalist, Hugo Stinnes, and Harry F. Sinclair, when the latter was in Europe last month escaping from the Teapot Dome investigation, has resulted in the withdrawal of Stinnes as a prospective purchaser of American coal fields and his concentration on the oil business in the United States, according to reports here. Stinnes is said to have cancelled his offers for certain Alabama mines. His agreement with Sinclair provides that his boats shall call at New Orleans, and Texas ports and transport oil to Hamburg.

Only Babe When He Left Russia Levine Faces Deportation

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Harry Weinberger, attorney for Morris Levine, who completed a 5-year sentence in Leavenworth prison as one of the Chicago I. W. W. group of political prisoners, has appealed to President Coolidge to stop the deportation of Levine, which has been ordered by Secretary of Labor Davis. Levine was only 8 months old when he arrived in this country, and he now has a wife and 4-months infant—he having been married since leaving prison and while released on bail and conducting a small business in New York City.

Secretary Davis has admitted that the case is one which deserves sympathy, but insists that under the laws Levine is an alien and must be deported to Russia. Levine speaks only English. The board of review at the immigration bureau, of which T. V. Powderly is a member, ruled that Levine has no right to remain in the United States.

War Veterans Now May Have Insurance in Lieu of Bonus

WASHINGTON, March 9.—A cash payment and paid up insurance soldier bonus bill policy was adopted by the House ways and means committee.

By a vote of 13 to 12, the committee approved a bonus plan providing for $50 cash payment and paid up life insurance to veterans of the world war.

The eleven democrats on the committee voted against the proposal. They were joined by Representative Crowther, New York, a republican.

A bitter dispute between republican leaders on the committee arose over the proposal to put thru a special resolution giving a 25 per cent reduction in personal income taxes on 1923.

Thaw Halts Lumber Work in Wisconsin-Minnesota Fields

SUPERIOR, Wis., March 9.—Lumber companies in various parts of Wisconsin and Minnesota report that hauling operations in many places are practically at a standstill. The unusually mild weather recently has melted the snow, breaking the iced roads, therefore crippling activity in this district. Unless more snow comes the cut logs will have to be left until next winter in places where summer hauling is impossible. This will mean a log shortage this summer in the sawmills and unemployment. The early cessation of lumbering in many places has added to the present unemployment problem in Wisconsin, according to state employment bureau reports.

More Jobless in Austria.

VIENNA, March 9.—Unemployment in Austria is rising. Between November, 1923, and January, 1924, the number of workless mounted from 75,800 to 95,000. The government explains this development by the stoppage of building thru snowfalls and cold. In Socialist quarters, the growing unemployment is considered to be an integral part of the industrial crisis, prevalent thruout central Europe.

"BOK HUMBUG" KICKED BEFORE CHICAGO CROWD

Leads to War, Says Villard in Debate

"The League of Nations is based on war and leads to war," declared Oswald Garrison Villard in an attack on the "Great Bok Humbug", which endorses the League, before a large audience which gathered in Studebaker Theatre yesterday noon to hear his debate with James J. Forstall, Chicago attorney and disciple of Woodrow Wilson.

The debate was held under the auspices of the Rationalist University after an introductory talk by Percy Ward, who urged the audience to read the DAILY WORKER.

The admirer of Wilson made a plea for America's early entrance into the League because it "was a step forward", tended to stop war, created a feeling of "good will", thru its conferences and gave America a chance to inject her "ideals" into Europe.

Russia "Peculiar".

Nearly all nations are now in the League, stated its propagandist, except Germany and Russia where "conditions are peculiar", and Turkey, Mexico, America. In two years America, Germany and Turkey will be in he prophesied, saying nothing about Russia.

The Editor of the Nation riddled all these arguments. Accepting the League meant accepting the Treaty of Versailles, "The most infamous document ever devised by man".

The League "legalizes" the institution of war and makes war compulsory, he continued. In all its years of existence it has never taken a courageous stand on any vital issue.

He flayed the League's surrender to Mussolini in the Corfu incident where the Fascist dictator was allowed to get away with 50,000,000 lire from the Greeks after his bombardment of the Island of Corfu.

Tyranny In Saar.

Tyranny in the Saar was cited by the pacifist editor. In that region under the domination of the League there are laws fixing penalties up to five years for speech or writing "casting discredit" on the League and its member nations; "insulting" the League; "criticising" the governing commission or the League in the Saar and adding the further punishment of withdrawal of certain civil rights and pension privileges.

Train Robbing Is All That's Left to Mexican Fascisti

By ELLA G. WOLFE

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, March 9.—The rebels have cleared out of the oil zone, according to the official report of General Gutierrez. He says that Death Curve, Cerro Azul, Zacamixtle and Potrero del Llano are under federal control once more. This victory will release a goodly number of troops to fight the remaining fascisti chieftains. It ends the fascist drive on the oil fields.

The fascisti troops are breaking up into small guerrilla bands to see if they cannot better their luck in plundering. Their main sport is holding up and robbing trains. But the Obregon government is not sleeping on the job. According to orders the National lines have changed their schedules for trains going to Laredo and El Paso. These passenger trains will leave in the mornings now, instead of at night. Night travel will be avoided altogether. It will be slower, but safer.

American Socialist Engineer Heads Big Kuzbas Chemical Plant

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 9.—A report reaching this city states that the large chemical plant, organized by the Kuzbas colony of American workers in Russia started its first productive activities this week. The loading of the coke ovens was the occasion for a celebration, attended by delegates of the government. The capacity of the factory is estimated at 190,000 tons of coke a year, with a corresponding amount of tar, ammonia, benzol and naphtalene as byproducts. The engineer in charge is an American Socialist and chemist, Dr. William Mahler.

ASK AID IN FARMER-LABOR PARTY FIGHT

Big Campaign for a Class Party Planned

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party is asking forty thousand readers of Communist publications in the United States to aid in the creation of a nation-wide Farmer-Labor Party for the presidential election this year.

The Workers Party believes that every reader of its publications is interested in creating a mass political party which will fight the battles of the farmers and workers in the 1924 campaign. It is giving these readers, as well as the members of the party, the opportunity to make their contribution toward reaching this goal by aiding the party in raising the funds for a great campaign thru speakers, literature and organizing work to create a Farmer-Labor Party on a national scale which will have hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of workers behind it.

In presenting the case to the readers appealed to, the Workers Party states:

"This presidential year offers the greatest opportunity to build a class movement of the Farmers and Workers against capitalism which has presented itself in the last quarter of a century in this country.

"The farmers are in revolt against the conditions which have driven millions of them from the land and bankrupted other millions. The industrial workers are still smarting from the experiences of the open shop drive which culminated in the government securing the infamous Daugherty injunction as a blow against them. Unemployment is growing all over the country.

"The exposures of the Teapot Dome affair, showing the highest government officials bribed and corrupted by Big Business in its efforts to loot the nation's natural resources, has deepened the crisis which the capitalist system and the two old parties which represent it face."

Stating the role of the Workers Party in this situation the circular letter continues:

"The Workers Party has for nearly two years carried on a consistent campaign for the formation of a mass Farmer-Labor Party. It is now throwing all its strength into the work of crystallizing this movement THIS YEAR. To enable it to fully take advantage of the existing opportunity it needs a Farmer-Labor Party Campaign Fund of $15,000. This money is needed for speakers, organizers and literature which will help crystallize the Farmer-Labor movement in the May 30th convention in St. Paul, Minn."

Each person receiving the letter is asked to circulate a subscription list and raise at least $5.00 for the campaign fund.

With the funds thus raised the Workers Party will make an aggressive nation-wide drive to build a convention of several thousand delegates at the Twin-City Convention.

Mobs Raid Negroes, Workers Party and California I. W. W.

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 9.—The latest bulletin of the Civil Liberties Union reports the customary quota of Balkanic eruptions by mobs in half a dozen states during the last two weeks. These include four attempts in southern states to capture Negroes held in jail; in each case the attack was thwarted. From Farrell, Pa., comes news of a raid by department of justice agents upon local Workers Party headquarters; the agents took literature, cash and correspondence, arrested eight men and held six of them under $2,000 bail for trial by the Mercer county grand jury. Anti-wobbly squads in California continue their reign of terror against I. W. W. members, with cordial co-operation from the state authorities.

Brotherly Love City Unionists Insist on May 30 Convention

(Special to The Daily Worker)

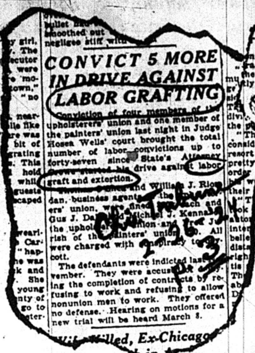
PHILADELPHIA, March 9.—Philadelphia Paper Hangers Local Union No. 587 at their last meeting condemned the Teapot Dome scandal repudiating both the Republican and Democratic Parties as being equally corrupt and agents of the capitalists and decided to participate in the May 30 Convention called at St. Paul for the purpose of organizing a real class Labor Party. The resolution adopted by the Paper Hangers was the same as previously adopted by the Philadelphia Painters. The resolution was published in the DAILY WORKER last Friday, Feb. 29.

The Washington Investigation of the gigantic oil fraud has stirred up quite a number of local labor unions which will undoubtedly follow the lead of these two local unions and will adopt similar resolutions.

Elect "Good Men," He Says.

CHICAGO, March 9.—Charles J. McGowan, chairman Illinois Conference for Progressive Political Action, 4570 Broadway, Chicago, is issuing an appeal to farmer and city worker voters to "help take Illinois out of the reactionary column" by supporting "good measures and good men."

TRIBUNE FALSEHOODS EXPOSED



CONVICT 5 MORE IN DRIVE AGAINST LABOR GRAFTING

Conviction of four members of the upholsterers' union and one member of the painters' union last night in Judge Hosea Wells' court brought the total number of labor convictions up to forty-seven since State's Attorney Crowe started his drive against labor graft and extortion.

[illegible] and William J. Riordan, business agents of the [illegible] ers' union, were fined [illegible] Gus J. Da[illegible] and Michael J. Kenna[illegible] the upholsterers' union and Fred J. [illegible] rish of the painters' union [illegible]. All were charged with conspiracy to boycott.

The defendants were indicted last November. They were accused of [illegible] ing the completion of contracts by refusing to work and refusing to allow nonunion men to work. They offered no defense. Hearing on motions for a new trial will be heard March 8.

BEG YOUR PARDON!

The five members of the upholsterers' and painters' unions, convicted of conspiracy to boycott, were not charged with grafting, as indicated in a heading in THE TRIBUNE Tuesday.

Chi. Trib. 2-28 '24 p. 21

Only fear of a libel suit that would tear away some of the money it loves more than anything else in the world made the Tribune insert this obscure correction.

Day by day it slanders the working class at home and abroad. It lies about the upholsterers, the garment strikers, the building trades, the Herrin miners and the Russian workers government.

The Tribune is only one of several thousand capitalist dailies that poison the minds of the American people. From the Los Angeles and Seattle Times on the Pacific Coast to the New York Herald on the other side of the continent the country is infested by the employers' propaganda sheets.

Let these rags do their "lieing" on the news stands.

JOBS AND MEAT GO HAND IN HAND, FIGURES SHOW

Workers Carnivorous Last Year

Did you eat 16 per cent more meat in 1923 than you did in 1921? If you did you were right in line with the rest of the country which illustrated the fact that steady wages help the farmer to dispose of his products by establishing a record for meat consumption.

The average person in the United States consumed 167 pounds of meat in 1922 and 144 pounds in 1921. This is one clear indication of the rise of the country out of the depression when unemployment and low earnings forced workers to short themselves and their families on food. The per capita consumption of the various kinds of meat is shown by the department of agriculture as follows:

	Lbs. 1921	Lbs. 1922	Lbs 1923
Beef	57.8	61.4	62.5
Veal	7.0	7.3	7.9
Mutton, Lamb .	6.2	5.0	5.2
Pork	72.9	76.0	91.4
Total	143.9	149.7	167.0

Such meat consumption by the people of the United States also accounts for the enormous business done by Armour & Co. during 1923. The recently announced total was $800,000,000. With approximately 4¾ cents out of each $1 out of business going into the profit chest the concern was able to report a net income of $38,583,217 or enough to set aside a large depreciation allowance, to pay heavy interest on bonds and after preferred dividends to show 7.33 per cent on its common stock.

The United States department of agriculture illustrates the magnitude of the meat producing industry required to provide each person with 167 pounds by suggesting that the 81,532,600 hogs slaughtered last year would extend 61,770 miles, or twice around the world at the equator with enough left over to reach from the North Pole to the southern end of South America.

The department dubs the United States the greatest meat eating nation of the world.

Underworld Sluggers Not the Only Bad Eggs in Windy City

Almost dizzy from chasing hard guys in Chicago's double-murder mystery, police today were asked to take the trail of an additional 144,000 bad eggs.

These bad eggs—and the pure food inspectors said no one could realize how bad they were unless one took a whiff of them—were shipped from the Ozarks to Alex Getz, a wholesale grocer here. The inspectors captured the advance guard of 10 cases, and told Getz to hold the rest for further instructions.

Then the inspectors rushed off for gas masks and carbolic acid; the bureau finds carbolic very effective in suppressing restless eggs. But when they returned they found the eggs had come and gone—walked off under their own horsepower, one inspector said with a shiver of poignant recollection.

Police have been asked to help hunt down the eggs; which, if not consumed, will betray themselves, the inspectors said. Getz has been ordered to court for violating the order to hold the eggs.

Suppress Workers' Paper.

LEIPSIC, Germany, March 9.—On the ground that the periodical Marx is merely a continuation of the suppressed daily Saechsische Arbeiterzeitung, the former has also been suppressed by the military dictator of Saxony, General Mueller. The fact that Marx has appeared regularly for the last six years, except that formerly it was a monthly, while more recently it has become so popular as to develop into a semi-weekly, does not seem to have weighed with the general.

A Bed-Time Story for Morons

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

You re-mem-ber, don't you, children, when Pres-i-dent Har-ding died and Calvin Coolidge, the big, strong, si-lent man who made the naugh-ty Bos-ton po-lice-men go back to chasing the bad burg-lars, went in-to the White House and sat down in the pres-i-den-tial chair?

You re-mem-ber, don't you, children, how glad and hap-py al-most every-one was be-cause at last from the old state of New Hamp-shire we had a vice-pres-i-dent who could take up the no-ble work of Pres-i-dent Hard-ing right where he left off?

All the big pa-pers and all the big, brain-y men with lots of mon-ey said that he was the right man in the right place and that now we would have a real A-mer-i-can gov-ern-ment because he was a strong man and had proved it by writ-ing ar-ti-cles about the wic-ked rad-i-cals in the schools who were tell-ing your bro-thers and sis-ters that rich men had sto-len their mon-ey from the poor working-men.

All the big pa-pers and mag-a-sines praised Cal-vin be-cause he did not do a lot of talk-ing and told how smart he must be be-cause he said noth-ing and what won-der-ful things he could say when he wanted to.

He kept all of the cab-i-net of-fi-cers that poor Pres-i-dent Hard-ing had gi-ven jobs to be-cause they had helped him to be pres-i-ident and all the pa-pers said what a kind thing to do and what a good man he must be and how proud his folks must be of him—this big, strong, si-lent man.

Good men like El-bert Gar-y whom God has re-ward-ed with a big steel bus-i-ness and Sun-day school teachers like young Mis-ter Rock-e-feller said that Cal-vin would be the next pres-i-ident and ev-er-y-one was glad be-cause he was such a big, strong si-lent man.

Then all of a sud-den the cab-i-net of-fi-cers whom Cal-vin had kept be-cause he had such a good heart were found out to be bad men who were steal-ing Uncle Sam's oil lands but Cal-vin did not think they could be so wic-ked and he did not do any-thing to them.

Ev-en when all the pa-pers told of what pos-i-tive-ly ter-ri-ble things these bad men had done to our gov-ern-ment Cal-vin did not do an-y talk-ing. He just kept on be-ing strong and si-lent.

Then a lot of mean old sen-a-tors who were jeal-ous of big, strong, si-lent Cal-vin said he had to chase out the wic-ked men who were steal-ing oil from poor old Un-cle Sam but Cal-vin did not pay an-y at-ten-tion to them un-til they be-gan to say that Cal-vin was a-fraid to chase the wic-ked cab-i-net of-fi-cers be-cause they had gi-ven him part of the oil.

This made Cal-vin so mad that he chased out a bad man named Den-by who was sup-posed to look after our na-vy just to show that he was not a-fraid but it was too late be-cause oth-er wic-ked men had been tell-ing the peo-ple that Cal-vin was not a big, strong, si-lent man but ne-ver talked be-cause he had nothing to say.

The jeal-ous old sen-a-tors say that Cal-vin must chase out all of the men that Pres-i-dent Har-ding gave jobs to and that he should have done it a long time ago but Cal-vin won't do it.

So whole lots of peo-ple say now that these bad men must have some-thing on Cal-vin and that when he was on-ly vice-pres-i-dent he was just as wic-ked as an-y of them and no-bod-y talks any more of what a big, strong si-lent pres-i-dent Cal-vin is and the wic-ked Bos-ton po-lice-men are all ver-y an-gry be-cause if they had known that Calvin would get in-to all this trou-ble they would not have gone back to work chas-ing the bad burg-lars un-til they got more mon-ey.

The mor-al of this sto-ry is, children, that no-bod-y can be e-lect-ed pres-i-dent in the U-nit-ed States with-out talking e-ven tho he comes from New Hamp-shire.

RAILROAD UNIONS URGE SCRAPPING OF LABOR BOARD

Public Representatives Made the Trouble

(By The Federated Press)

CLEVELAND, Ohio, March 9.—The demand of the 16 standard railway unions for abolition of the U. S. railroad labor board and a return to direct mediation and voluntary arbitration between railroads and their employes was explained here in a press statement by D. B. Robertson, president, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Robertson helped to draft the Barkley-Howell bill to abolish the labor board, which is now before congress. He declares that the board is an admitted failure, and that peace in the industry will not be brought about until it is abolished.

Board Was Bosses Tool.

The railroad officials were the enthusiastic sponsors of the board at the time of the enactment of the Esch-Cummins law. They then declared that it would solve all railroad labor problems efficiently, thereby putting an end to the possibility of strikes. In other words, they knew that the three public representatives would side with their own in out-voting the labor members of the board, and they felt confident that public opinion would then compel the employes to knuckle down and accept the dictates of the board as law.

The employes, who opposed this sort of "solution" for industrial difficulties, now find that experience has vindicated their stand, and that the railroad officials themselves have learned the folly of attempting to make both sides agree and compel men to work by judicial mandate.

"Under the existing law discord and strife have been promoted," Robertson says. "The only nation-wide strike in American history occurred after two years of embittering effort to settle industrial disputes thru the ill-advised mechanism of the railroad labor board."

Propose Next Tribunal.

The amendment to the transportation act proposed by the labor organizations not only eliminates the board by cancelling section 111 of the act, but provides ample machinery for the prompt and peaceful settlement of difficulties arising betwen the management and the employes by the creation of a national board of adjustment with four sections covering all branches of the railroad industry. This board would consist of an equal number of representatives from the roads and unions, appointed by the president.

If this method of voluntary negotiation fails, the parties can go to a board of mediation and conciliation, with a final appeal to a joint board of voluntary arbitration.

The merits of the new plan, according to Robertson, are: "It places on railroad officials and employes' representatives the obligation to negotiate agreements and abide by voluntary contracts, providing that conferences must be held between employes and men. If this fails, a board of mediation's aid may be invoked or its services tendered. This board is to consist of five disinterested persons appointed by the president.

Decisions Binding.

"If mediation is not successful provision is made for the selection of arbitrators by the board of mediation, with voluntary submittal of the dispute by both parties. The arbitration board's findings are to be binding.

"These provisions," Robertson concludes, "are a distinct advance over the present act, whose awards of the railroad labor board have not been binding upon neither party.'

NEW ENGLAND STATE REPORTS LABOR SURPLUS

Wage Decreases Follow Unemployment

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor.)

Employment in Massachusetts factories continued to decrease, according to the monthly report of the state department of labor. Between December and January the number employed by 814 concerns decreased from 213,081 to 203,969, or by 4.3 per cent. Added to the reductions reported in December and November this means that nearly one-tenth of the workers employed in October are today unemployed.

The general character of the depression is shown by the fact that decreased employment was reported by 28 of the 35 industries and my 12 out of the 15 cities reporting.

The heaviest cuts in the pay roll appeared in the cotton manufacturing industry. Concerns making cotton goods reduced their working forces from 34,539 to 30,798 or by more than 10 per cent. While concerns engaged in dyeing and finishing the goods reduced their forces from 6,741 to 5,118 or by nearly 25 per cent. In fact, the depression in the cotton industry resulted in a decrease of 37 per cent in the number of employes reported by 21 representative concerns in Fall River and a decrease of 11 per cent in the average earnings of workers employed in Lawrence, Mass.

Decreases in employment to the extent of 24 per cent in the automobile industry, 19 per cent in the manufacture of stationery, and 10 per cent in the printing and publishing of newspapers are also worthy of note.

Part-time operation was also general with approximately half of the establishments reporting less than capacity operation. Of the 402 plants reporting their operating schedules below normal 207 reported full time but only part capacity and 195 reported both part time and part capacity. In 8 of the 15 cities covered by the report the number of establishments operating on less than normal schedules exceeded the number operating normally.

In th boot and shoe and the clothing industries only approximately one-third of the establishments were operating full normal schedules in January. In the cotton industry, including dyeing and finishing, only 17 of the 46 plants covered by the report were operating at capacity. While only 38 out of 100 concerns producing foundry and machine shop products, including machine tools, reported capacity operation.

Egyptian Government Takes Unto Itself Ashes That Was Tut

LUXOR, March 9.—Luxor was gay with flags and bunting in the Egyption national colors Thursday and crowded with sightseers, natives, and distinguished visitors here for the official reopening of the tomb of King Tut-Ankh-Amen under government supervision.

Three luxuriously fitted special trains arrived from Cairo bringing members of the government who came to pay their respects at the shrine of one of Egypt's first rulers. Two hundred notables including Viscount and Viscountess Allenby, the Duke and Duchess of Aosta and virtually the entire diplomatic corps, came along.

No longer was Howard Carter, who is forced to content himself with a law suit in the Cairo courts, the perspiring master of ceremonies whose word was law. The special correspondent of the news syndicate to whom Carter and Lord Carnarvon sold the news rights to their discovery, was forced to take his chances along with correspondents representing the press of the world.

Millionaires Will Boycott O'Neil Play with Negro Actor

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 9.—Otto Kahn, Mrs. Willard Straight and Eddie Meade, manager of professional boxers, are all lined up together in opposition to the Provincetown Players' attempt to produce a new play by Eugene O'Neill, "All God's Chillun Got Wings," which deals with the marriage of a white woman and a Negro.

It is reported that Mrs. Straight and Kahn are threatening to withdraw their financial support from the Provincetown Players if they insist on producing the play. Meade objects to the play because one of the characters in it is portrayed as a boxer but not as a gentleman. The players have expressed their determination to produce the play no matter who fails to support their efforts.

Howe Organizes Hoboes.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 9.—"A hobo is only a person out of work. I am here to organize the unorganized, and to advance the slogan, 'fewer jails, more municipal lodging houses,'" said James Eads Howe, millionarie hobo, at a meeting held here to establish a "hobo lodging house," on the plan of those already in operation in New York, Los Angeles, Kansas City and elsewhere. A committee was formed which will go to work immediately on plans for such an establishment.

Eighty Years of It

By SCOTT NEARING
(Federated Press Staff Writer)

The ordinary textbook on political economy tries to prove that interest is the reward for saving. The experience of American life indicates quite clearly that interest is a method by which one man is enabled to live upon the labor of his fellows.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company is offering to the public $14,000,000 in first mortgage gold bonds, bearing interest Oct. 1, 1923, and maturing April 1, 2003.

These bonds at 5 per cent will pay their owners $14,000,000 every 20 years. At the end of the 80 years thru which they run, the owners will have received $70,000,000 in interest and they will then get their $14,000,000 in principal (depending somewhat on the patience of the American people).

In other words, in the course of 80 years they will have received four times their 1923 investment and will still have their principal to invest over again.

Slavery was a system under which the master said to the men: "You work and toil and earn bread and I'll eat it."

Investment bonds are a method whereby the investor says to the workers of the community: "You work and toil and earn bread and I'll eat it."

Some capable economic student ought to explain the difference between the two processes and thus try to prove that there is no slavery in the United States.

Radio Barrage May Banish Troubles of Bankrupt Farmers

The radio broadcasting station of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural foundation, scheduled to open April 1, will be in charge of Edgar L. Bill, director of information of the Illinois Agricultural Association.

The station will be for the benefit of farmers. Markets, statistics and educational matter for farmers will be broadcasted. Entertainment will be broadcasted from a loop branch in the Sherman Hotel.

Farmers from different sections of the country will be asked to give programs from the station telling of co-operative marketing, livestock breeding and feeding.

The chosen director of the station originated the homestead films for rural residents some time ago.

Ford's Friends Expect Muscle Shoals Plan Will Pass the House

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Friends of Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals are confident that legislation accepting the bid will pass the house without change.

A final vote on the McKenzie bill embodying the Ford contract for the power plant will be taken in the house before night, party leaders said.

More than a score of amendments are still pending or are to be offered by the foes of the Ford offer. The adoption of any of these amendments, party leaders said, would kill the legislation. Friends of the measure intend to continue their air tight defense and vote down all alterations that might cause the Detroit manufacturer to turn down the contract.

Australian Flivver Factory Will Be Opened by Henry

(By The Federated Press)

SYDNEY, New South Wales, March 9.—It is stated that Henry Ford has decided to open in Australia a branch factory for the manufacture of motor cars, accessories, and tractors. It is not yet decided whether the factory will be situated at Newcastle, N. S. W., or at Hobart, Tasmania.

* * *

Protests have been issued by the iron trades unions against the action of the Australian federal government in ordering locomotives from Great Britain for the federal railways at a time when there is much unemployment in the iron trades in Australia.

AMALGAMATE BANK HAS GROWN MANY TIMES OV

Loans to Labor, Are Finance Feature

Nineteen-twenty-four brings the Amalgamated Trust & Savings Bank to the end of 17 months of successful operation, a report just issued shows. In the face of marked industrial depression in the clothing industry each department of the institution has grown in volume and many departments have developed a maximum volume of business possible in the present quarters.

The commercial and savings departments, receiving on the first day of business, July 1, 1922, approximately 1,000 accounts with a total of $250,000 now have more than 10,000 depositors with total deposits of $2,137,559.19. These depositors include approximately 250 trade union organizations in or near the city of Chicago and also include all of the locals of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Chicago.

Big Russian Business.

The foreign exchange department has now developed a large and profitable mail and counter business to all European countries. In February, 1923, a contract was negotiated with the Russian government providing for the transfer of money to all parts of Russia payable in American dollars, thru the Russian American Industrial Corporation. A tremendous demand for this service immediately developed and a business of approximately 44,756 orders to a gross total of $1,564,810.99 has been delivered in the eleven months of operation in this department alone. Contracts with correspondents in Poland, Latvia, Germany and other countries were later consummated, permitting transfer to these countries in American dollars.

The real estate loan department has attempted to stimulate home building and home owning by adhering closely to the policy of making as many small loans as possible to Amalgamated and trade union members at lowest rates of commission and interest. This department has, to date, made loans on approved Chicago real estate amounting to a total of three quarters of a million dollars, most of these loans under $5,000. Many of these first mortgages have been sold to individual investors and trade union organizations.

Other departments, such as steamship, insurance, Christmas savings, have met with general success. The steamship department has sold 1,500 or more tickets in the period of operation.

$2,462,297 Resources.

From a more general point of view, the development of the institution gives cause for gratifying hopes as to the future. When the bank opened with a capital of $200,000 and surplus of $100,000 each share of stock sold for $150. The bank has now a surplus and undivided profits amounting to $116,746.40 which raises the book value of the stock to more than $160 per share. Opening with but six employes including officers, the institution now employs 36. Total resources at the close of business, December 1923, were $2,462,297.19.

Free Embalming Fluid May Be Next Sop to Post-War Heroes

WASHINGTON, March 9.—A new soldier bonus bill providing for cash payments and paid up insurance will be presented to the house ways and means committee today.

It will be submitted by Representative Jeffers, Alabama, an ex-service man and chairman of the special committee appointed by the house democrats to formulate a party measure. It has virtually the solid support of the democrats.

While Jeffers has not made known the details of his plan, it is understood to provide for full cash payments with paid up insurance as an option.

Republicans on the committee, including Chairman Green, who have supported the McKenzie bill providing for the four-fold plan, will vigorously oppose the democratic plan.

The Housing Crisis! What About It?

Is there a crisis in the housing conditions in Chicago? The DAILY WORKER has put that question to every available source of information on the subject in the city. In the political and industrial organizations of labor, charity organizations, civic clubs, settlements, real estate and business organizations, departments of the city government—every group possible of approach has contributed its facts and figures to the DAILY WORKER investigation.

The conditions revealed, affecting the large majority of the people of the city—the workers—have been startling. In a series of articles starting tomorrow the DAILY WORKER will tell the significant results of this inquiry. An unprecedented housing shortage will be exposed, with its accompanying exhorbitant rents, and the evil effects of Chicago's negligence in allowing the real estate speculator and unscrupulous contractor to control the housing of its citizens will be taken up.

Tomorrow the DAILY WORKER investigator will tell to what extent he has found a shortage of houses in Chicago.

DAVID BELASCO THREATENS TO SMASH EQUITY

He Signed on Dotted Line Before

By FREDERICK KUH.
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 9.—With an upstage theatrical flourish, David Belasco has thrown down a flat challenge to the Actors' Equity Association, affiliated to the American Federation of Labor. Belasco announces his intention of closing his Broadway theater and shutting down his productions now on tour within a few weeks. He admits frankly that this move is directed against the actor's organization.

Information elicited by The Federated Press in theatrical circles shows that Belasco's threat to close his productions is little more than a stage trick. As a matter of fact, all the Belasco presentations will continue as originally contemplated. Those plays which will be taken off the boards will have completed their anticipated run. No change of plan will be effected.

The Belasco version of The Merchant of Venice will be removed from the theater soon—but no sooner than had been arranged before Belasco declared his purpose of exacting the pound of flesh from his employes. The same applies to The Other Rose, Kiki, and Laugh, Clown, Laugh.

Belasco's personal record suggests that his dramatic utterances should not be taken too seriously. Before he became one of the Thoroly Successful, Belasco himself used to speak boldly about his determination of fighting the theatrical trust. But no sooner had he established himself comfortably than Belasco emerged as one of the ringleaders of that same trust. During the actors' strike in 1919, to the accompaniment of loud publicity, Belasco announced that under no conditions would he accept the terms of the striking players. A few weeks later—without the usual trumpets and cymbals—he accepted those terms and signed on the dotted line.

Union Will Fight.

If the statement of his own intentions may be regarded as sheer stage-effect, Belasco's eagerness to provoke a new managers' war against the actors' organization is beyond doubt. Belasco is convinced that the hour has arrived to break up the Equity. The union is determined to accept Belasco's challenge.

In a formal pronouncement to the press, Belasco has scurried for shelter behind the skirts of art before launching his offensive against the theatrical workers. He asserts that "the theater is not a shop." The principles of organized labor, he says, do not apply to the theater, nor for that matter to any art. He does not elucidate why actors should not unite to assure themselves decent working conditions, living wages and a voice in the mangement of the plays which they produce. With a darkened spotlight and soft tremolo stops, Belasco cries "Art!" and let's it go at that.

Poor Plutes!

"No manager worthy of the name goes into the theater for money," states the smugly aesthetic Belasco. "We all die poor."

If you have tears, prepare to shed a few of 'em for the tattered, hungry profiteers of Broadway. Remember how many of them can only afford one private yacht, that most of them must be content with only two yearly journeys to Palm Beach and that scarcely a single theatrical manager today can maintain more than four upholstered automobiles. No, Belasco, we would have guessed that you could do better than this. With all your experience, you appear to be a tenth understudy when it comes to kidding the actors. To say nothing of the audience.

Could Get Along.

In a retort, issued to the press, Frank Gillmore, secretary Actor's Equity Association, discounted Belasco's flambuoyant threats and indicated that, if need be, the American stage could stagger along quite smoothly without Belasco's managerial activities. Gillmore hints that that theatrical gentleman is strongly inclined to exaggerate his own importance.

It remains to be seen whether Belasco's effort to arouse his fellow-managers, many of whom are now sunning themselves on lavish Florida estates, to a fresh campaign against American actors, proves fruitful.

Jobs Grow Fewer in Czechoslovakia; Figures Misleading

(By The Federated Press)

PRAGUE, Czecho-Slovakia, March 9.—Unemployment in Czecho-Slovakia is rising, according to official government statements. While the formal announcement fixes the number of unemployed at 57,900, this figure is patently misleading. It includes only those who are receiving the government's unemployment allowance—and this "dole" is not paid after the first six workless weeks. If a laborer fails to find a job in six weeks, his name is simply crossed off the government lists and his relief stops. Thus, an unknown, but large numbers of workers are omitted from the official 57,900, to say nothing of the thousands of men and women on part-time.

The Tribune and the Defender

By ROBERT MINOR.

IF you want to find a pickpocket, talk about stolen pocketbooks and watch to see who gets nervous. Last week the Chicago Defender, a Negro newspaper, published a quite cool-headed and scholarly editorial (which we reproduce in this issue) commenting upon the fact that the present "rapid change of political conditions thruout the world is day by day bringing the problem of the darker races to the fore as never before in latter-day history."

This Negro newspaper is not radical—at least no more radical than any paper is obliged to be in championing very mildly the commonplace civil rights of its people. In this instance it commented in a very modest and reserved fashion upon the avalanche of darker races which every thinking man knows is destined to be turned loose upon the imperialists of Europe who are now holding in subjection many times their own number of Negro and other dark races, and mentions the strategic position of Soviet Russia, which stands committed to the liberation of the suppressed colonial peoples.

The result of this Negro editorial is a wild shriek from that "friend of the Negro," the Chicago Tribune. In its leading editorial of Friday's issue, the Tribune scolds the Defender and recites a set of lies that will make any Negro laugh with bitter scorn. The Negro "has full political rights and the use of all the utilities of modern civilization," says the Tribune. The truth is that the Negroes in Chicago are herded off in a segregated district; they are not even permitted to live where they may please in the city. They are generally (in violation of law) excluded from the right to purchase a meal in any restaurant outside of their own crowded "black belt." A Negro found walking in the evening in a white residence district is often stopped by a policeman and forced to account for his presence there (a fact little known).

NEGRO "RIGHTS" MYTH

The Tribune says that the Negroes in Chicago "have all the police protection they want and protection from fires." This is an insult as well as a lie. Not to mention the fact that in the last Chicago riot, caused by the killing of a Negro boy for the offense of trying to swim at a public beach, the Negroes got more protection from their own firearms than they did from the police, let us get down to more ordinary matters. The Negro does not enjoy the right of "full" use of theatres, restaurants and hotels in Chicago, altho a law guaranteeing him such rights is on the statute books for political effect. The Chicago police recently closed a cabaret restaurant for no other apparent reason than that the house permitted Negroes and whites to share its conveniences. In the meantime, white cabaret-restaurants which exclude Negroes are permitted to run even after gunmen-murders are committed on the premises.

The Tribune says smugly that "the whites will not intermarry" with the Negroes, "do not have social relations with them, do not have them to dinner, dances, or theater parties." This shows the utter contempt for the Negro which the great republican daily liar would do well to conceal. It is true that white millionaires do not generally legalize their parentage of Mulatto children, and that theatres discriminate against Negroes, but otherwise, this also is a lie. The fact is that the Chicago police habitually arrest white women seen in the company of Negro men on the south side of Chicago—a very common occurrence.

The Tribune then leaves Chicago and proceeds to tell fantastic lies about the "darkest acts conceivable to imagination, to superstitious frenzy, to lusts and appetites were the commonplaces"—not in Alabama, Georgia, or South Carolina, in the mind of the Tribune—but "in African regions which the whites had never touched" in the charitable effort to make chattel or modern industrial slaves of the Negroes.

BOLSHEVISM

But finally the Tribune gets down to what it is really driving at:

"Bolshevism is the enemy of the American society in whose benefits the Negro partakes. If he thinks he could get more benefits by joining the enemies to overturn that society, he is necessarily making the majority of white Americans his own enemies. Even if his ideas of communism are not intended to come to anything, an expression of them causes the white Americans to look at him with suspicion and resentment. That does the race no good. If these ideas were intended to come to anything they would ruin the race. A social revolution in the United States undertaken a la Russe by Reds and blacks might result in a terror. have no census of the Reds, but The whites are ten to one. We they probably are not one in 10,000."

And here again in its effort to bulldoze the Negro into forswearing all human rights and self-respect which "go by favor and not by law," the Tribune lies again; and it lies in the most contemptible fashion. The "Reds" are not fools. None of them is so crazy as to think a small minority of the population—"10,000 reds and the Negroes"—can overthrow an order of society. The Negroes received their emancipation from chattel slavery, not thru John Brown's handful of "reds," but thru a revolution upheld by the majority of the population of this country. And only in a movement of a similar overwhelming size will the "Reds" and the "Blacks" attain the complete of their emancipation. But then the Tribune owners would lose their property and couldn't lie any more.

There is precisely one party in all the world that stands for undiluted, unqualified and complete liberation of the Negro to the exact status of the white race. There's the rub. It is the Communist Party—in America called the Workers Party. The Negroes of the world are beginning instinctively to turn their eyes, at least with surprise and interest, to the one party that does not "qualify equality." That is what's worrying the white slaves of the Tribune editorial desk. For the Communists tell the Negro frankly that his liberation can come only with the overturning of the institutions which are built upon his enslavement as an inferior class at home and a colonial slave abroad. That would involve the loss of the property of the millionaires who own the Tribune. Therefore, they must lie as best they can to becloud the Negroes' understanding the question.

The Chicago Tribune has long made a specialty of lying to the Negroes and trading their support to a lot of republican politicians who grow wealthy on the Negroes' faith while denying the Negro his rights with hypocritical sneers about not having "social relations with them, nor having them to dinner, dances or theatre parties." But the Tribune will ultimately lie itself out; the Negroes are waking up and searching for their own true interests—and that's what makes the Tribune editor hysterical.

Here is the Defender's editorial which aroused the fear and hate of the Tribune:

'DEFENDER'S' EDITORIAL

Moscow and the Darker Races.

(Chicago Defender.)

The rapid change of political conditions thruout the world is day by day bringing the problem of the darker races to the fore as never before in latter-day history. It is quite significant to note at this time that G. Zinoviev, the great Russian leader and president of the Third International, has just sent rigid instructions to the French Communists setting before them in pointed language that their duty should be to agitate among France's black troops the independence of French Africa.

To the student of European politics it is quite clear that France in order to maintain her present position in Europe must rely to a greater degree than ever on the loyalty and valor of her black soldiers. At the same time it is equally true that Russia will be unable to attain the ideal socialistic state, surrounded by capitalist nations as she is. The peculiar economic position of the darker races the world over gives them the power to determine the course of the growing conflict between capitalist imperialism on one hand and the conscious working class movement on the other.

There is nothing humanitarian in the political policies of Europe in Asia or Africa; her interest in the countries of the darker races is to exploit the natural wealth of those people who are without means of self-defense. We are wont to believe that French rule is ideal as far as her darker subjects are concerned, but more and more it is coming to light that there are many of her darker subjects who have justifiable reasons for complaint, altho as yet somehow the discontented elements are inarticulate. France with her several million more blacks than whites gives the former only as much as she is compelled to.

The capitalist nations cannot close their eyes to the fact that the influences from Moscow will be far reaching among the proscribed and oppressed races of the world. It is the natural sequence of the late war and the disclosure to the working people of their inherent strength. Moscow leaders claim to see, free of all doubts, a war cloud hovering over Europe. And whatever nations may initiate the next war Russia knows that she will be drawn in. Thus it is clearly seen that the soviets are preparing to take advantage of the next European upheaval to propagate world revolution and effect the freedom of the submerged racial groups of the earth.

Bureau of Mines Publishes Figures on U. S. Mine Statistics

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, March 9.—About 2 per cent of coal mine accidents result fatally. Deaths, permanent total disabilities, and permanent partial disabilities constitute less than 5 per cent of all mine accidents, while disabilities of a temporary nature account for 95 per cent of mine accidents. Non-fatal injuries occurring at coal mines in the United States number approximately 200,000 per year and represent a total coal tonnage loss valued at about $39,000,000. These statistics are announced by the department of the interior, thru the bureau of mines.

In bituminous mines, falls of roof and side, the bureau of mines deduces, are responsible for 29 per cent of all temporary injuries and 35 per cent of all time lost by underground workers. Injuries from this cause average 21 days loss of time per man injured.

Mine haulage was found to be responsible for 28 per cent of all temporary injuries and 30 per cent of all time lost. Injuries from this cause average 19 days loss of time per man injured.

Mine explosions and fires were found to be responsible for three-quarters of 1 per cent of all temporary injuries and slightly less than that percentage of all time lost. Injuries from this cause average 12 days loss of time per man injured.

The Pennsylvania state compensation law does not provide for compensation when disability terminates before the tenth day after the accident, so approximately 44 out of every 100 mine accidents in Pennsylvania are not covered by the compensation law. In states having a seven-day waiting period, and therefore not compensating a miner if he is disabled six days or less, the bureau of mines figures show that about 30 out of every 100 accidents remain in the uncompensated class.

Wood Favors Chase Bank with Lots of Philippine Money

(By The Federated Press.)

WASHINGTON, Mar. 9.—General Leonard Wood, governor general of the Philippines, is responsible for the fact that the Philippine government now has $32,000,000 on deposit in American banks—the Chase National Bank has half of that sum—earning only 3 to 3 1-2 per cent, while it is paying 4 1-2 per cent on the bonds which were sold to produce that money. The same banks that hold this idle money got the rake-off on the bond issue, according to Philippines spokesmen in Congress, who hold Wood responsible.

They say that he induced the island legislature to borrow $23,000,000 for establishing a "currency reserve fund," and $5,000,000 more to strengthen the financial position of the government, and that this money with part of the sinking fund for the bond issues, lies in American banks. Leaders in the legislature were induced, in 1922, to ask Congress to raise their debt limit to $72,000,000, preliminary to this venture, when they gained the impression that Wood would then favor the independence of the islands. When the bonds had been sold they discovered Wood to be the implacable enemy of independence. They charge that Philippine bank losses were heavier, in proportion, to American than to native borrowers. The Americans clamor for permanent military occupation.

Congress Calls on D. of J. for Names of Grafting Solons

WASHINGTON, March 9.—A resolution calling on the Department of Justice for the names of two congressmen, whose indictment on charges growing out of improper issuance of liquor permits and granting of paroles is to be asked, was reported to the House by the House Rules Committee late today. The department also asked to state the exact charges against the two members.

IMPEACH COOLIDGE!

Big Business Organs Attack American Legion, Say Bonus Crusade Menaces Capitalist System

"The best laid plans of men and nice aft gang aglee." Thus sang the sweet poet of Scotland, the beloved Bobby Burns. The American Legion, founded immediately after the termination of the world war, with the dollars of the powder barons and big business which fattened on the carnage in Europe, is today dubbed by the same interests as an anti-capitalistic institution that is breeding class hate in its crusade to force the American business men to cough up some of the spoils of the war in the form of a bonus.

The Chicago Journal of Commerce of November 6 carried a news story and editorial in which it excoriated the action of the American Legion in its agitation for a bonus. "Bonus Agitation Becomes Anti-Capitalistic Crusade" was the head over the story and the editorial was entitled "Bonus Leaders Arouse Class War."

No doubt the leaders referred to, will vigorously resent the imputation that their activities in behalf of adjusted compensation can be construed in this manner, and yet, the present bonus crusade of the ex-veterans, whether they like it or not is anti-capitalistic fundamentally.

Founded by Big Biz.

Here we have a very interesting situation. The American Legion which was founded by the big capitalists, and subsidized with their money is now fought by the very elements that founded it. It is not performing the function that it was intended for. Instead of devoting itself exclusively to anti-labor strike-breaking companies, which its leaders undoubtedly want it to do it is compelled in order to hold its members to fight the capitalists, and spit in its parents' face.

The Stars and Stripes, organ of the American ex-soldiers in an editorial prior to the last convention of the American Legion, said that the main cause of the decline in membership of the Legion is that it had no mission. That paper stated frankly that it owes its origin to Big Business which hope to use it to fight radicalism, but when the radical menace somewhat faded and the plutocrats breathed easier they did not bother any longer with the ex-servicemen. Manufacturers paid the dues of their soldier employes in the year following the war, but since then they showed no interest whatever in their fate.

Finally Woke Up.

Naturally the soldiers felt this. They realized that they were tools in the hands of the master class of this country, that their services were appreciated so long as danger threatened the bosses but once that threat was removed the men who did the fighting and took the risks could go and chase themselves.

A great falling away in the ranks of the Legion took place and in order to stop the ebb the Legion leaders were obliged to grab some issue that would hold the ex-soldiers. That of compensation for the time they spent fighting for $30.00 a week while the bosses made millions, was the logical one.

Now it happens that this is the last thing the bosses liked. While it was perfectly proper to hand over billions to the railroad owners for the use of the railroads which do not rightly belong to the railroad magnates in the first place, it was branded an inimical to the best interest of the country to pay the soldiers a trifling sum in compensation for their war service. It would be placing a price on patriotism, barked the poodle dogs of big business. "It would load down the country with a five billion dollar obligation and imperil the country's prosperity." Oh yes. It would compel the big fellows to pay out in taxes some of the loot that they got away with while their dupes were over fighting. It would imperil the country's prosperity! That means less money for the rich who are accustomed to luxury and a little more for the poor wage slaves—heroes for a day—who are used to poverty and can get along very well with what they haven't got.

Bosses Get Busy.

So the business men—the big fellows—have organized an ex-Service Men's Anti-Bonus League which is financed by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and others. Knowlton Durnham is president of the league. In a statement headed "The Bonus and the Bolshevik Fringe," Durnham claims that the bonus agitation is only a mask for an anti-capitalist propaganda which is becoming more menacing every day. Veterans openly declare they are demanding a bonus because they saw rich men filling their coffers during the war.

The Chicago Journal of Commerce flays the veterans mercilessly. Referring to the attacks on Mellon its says:

"Their opposition to the bonus, of course, is not based on their association with Mr. Mellon. If they had never met Mr. Mellon, they would be against the bonus. And that is true because they are business men. Everyone knows that nearly all business men are against the bonus.

"Thus it is clear that the attack on Mr. Mellon's business associates is a part of the general attack on business men for daring to give money to help circulate the business arguments against the bonus bill.

"These leaders are deliberately promoting class warfare in order to silence the sane economic arguments against the bonus bill.

"In thus deliberately arousing class feeling, the pro-bonus leaders have done their best to intimidate the business men of the country. Now, as a new feature of that intimidation, they are trying to make it appear appallingly wicked for business men to spend money to tell other people what a bonus would do to their prosperity.

"It is a matter both of self-protection and of patriotism for business men to do their best to defeat the bonus. They have done their best; they will continue to do their best.

"They will not be intimidated. They will refuse to yield to this deliberately incited bolshevistic clamor."

A Wayward Child.

This is a pretty kettle of fish! The Legion organized by Big Business to crush radicalism has now become a menace to the capitalists in spite of the efforts of its leaders to hold it within bounds. The majority of the members of the Legion are workers and in spite of persistent campaigns to keep their emotions jacked up to the crazy point, they are opening their eyes and Big Business does not like their looks. This does not mean that the Legion is radical. But the ex-soldiers are striking the money gang in a senstive place. It should be remembered that employers while they favor reactionary unions more than radical ones, do not like either. They do not like any kind of an organization that holds a club over their heads and demands that they come across.

Appeal Syndicalism Cases.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., March 9.—The third district court of appeals has denied a new trial to Barney Brooks, S. G. Hewitt, R. C. Russell, Joseph Vargo and Joe Wagner, and confirmed their conviction for criminal syndicalism. Vargo has been in San Quentin, Wagner in Folsom and the other men in the county jail here pending appeal. The case will be taken to the state supreme court.

Union Lets Down Color Bar.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 9.—Hong Lee, a Chinese waiter, has been elected a member of the Waiters' union here. Lee is the first person not a member of the white race to be admitted to membership. The election was unanimous.

BRITISH DOCKERS LEAD OFFENSIVE OF ISLAND LABOR

Ashleigh Tells About Militant Dockers

NOTE.—This is the first of a series of descriptive articles on the great British dock strike by the DAILY WORKER'S own correspondent—Charles Ashleigh. The articles came by mail. Ashleigh, poet and journalist, served a term in Leavenworth penitentiary as a class war prisoner and was afterwards deported to England. The first article follows:

* * * *

By CHARLES ASHLEIGH

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 19 (By mail).—On Saturday, February 16, at noon, the great British dock strike began. This strike is unequalled in the annals of the struggle of the dock workers, as it is the first completely nation-wide conflict in which they have engaged. All previous strikes have been of a sectional nature, confined to one or more ports, but never has there been a strike which affected every port in Britain, from the largest to the smallest. Thus begins a new chapter in solidarity.

I went to-day for a walk in the great dock neighborhood of London. It was like a Sunday or other holiday. Hardly a man was to be seen on the water front. Here and there, perhaps, in the long vista of miles of docks, you would see a little group of half a dozen strikebreakers, endeavoring to cope with the immense accumulation of goods which lie upon the wharves. But most of the docks were completely deserted.

There was one exception to this, however. And that was in the case of the National Amalgamated Stevedores', Lightermen's and Dockers' Union, an organization which possesses members only in London, a small union whose numbers were somewhat swollen after the unofficial strike of last year. The members of this union remained at work—or, rather, were ordered to remain at work, for many of them did not respond to the order. Many of them tore up their cards in their union and came over to the striking union, the Transport and General Workers' Union. On the South side of the river, however, some of the men remained at work. Now, even those are on strike, for, last night, the smaller union ordered its men to come out with the rest. So, now, complete solidarity prevails.

Nearly 150,000 men are on strike. From all parts of the country come reports of the firm attitude of the men. There is general satisfaction among both leaders and rank-and-file militants at the success of the movement.

At the Dock Gate.

The dockers are striking for two shillings a day increase in wages, and for the guaranteed week. This last means the decasualisation of the work. The method at the British docks is that, in the early morning, or before each shift, the dockers stand in their crowds at the dock gates. At the appointed hour, the gates open, and the foremen step out. He then selects, one by one, the men whom he requires, and the rest go disconsolately home. By this method, a docker is never sure of employment. When a ship has been discharged or loaded, he does not know when he will get his next job. This insecurity is one of the worst features of the industry. The workers, besides the increase in pay, also wish to stabilize their employment. They demand that a fund be created, by which each doocker may be guaranteed a fixed minimum weekly wage.

Ten Dollars a Week.

Owing to the iniquitous system, above described, there are about 50,000 dockers in the country who average about three days' work a week, thus earning under two pounds weekly—a miserable wage, which, in the case of a married man with children, is less than he would receive as unemployed pay from the authorities. It is against these degrading conditions that the dockers are now fighting.

In 1921, when the employers started their offensive, the dockers were forced to retreat. The retreat went on until they had lost, thru a series of wage reductions, six shillings a day.

Now, at last, the retreat has stopped. The dockers are desperate. They are striking for the bare necessities of existence—and they are determined to win.

The port employers' organization, in reply to the men's demand, stated that they could not afford to pay the two shillings daily. They offered one shilling, and to submit the other shilling to arbitration. This, the men refused.

But, could the employers afford to pay the two shillings? Let us look into the facts, and see what truth there was in the pitiful wail of the bosses. Let us see whether they are really so poverty-stricken that they cannot afford the two shillings.

What Profits.

If we take the reports of the capitalists themselves, we see that the profits of the ship owners, for one year only, are 38 million pounds. The Cunard Line made a net profit of £12,844,164 during the years from 1913 to 1922. Between 1914 and 1922 the White Star Line made £8,428,000 clear profit. In the year 1922, the Royal Mail Line's profits amounted to £708,808.

And so on, taking company after company, these fabulous profits were piled up, after all expenses had been met for wages, maintenance, expansion, the cost of new ships, etc. And, out of all this tremendous profit, coined from the workers' labor, they cannot afford the two shillings daily which their slaves are demanding. And this increase would only mean about four million pounds per year out of their profits of 38 millions!

Beginning of Offensive.

The great significance of this strike is that it is not an answer to a new attack of the employers upon the standards of the longshoremen. In this case, the workers are not upon the defensive. They have launched an attack upon the masters' profits, in their effort to gain for themselves improved conditions.

And that is the vital importance of this strike. It is the first offensive move of the British workers since the long series of defeats which started with Black Friday. It means that, at long last, the workers of Britain are recovering from their discouragement, and are once more preparing for battle. They are at last on the aggressive. This strike must be won—and that will be the battle cry to other sections of the British proletariat to assume the offensive, to carry the fight on into the enemy's territory.

Chamber of Commerce Has Dick on Guard at State Capitol

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 9.—The Illinois chamber of commerce, which wants to put a state police bill thru the 1925 legislature has an agent at the state capitol here closely watching the primary nomination petitions filed for prospective lawmakers with the secretary of state.

Legislators running for re-election are divided into sheep and goats. The sheep are those who voted for the state constabulary in 1923; the goats those who successmully opposed it.

The chamber's agent reports on senators as follows: "Senators who voted for the bill who are candidates for re-election are: Hicks, Turnbaugh, Lantz, Meents, Bailey, Dunlap, Wood, Swift, N. E. Smith and Gray. Hold-over members who supported the bill are: Boyd, Carlson, Essington, MacMurray, Mason, Roos and Wright.

"The ten who voted against the measure and are candidates for re-election are: Van Lent, Schulze, Dailey, Hanson, Hamilton, Cuthbertson, Forrester, Telford, Sneed and Kessinger."

Zinoviev's Speech to Leningrad Communists

(NOTE.—Today THE DAILY WORKER publishes the first installment of Comrade Zinoviev's speech on the situation within the Russian Communist Party to a conference of party members in the Leningrad district. Zinoviev was one of Lenin's closest associates and is chairman of the Third International.)

* * * *

ZINOVIEV SAYS:

COMRADES! At the present time the Central of the Party is engaged with the discussion of those same questions which are now being dealt with publicly. The Central has formed a comprehensive commission, participated in by some members of the political bureau, for dealing with this question. This commission will begin work within the next few days, and we are firmly convinced that within the next few days the Central will lay before the whole Party a definite and unanimously accepted resolution containing propositions towards the solution of the whole of the burning questions which have been recently debated in the press.

Perhaps, comrades, I really acted somewhat wrongly in giving the title of: "New Tasks of Our Party" to the article which I wrote as subject for discussion. A number of opponents have pointed out that these are merely old questions which have never been answered, and that the title of my article does not, therefore, quite correspond to its contents. To be perfectly accurate, I should have indicated that I was writing on the topical tasks now set our Party—whether they be old or new tasks will be seen later.

NEP—Necessary Chapter.

At the present juncture, however, we are faced with a number of problems requiring solution, authoritative solution on the part of the Party.

For two years the Party has been working under the conditions induced by the New Economic Policy. At the Twelfth Party Congress I emphasized the fact that we must make a distinction between two things. In the first place the New Economic Policy is a historically necessary and very earnest chapter in the history of our struggle for the world revolution. But when we speak of the NEP we have often in mind the capitalist commercial view of it, the speculative moment. I believe, comrades, that we must not forget this difference for a moment.

To what degree this NEP influenced our Party? Are those adversaries right who croaked their prophecies that the NEP was bound to transform our Party into a petty bourgeois Party? Is it true that the fundamental nucleus of our Party organism has degenerated? Is it true that we have ceased to be the Party of the World Revolution, and have become transformed into a Party of democratic petty bourgeoisie?

It seems to me, comrades, that the best answer to these questions is as follows: The German revolution is developing, but the period of its development is proving longer than the estimate made by us, in the month of October, on the basis of our information. The German revolution is postponed for some months, but the fact that our Party took action, and the manner of this action is and remains, in view of the impending events, a point of the utmost importance.

Severe Test Undergone.

The Party, from the top to the bottom, down to the last man, reacted upon the impending events in Germany just as the revolutionary Party of the proletarian should react, and not as would have been expected of a NEP party.

This test is very important. It is the test in the light of history.

The Party reacted in such a manner that, had the expected events taken place in Germany, our Party would have regarded itself as the corner stone of the Communist International, and would have been prepared to fulfill to the utmost the duty of the revolutionary party of the proletariat.

The test thus undergone by the Party must serve to prove to us that it is essenitally sound, quite apart from the way in which events actually developed.

Had there been any real decay in the Party, had there been any degeneration of the fundamental nucleus of the Party organism, then our Party would have reacted very differently with regard to the maturing events in Germany; it would have hidden its head in the sand. But it did nothing of the sort. On the contrary, if there is any reproach which can be made to us, it is what we over-estimated to a certain extent the speed at which events were developing, and that we expected in October, in November, and in December, 1923, that which will perhaps happen in Germany in May, 1924—but no one can reproach us that we have succumbed to the NEP, and that we made any attempt to avoid following up the world revolution.

Our Weak Points.

This does not by any means signify that we possess no weaknesses whatever within the Party. We have many weak points. In connection with the NEP we can observe, in my opinion, two departures from the correct line, two false views of the nature of the Party itself.

On the one hand, those comrades who are up to the eyes in administrative economic work look upon the Party as an institution provided for the purpose of aiding the successful execution of administrative or economic work. The others go to the opposite extreme and look upon the Party as a sort of free debating society, a kind of "parliament of opinions."

Neither extreme is right. We must reject both, and must look upon our Party, as it is right for Bolsheviki to do, as a political organism, connected with the masses by thousands of threads, and setting itself the gigantic task of leading the whole state.

What is the present qualitative standard of our Party? We have statistical data up till Sept. 1, 1923. Speaking generally, our statistics are somewhat lame in this direction. As you know, the latest statistics were compiled with special care and accuracy, with the aid of the Central. I believe that they correspond very fairly with the truth.

The figures are somewhat surprising. We had all assumed that we have about half a million, or even 600,000 Party members. It appears, however, that up to Sept. 1 we had in the whole federation only 351,000 communists (including the communists in the Red Army), and 92,000 candidates for Party membership. To this the C. Y. must further be added. I am, however, dealing with the members of the Party in the strict sense of the word.

We have 54,000 Party members actually working in the shops and factories (not including candidates); this is but few.

Youth Views

By HARRY GANNES

Young Investigator Finds Job Hunting Hard Work.

ONE of the big capitalist dailies has employed a young fellow to look for jobs. His stories make interesting reading to a rebel. They show how heart-breaking it is for the young fellow or girl, without any outside help, like his family or friends, to exist. Jobs are almost impossible to get, and where the young worker is offered an opportunity to work, he must do the thing at lower wages than the older workers.

The Western Electric Company in Chicago and other cities is a pretty good guage of unemployment for the youth. The Hawthorne plant, for instance, employes 40,000 workers, 27,000 men and 13,000 women—nearly all of the women are under 30 and most of them are under 21, while half of the males are very young, a great deal of them only sixteen.

Five thousand men and boys make application for jobs at the Chicago Western Electric Company every week. Out of this veritable army of job seekers, only 800 are employed, and many of these are kicked out in a very short time. The wages are so low that a good deal of the growing crime at the present time can be charged to the inability of many of the young workers to live decently on the money they get.

At the same time, we find that the Western Electric Company spends hundred thousands of dollars in propaganda to keep the workers contented in mind if they are not exactly so in their stomachs.

There are entire industries that are run on youth labor in the United States. Every day so-called "light factory" work becomes more common. The youth are used almost exclusively in the light factory institutions, which also pay "light" wages.

Unemployment is affecting all of the factories that hire the young men and women. Others which formerly employed older workers for the light factory work, let them go and take younger people in their places at less wages. This is a regular procedure for the bosses when hard times and unemployment comes.

The problem of remedying the economic conditions of the young workers is extremely hard because there is no organization whatever industrially among them. The Young Workers League is working hard wherever it can to urge the unions to organize the youth, but results are slow and hardly perceivable. Meanwhile the organization of shop nuclei (units of the Young Workers League on the job and in the factories) is being pushed in the effort to get the youth themselves to fight against the miserable conditions imposed on them.

SPAIN'S DICTATOR IS NOT AFRAID OF WOMEN'S VOTES

Dissolves Barcelona Regional Commune

(By The Federated Press)

MADRID, March 9.—Primo de Rivera, the Spanish dictator, has granted votes for women. Thus he imitates his great model, the Dictator Mussolini, who granted the ballot to women in Italy. But while Mussolini gave that cherished privilege only to Fascist women thru decrees limiting the vote to property holders, wives of war veterans, wives of Fascists, etc., Primo has gone him one better and given it to all women.

It is significant that woman suffrage, once ultra-radical doctrine, in this day of Fascist versus proletarian dictatorships, should prove a fitting instrument in the hands of reaction. It is a fearful commentary on the conservatism of the Spanish women, that Primo de Rivera should have granted the ballot to all of them.

A Castillian Patriot.

De Rivera is a Castillian patriot and in the dominance of Castille over the other regions of Spain, he thinks should be included an edict that everyone should talk Spanish with a Castillian accent. He has forbidden the teaching of the Catalonian dialect, the Basque dialect and other regional variations of the general language family of the Spanish peninsula.

This decree has strengthened the already powerful movement toward regional autonomy and even independence. He permitted the Basques to sing religious songs in their own language during the fiestas of Santa Agueda, but otherwise none of the regional languages must be sung in public or taught in schools.

Barcelona Boycott.

To greater enrage Catalonia, the industrial center of Spain, he has dissolved its regional commune or government and replaced it with hand-picked members, all of them of the National Monarchist union. The people of Barcelona have responded by boycotting the members, who, being prominent patriots are also big business men. One of the boycotts is against the biggest department store in Barcelona.

Hard-won parliamentary institutions, such as exemption of members of parliament from arrest until they have been impeached or expelled, a privilege slowly conquered thru the middle ages in long fights with emperors and kings, has been abolished by a decree of the directorate. It has decided that it can try its parliamentary critics for treason or any other offense without asking permission from parliament.

Wagner's Misery Hit Responsive Chord in Hearts of Hearers

ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Selections from Richard Wagner's love tragedy, "Tristan and Isolde," occupied half the program of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert at Orchestra Hall on March 7 and 8. The music was an outgrowth of Wagner's own tragic experience, and more than any of his operas gets close to the souls and frustrated hopes of his hearers. Three excerpts were played, taking in the best music of the drama. The prelude is a long, sombre study in despair, the love duet and death of Isolde reach the highest degree of artistic expression to which love inspiration can carry genius.

Another Brahms work, the overture "Academic Festival," opened the concert. This consists of some student songs of Germany, particularly of Breslau university, woven together in a singularly brilliant orchestral pattern.

A somewhat similar work is Rubin Goldmark's "Negro Rhapsody," played also on this occasion. Goldmark has taken a number of Negro melodies and made a splendid, in the literal sense, orchestra piece out of them. The finest thing about the work is that, in treating the themes symphonically, Goldmark has not lost their Negro character.

Next week, Wanda Landowska, a Polish pianist, will be the soloist. Miss Landowska is an enthusiast over old music, and has had constructed a harpischord, the instrument that was in use before the modern piano was invented. On this she will play a concerto by Handel and three short solos. She will also play a piano concert by Mozart. The orchestra will play a suite by Gretry, the Brahms third symphony, and two nocturnes of Debussy.

SOVIET BANK TO AID FARMERS CO-OPERATIVES

'Chervonetz' Notes Are Stabilizing Currency

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 9.—A Central Agricultural Bank of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was authorized by the Soviet Congress on the recommendation of Acting President Tsurupa of the council of people's commissars.

The government bank is to have a paid-up capital of 40,000,000 "chervonetz" rubles and is organized to provide the peasants with cheap credit and to develop the agricultural co-operative movement.

Stabilizing Currency.

Mr. Vladimiroff, making a report for the People's Commissariat of Finance, stated that the monetary reform, consisting in the introduction, along with "chervonetz," of stable treasury notes, would be completed by the end of the month. The speaker stressed the importance of this reform to the peasants, who must have a stable currency.

With references to the state budget of the Soviet Union, Mr. Vladimiroff pointed out that it was for the first time that, in the working budget year, not only was a certain equilibrium being established between revenue and expenditure, but there was actually an accumulation and growth of national capital of the Union.

Thus the State budget for 1922-23 had been balanced at 1,400,000,000 gold rubles, while the estimates for the year 1923-24 were computed at 1,750,000,000 gold rubles.

In the course of the ensuing debate, Mr. Larin insisted on the increase of the income tax. Mr. Bogdanoff stressed the necessity of a larger unification of the taxing system in the urban and country districts.

In a resolution, unanimously adopted, the Congress approved the reported financial reform.

Our Own Home

The news that the DAILY WORKER will soon occupy its own home should prove most welcome to every man and woman who is compelled to labor for an employer in order to earn a livelihood. This arrangement will enable the only fighting working class daily in America to render better service and to strike more telling blows against the exploiters.

The value of a Daily to the workers is inestimable. We need but notice the tremendous propaganda launched for the Mellon plan to save the tax bills of the millionaires. It was thru their control of the press that the bankers and manufacturers were able to organize the greatest propaganda campaign that has perhaps been seen in the world since America's entry into the war. The importance of being able to state the case of the workers and farmers cannot be exaggerated.

The situation in England at this moment affords the most striking proof of the necessity of the workers of every country building up a powerful press. Here we have the British Labor Party at the helm of the government. This party despite all the advantages that its present parliamentary position entails is now seriously handicapped in its functions because it does not have its own press and is at the mercy of practically the entire press of the country which is capitalist and reactionary. The British Labor Party has only one daily, The Herald, and this paper is weak because many of the men who are now the leading figures in the cabinet did not find it necessary to render it proper and sufficient support.

This change, welcome as it is, should encourage all the workers and farmers to take a greater interest not only in making the DAILY WORKER the most powerful influential newspaper in the country, but should also stimulate the activities of the working masses towards building up a chain of labor and farm newspapers that will speak for the workers fearlessly and unfalteringly.

Chicago's Homes

The exposure made by the DAILY WORKER of the wretched housing conditions of New York pointed out very clearly that this acute suffering was not local and that the housing problem was a national question.

The conditions to which the mass of workers in New York are subject are essentially repeated in every large industrial center of the country. In Chicago, for instance, the unsanitary conditions, the poorly constructed homes, the miserable congestion are almost the exact replica of the New York situation.

The report of Mr. Thomas Allenson of the Department of Public Welfare, arrived at in co-operation with the Illinois Department of Public Health, makes one shudder at such a state of affairs being tolerated in a city which has often been called the "Queen of the West." Hundreds of dilapidated, germ-laden dwellings are now overcrowded with men and women of the working class. "To have lived one's childhood here is sufficient evidence that one has seen the rough side of life." This is typical of the painfully graphic way in which the report views the conditions of the so-called homes which the working men of Chicago are compelled to inhabit because of their low wages and because of the exorbitant profits being piled up by the landlords and capitalists.

The housing conditions in Chicago are as unbearable as they are in New York. Many schemes have been put forward by all sorts of nondescript capitalist and semi-capitalist institutions to relieve the distress. All of these have failed. All of these schemes have only tended to perpetuate the acute gravity of the housing crisis. It is time that the workers themselves, those who have been doing the suffering, those who have been subject to these abject conditions, should get together into a national united tenants association of their own and force an end to this misery and wretchedness.

"Gutter Gatherings"

At last the Chief Executive of the nation, the symbol of honesty and integrity in American government today, has been drawn into the oil mess!

What times are these when so skilled a ward-heeler as Coolidge, so consummate a capitalist politician as the President, loses control of the rudder of the ship of state to such an extent as to allow himself to be caught manipulating and maneuvering with the Teapot thieves?

It is rather difficult for us to understand why "Silent Cal" should have been so talkative in his dealings with the high lights of the oil drama. It is even more difficult to understand how Coolidge could permit such leaks, as his message to McLean, in his sacred affairs of state. Really, the president ought to do some housecleaning and he ought to begin in his own White House first by getting himself servants who would never permit such information to get to the masses.

Senator Lodge, the most cultured ignoramus in the Senate, and the leader of the republican reactionaries, has called the charges against Coolidge "gutter gatherings." We agree with the aged self-styled historian from Massachusetts. Coolidge has at last been put in his proper place. The gatherings in the gutters of Washington have been piling on so thick of late that they have caused the news sewers of the country to burst with filth. And the president is by no means the least conspicuous of these "gutter gatherings."

The exposure of Coolidge and his deals in the oil scandals should immediately raise a storm of protest to drive him out of his office. Coolidge should be impeached. There is more than enough grounds on which Congress can impeach him. The president is besmeared with oil from head to foot.

How can the workers and farmers be expected to have the slightest trust in Coolidge and his appointed oil prosecutors when he sends private messages, secret telegrams, to McLean the day after the latter confessed publicly that he lied in order to protect Fall? How can Coolidge be expected to use the unlimited powers of his office to punish the criminals when he publicly admits that one of the arch-criminals, Mr. McLean, has "always been most considerate" to him? How can we expect Coolidge to act fairly and squarely in the prosecution when he himself must rely on McLean to get in touch with his own private secretary, Mr. Slemp? How can we be expected to put our trust in a president who has been so deeply involved in the oil scandal that he is compelled to issue conflicting apologies and explanations for his telegraphic connections with the nest of oil thieves at Palm Beach?

The finger of guilt points straight to the White House. Coolidge ought to show some of his former practical, hard-headed political sense. He ought to make a sacrifice, as Borah said, and quit his office of which he is most unworthy. But the workers and farmers must not hesitate a moment. The working masses the country over must unite their forces to kick Coolidge out of the White House, to force Congress to impeach him without any further delay.

The Dictatorship of Dicks

The labor spy is a definitely American institution. But during and since the war he has become a menace not only as an institution, but as an institution protected, encouraged and allied with the government itself.

The labor spy has no especial reason for existence in organizations which are not proletarian, and for the same reason those unions in which the rank and file is bound hand and foot by reactionary officials the demand of the employers for industrial espionage never reaches the point it does in fighting militant organizations. It is not surprising, then, that the I. W. W., for instance, which has been the bogey-man of the bosses in such industries as copper production, should be the target of the bosses working thru such nefarious agencies as the Burns' Detectives. Such opponents are the inevitable compliment of a fighting organization.

In the investigation of the conduct of the Department of Justice under the administration of Daugherty and Burns, which is just now opening, the greatest threat to capitalist government is not the exposure of corruption and graft in the heart of the federal government, but the exposure that the government, which is theoretically supposed to stand above classes and to take no sides in the struggle between capital and labor, is secretly in closest co-operation with great corporations in blacklisting, deporting and persecuting discontented workers and labor organizers. Senator Wheeler has in his hands the power to tear aside the traditional mask of federal government "Justice" and display to the simplest worker the cynical smirk of a harlot government sold and delivered to capital.

In the exposures which are to come the subservience of the federal government to the Burns' Agency in its union wrecking will be proved beyond all doubt, despite the lie Burns told the Walsh Committee as to his severance from his agency since becoming a government officer. It is a duty of all workers' organizations to expose this plot widely.

Daugherty's Defender

Ex-Senator Lame-Duck George E. Chamberlain, of Oregon, is the main battery in the array of legal counsel marshalled by Attorney General Daugherty to defend him before the Senate Committee.

Obviously Mr. Chamberlain is well qualified for the job. He was one of Mr. Harding's best friends in the democratic party. On the eve of the 1920 landslide for the republican party Mr. Chamberlain remarked: "There is just one democrat, I hope, will be elected tomorrow. That's George Chamberlain." After the Oregonian was defeated by Mr. Stanfield, who vies with Senator Warren, of Wyoming, for being the greatest shepherd since Father Abraham, the greatest sheep owner in the world, Mr. Harding was quick to help him. Mr. Chamberlain was appointed to the shipping board. In the last year Mr. Chamberlain has practiced law in Washington. The law practice of ex-senators and former congressmen in Washington is limited to lobbying for big business interests. Mr. Daugherty undoubtedly chose Mr. Chamberlain because of his three-fold qualifications of having of having good connections with the democratic, republican, and Wall Street outfits. Who could be a better defender of the crooked conduct of Daugherty than Mr. Chamberlain?

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a peasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. The Communist company is summoned but, perhaps, too late. Robeiko is dragged out of his house and shot, Klimin's sweetheart is butchered and Klimin and Stalmakhov are overpowered and hurled into a dungeon. The counter-revolutionaries are in possession of the town, with the Red Army away.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

WITH shouts and curses they dragged out Klimin and Stalmakhov. Stalmakhov looked with cold hatred deep into Repin's grey, angry eyes, and was going to say something. But a shot rang out and, irrationally jerking his hands and feet, his body fell on the snow.

There was a second shot and a second body writhed in the snow beside the dying first. The yard emptied. Repin galloped off after the carts and the victoria. For fifteen minutes the two dead bodies lay motionless in the middle of the yard, while the shooting came nearer and nearer and then began to go off already in the opposite direction, while the bullets flew more and more rarely over the empty yard.

The sun was already hanging above red clouds and the sky was turning blue. . . . Gornuikh ran into the yard with a revolver in his hands. At his heels were three men in black short coats with red stars on their black fur hats, gripping their rifles firmly in their strong, dark brown hands. They were the Communist railwaymen. They rushed to examine the barn. Gornuikh ran at once to the dark mass on the snow, and saw the familiar face, the dead eyes, the calm, half-opened lips, from which it seemed that at any moment would escape a white-toothed smile that would make the face young once more, in spite of its grey skin and network of wrinkles. . . .

And, lifting Klimin's head on his knee, Gornuikh bent over it, and looked endlessly into this motionless face. And suddenly he felt that a sob was rising from the depths of his being, from depths of which he had not known himself, higher, and higher. . . . Gornuikh wept silently with a dry sobbing that was so painful that it was as if not one but several hearts, more hurt, more disturbed than they could bear, were beating in his breast.

CHAPTER XII.

THE black, melting earth and the blue drifts of the last snow mingled together in a whimsical pattern stretching far, far away, and the changes in its various, ever new design were still monotonous.

Karaulov looked sharply about him, listened keenly in the darkness, and held the reins in a special manner, making his horse step carefully and silently.

Before him, in a wide two-verst semicircle, embracing the empty ravines, ditches and low hills, towards the town, moved three lines of Red Army soldiers, one behind the other. The order had been to make no noise. But the moving of the thousands of feet on the earth seemed a loud noise to Karaulov, and the sharp-eared beasts of the field, hares and field mice, heard it for many versts, far, far away . . . It was like the monotonous gushing of a flood in the steppes, and they noiselessly fled from it. But a few hours earlier, Karaulov had been hurrying his brave little horse over this very place, galloping from the town towards the monastery where was the battalion of the Cheka.

He had gone as if merely to make sure how the fuel-getting was going on, and to see if his telephonogram about precautionary measures had been obeyed. But some cloudy instinct had taken him from the town and told him to be as near as he could to the battalion. And that same cloudy instinct had made him stop and listen to the town he had left behind.

But under the fading evening sky everything was quiet, and as before the scent-laden, sweet, cool stillness of an evening in early Spring ruled over the earth. And then, when it was altogether dark, and the ruby trace of the sun had dissolved in the dark blue sky, and the first timorous stars were glimmering out, the keen ear of Karaulov caught, suddenly, from the direction of the town, one after another, three far-away shots.

Karaulov checked his horse. Silence. A crow called, flying across. And then again he heard a far distant shooting . . . a disorderly bundle of sounds.

He spurred his horse and with all his strength struck it with his nagaika, and it dashed forward at a swift trot, avoiding the deep pits invisible in the darkness.

Arriving at the monastery, he enquired if his telephonogram had been obeyed, assured himself that everything had been done, shortly explained the character of the operation to the battalion commander, Seletsky, and, fifteen minutes later, before the quiet ranks of the Red Army men, told them briefly what was on foot. And then, as they rode out into the country, he explained to the military Commissar of the battalion, Danilov, elegant, good-looking, in leather coat and broad red riding breeches, the political meaning of the revolt, and Danilov in reply nodded his handsome head that he carried lightly on his strong neck. Danilov had been a miner, unable to read or write, and even now he read with difficulty, and indeed had not been able to even read "The A B C of Communism" all thru, but the Red Army men loved him for his simplicity, which they divined under all his elegantly got up equipment, while Karaulov thought well of him for his boldness, for his honesty, for his directness and also because sometimes they had a drink together.

Seletsky, meanwhile, was riding from end to end of the battalion, assuring himself over and over again that everything had been done as it should have been done. . . . It seemed that the line was properly deployed, machine guns in the center, and patrols sent out on the right flank, together with cavalry scouts. . . .

Everything had been done, and presently Seletsky would meet the enemy once again, and once again would be solving in human lives that familiar, but every time new and interesting military problem. Once again to meet the enemy . . . the bandits. . . .

Were not religion, nationality, class, merely colored, modifying denotations, concrete denotations thru which were expressed the abstractions of the great game of war? Of the beloved game of death which, for Seletsky, was like an intoxicating narcotic. . . . And he remembered how seven years before Ensign Seletsky . . . then against the Germans . . . led his company to the attack, and was full of enthusiasm and dreamed of a heroic death for Russia. And then, in the opaque gloom of the trenches, what with illness, contusions and wounds, this enthusiasm had withered. But in its place there had grown up a new, painful interest in this deadly game at which for so many years on end the whole of mankind had been playing, in this eldest of all games, in this most beloved of all children's games. . . . And now it was all the same to Battalion Commander Seletsky. . . . Germans, Poles, Czecho-Slovaks, Cossacks, Whites, bandits . . . all the same. . . . Before him was an enemy who also would be throwing out his lines, sending out scouting antennae, pouring out rifle fire, and flinging forward the flame of bayonet attacks. And the suffering, wounds and deaths were merely algebraic signs to express the quantitative changes in the opposing sides.

Canada Is Financial Colony of U. S.

By SCOTT NEARING.

(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

POTENTIALLY Canada means more to the United States than to Breat Britain. The Canadian wheat fields will become indispensable to the American people. Already the great forest resources of Canada are being drawn upon for paper stock and lumber. The coal of Nova Scotia, the iron of Newfoundland, and the copper of the lake regions will be requisitioned for American manufacturing industry.

By 1910, the volume of investable surplus cash in the United States had increased to such a point that Cuba, Mexico, Central America and Canada were all called upon to absorb their share of surplus American funds. At that time, however, the amount of United States investments in Canada did not exceed $225,000,000.

Meanwhile the British investors had been making the best of an excellent opportunity. By 1914, the total of British investments in Canada had exceeded $2,000,000,000. In the same year the total of United States investments was not more than $650,000,000.

The war not only destroyed a part of the British market in Canada by stimulating the development of local Canadian industry, but it hurt British industry at home by stimulating the export of Canadian manufactured goods to the home country. At the same time, British investments in Canada virtually ceased. This war situation gave United States investors their opportunity.

The Dominion bureau of statistics recently published a report on The Nationality of Capital in Canadian Industries for 1919. According to this report all of the major manufacturing and mining industries of Canada were being financed by Canadian or by United States capital. The United States investments had practically equalled British investments and the volume of United States money pouring into Canada every year far exceeded the volume of British money. In many instances United States capital is invested under Canadian names, under Canadian directorates, nevertheless the real control remains in New York or Chicago. Unofficial estimates for 1923, place the total British capital in Canada at $2,000,000,000 and the total United States capital in Canada at $2,500,000,000.

The economic title to Canada's foreign investment field has passed from British to United States bankers. The political title still remains in British hands. History shows that economic possession ultimately carries with it political control.

With the lines of economic advantage which bind Canada and the United States together; with the very large sums of investable surplus which lie ready on hand in the United States and with the pressure of British imperial policy forcing American industries to locate in Canada in order to obtain the advantages built upon imperial preferences, there seems to be an overwhelming probability that the British financial position in Canada will grow proportionately less and that the position of the United States will become rapidly more dominating.

Two Women on a Street

By MAXWELL BODENHEIM.

This street is callous apathy
In a scale of greys and browns.
Its black roof-line suggests,
Flat bodies unable to rise.
Its air is swarthy rawness,
Troubled with ashcans and cellars.
Even its screams are listlessness
Having an evil dream.

An old woman ambles on
With a black bag that seems a part of her back,
And a candidly hawk-like face.
She croons a smothered folk-song
That sifts a glittering roundness
Into her sharply parted face.
Then she surrenders her hand
To the welter of a garbage can.

A hugely wilted woman slinks by
With a cracked stare on her face.
Her eyes are beaten discs
Of the street-lamps' ghastly keenness.
She glides away as tho the night
Were a lover flogging her:
Glides into the callous apathy
Of this street, like one who cringes
Happily into her lover's room.

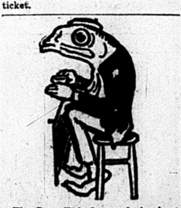
The working class must value every possibility however slight, for organizing its forces, as the curse of our class is that we are not organized, that we do not always act as a compact mass, that we do not always know our direction.—Zinoviev.

W. Va. Farmer-Labor Conclave Mar. 13 to Name Candidates

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., March 9.—In complying with the action of the July convention, the officers of the West Virginia Farmer-Labor Party issued a call for a convention, to be held March 13, in Carmichael Hall, on 6th street in Clarksburg.

It is believed that the convention will nominate candidates from governor down on the Farmer-Labor ticket.



The Poor Fish Says: It is about time somebody should blame the Teapot Dome Scandal on the Reds. They are getting away with murder. What is the matter with Gompers?

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

Washington still marvels at the silence of Calvin Coolidge. Not so Cyril Lambkin of Detroit, who has sent the following comment to this column:

"Only those with poor memories will marvel at the golden silence of Cautious Cal. It is no mystery to those whose memory serves them well. Just recall what happened two summers ago, when Cal, who was then vice president, attempted to bestow his golden eloquence on a gathering of farmers in Minnesota. The whole gathering got up and walked away whistling. Under the circumstances what man with a grain of self respect would not exchange golden eloquence for golden silence?"

• • • •

We are of the opinion that Calvin is silent because he has more political sense than brains. Woodrow Wilson talked himself to death. He was really too clever for the average type of politician and he became unpopular as a result. Harding talked and everybody laughed at him. Coolidge says nothing and the nation marvels at what he doesn't say. He can't fool our correspondents, tho.

• • • •

Secretary of the Navy Denby—he is still on the job—states that even Woodrow Wilson did a little "teapotting" while he was in the White House. In a letter to Congress, Denby declares that on Dec. 6, 1920, Secretary Payne wrote to Woodrow Wilson suggesting that the Boston Pacific Oil Company be allowed to drill five new wells on California naval reserve No. 2. The letter was found in the records of the navy department and annotated "approved Dec., 1920, Woodrow Wilson." Our contention that the Teapots are simply calling each other names is borne out by the development in this scandal.

• • • •

The desire of the dope trained readers of the capitalist press for salacious and thrilling stories is responsible for the manner in which the capitalist papers play up murders and sexual crimes. This leads them to commit offenses in order to make news for which ordinary citizens would be arrested. But the papers can violate the law with impunity here. The Daily News, Tribune and Herald-Examiner have their own finks and when a murder story breaks, ten to one that they nab the suspect ahead of the police. Tense rivalry exists here in Chicago between the Tribune and the Herald-Examiner.

• • • •

When the Duffy double-murder occurred here a week or so ago, the police made the usual fatheaded assertions that the murderers would be arrested "within twenty-four hours", or that "a blond girl well-known in the bright light district of lower North Clark Street was known to have been with the murdered man 30 minutes before his body was found." Policemen are known to have talked like this in their sleep. The Herald-Examiner arrested Duffy, held him prisoner until it got a good story out of him and then turned him over to the police. Naturally it chuckled over the feat. It had a scoop. The city editor might get a raise. It meant a few thousand more readers. Up goes circulation and advertising rates. That's the point to be taken into consideration. That is how Hearst and all the other capitalist paper magnates make their millions.

• • • •

Now something happened. The circulation manager of the Tribune warned the editor that "100 per cent Americans" may be virtuous but it is generally compulsory. Their virtue is for use in the show window but they secretly admire those whose profession is taking liberties with the moral code, and they greedily devour every bit of news concerning the activities of the daring fraternity. Now, competition may be the life of trade but sensation is the life of circulation. A hint is as good as a nod to a city editor.

• • •

That worthy, with one eye on pay day and another on his job, got his sleuths busy, and from distant Cleveland brought in a victim by the name of Jeanne Mason, underworld character for whom the sleuths of the police department and the Herald-Examiner office looked for in vain, into its own "gold fish" room and over crackers and cheese pried forth the information that Chicago is famous for its stockyards and Boul. Mich. Now the Tribune laughs at the Herald-Examiner and justice is being served.

• • •

Where this competition will stop is hard to say. Why not abolish the police department and the state's attorney's office and leave the task of protecting the fair name of justice in the hands of the Tribune and Herald-Examiner? The incentive to get busy whenever the murder ring gets unusually irresponsible and kills a bootlegger by mistake will be the circulation figures. Criminals would have the advantage of getting their photographs printed, and those of them who do not like the limelight might enjoy the privilege of having their views on everything from the Teapot Dome to capital punishment appear anonymously. This suggestion is worthy of consideration. Furthermore those who enjoyed the pleasure of spending a little time as guest in the detective bureau's front room will not feel offended at the prospect of becoming a steady visitor to the "gold fish" rooms of the two sterling capitalist newspapers of Chicago. Let justice be served!

HORROR RULES AT UTAH COAL MINE TRAGEDY

No Hope For Coal Barons' Victims in West

(Special to The Daily Worker)

CASTLE GATE, Utah, Mar. 10.—Headless and charred bodies of the victims who were caught in the terrible disaster at Utah Fuel Company's Mine No. Two, last Saturday are today being taken to the surface.

Thirty-one bodies, eighteen of them identified, have so far been removed from the galleries. Mine experts say there is positively no chance that anybody could be alive in the stifling, gas-filled chamber.

The single street of the little mining town is crowded daily with the relatives and friends, widows and orphans of the entombed miners.

Pathetic Scenes.

Pathetic scenes were witnessed as frantic women driven insane by sorrow attempted to go down into the deadly pit to join their husbands in death.

One young woman with a baby in her arms roamed about all day crying "I want to go to him." Her husband had laid down his life as a sacrifice to the capitalist greed for gold.

Considerable coal baron propaganda is being broadcasted telling of the precautionary measures taken to preserve the lives of the miners. There is an investigation on, but the miners fear it will whitewash the coal barons.

Twenty other bodies were sighted in a tunnel still inaccessible as workers bored into the mass of debris choking the passageways.

Fire and deadly gases hampered the relief efforts yesterday, but the flames finally were extinguished last night and rescue squads equipped with gas helmets made their way into the tunnels.

It was believed that the levels where the main body of the entombed men were at work might be reached today.

Gas Fumes Deadly.

One rescue worker died from inhaling deadly gas fumes last night.

As soon as the blaze is extinguished, officials believe they will be able to reach the position where the miners were working at the time they were trapped by a series of blasts.

Of the seven bodies recovered near the entrance to the mine, five have been identified. All were married men with families. Two other bodies were so badly mutilated that they could not be identified.

Crowds packing the canyon roads leading to the mine, are orderly. Deputies held the spectators and members of families of men caught in the death trap, a mile from the mine entrance.

Hang in Far North, Too.

WINNIPEG, March 10.—Out of the great ice barrier of the silent North came the news today that Canadian law had taken its course, and that the two Esquimaux murderers, Alikiamik and Tatangamen had been hanged at Herschel Island February 1.

Spirit of Unity Prevails at St. Paul as Farmer-Labor Conference Starts

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 10—William Mahoney, editor of the St. Paul Trade Union Advocate, opened the conference of representatives of farmer-labor parties at 3 p. m. today in the Labor Temple.

The conference was called to take final action on the decision of a previous conference held on Nov. 15 last to hold a National Farmer-Labor Convention on May 30.

In his opening speech Mahoney stated that he had been notified by many organizations that they could not be represented but had sent their views. "This," said Mahoney, "is what we do not want."

It will be some time before credentials are approved, the convention organized and the voting strength of the gathering known. State parties from Minnesota, Nebraska, Montana, North and South Dakota and Washington are represented here in addition to the two factions of the Illinois Farmer-Labor Party, the Buffalo Labor Party and the Labor Party of Washington, D. C., headed by William V. Mahoney.

William E. Rodriguez and Gifford Ernst are here for the insurgent faction of Illinois, Illinois Farmer-Labor Party; J. G. Brown and Robert M. Buck for the old organization.

Rodriguez, Ernst and William V. Mahoney, of Washington, D. C., wasted a lot of valuable energy before the convention was called to order, in conducting a propaganda campaign among the delegates against the Communists with copies of the DAILY WORKER as Exhibit A.

The farmer delegates seemingly have been vaccinated against Rodriguez-Ernst-Mahoney virus, judging by the amused look on their faces as they listened to the self-appointed red baiters.

Mahoney's speech was cautiously worded, and an attempt to explain the failure of the committee to send out the call for the May 30th convention, but he admitted that this failure had brought a storm of criticism and hundreds of resolutions from farmer and worker organizations protesting the delays. He further stated that he had direct assurance that La Follette is to run independently if his health permits.

Speaking of the Conference for Political Action, Mahoney said that the group which endorsed McAdoo in Chicago was more representative that the group which was at the official St. Louis gathering. According to Mahoney's close friends this is the first time he has made such an admission.

Speaking of the May 30th date he asked the conference if they wished to organize only the advanced farmer and working class elements or if they wished to wait and possibly break millions of people away from the old parties.

The I. W. W. in Washington are swinging toward political action and in a number of lumber communities are co-operating with farmer's political movement to a marked degree, according to William Bouck, head of the western progressive farmers. Free speech fights have been conducted jointly by the farmers and the lumber workers organized in the I. W. W. and out of these has grown a feeling of solidarity.

The bitterness of the struggle in which both groups are engaged has largely broken down the old antagonisms and a real united front is in process of formation between bankrupt farmers and lumbers workers.

Charles Taylor, of Montana, is bubbling over with enthusiasm over the rapid progress being made by the Farmer-Labor party in that state. Beginning with a conference of thirty-six delegates in Great Falls, the latter part of October, in both the lumbering, mining and farming sections of the party it is building a powerful machine.

J. W. Anderson and Pat Budden, state secretary, have been touring the state and in many towns the halls could not hold the crowds that turned out and the apathy that was prevalent before the first of the year has disappeared.

"The Conference for Progressive Political Action is no longer a factor in Montana," says Taylor. "President Steve Ely of the State Federation was a bitter opponent of the Farmer-Labor party when first started, but at one of Anderson's meetings shortly before I left, Ely acted as usher. He probably had a change of heart after his own local at Sand Coulee told him they wanted no more opposition of the Farmer-Labor party from him."

Local unions are affiliating direct with the party in Butte and coal mining towns and other industrial centers. According to Taylor the liberal Republican governor has made his peace with the Anaconda Mining Company and the lineup is consequently becoming clearer. "If the election was held tomorrow we would count on at least twenty thousand votes," said Taylor.

FACTS FORCE ACTION FROM CITY'S HEAD

Discuss Struggle at City Hall Conference, Thursday

Under fire from two committees, representing the aroused forces of the Chicago labor movement and the general citizenry of the city, Mayor William E. Dever has authorized the Department of Public Welfare of Chicago to take steps towards a settlement of the dressmakers' strike.

Sunday the Mayor told the DAILY WORKER he did not know anything was wrong in the conduct of this strike, which his police have been endeavoring to crush with all their callous disregard of law. Monday morning the facts, in all their unpleasant details, were thrust before him by the special citizen's committee which was organized a week ago.

The Mayor Yields.

Threatened with the complete stripping away of his claims to be a "friend of labor" and of fair play, the mayor consented to act and the Department of Public Welfare was called into effect a settlement. Whether this is mere camouflage remains to be seen.

First steps will be taken Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock when the department will call a conference between representatives of the striking dressmakers and the employers.

Cautioned Against Sham Settlement.

The conference will be held in the offices of the Commissioner of Public Welfare in the City Hall building and will be watched by the entire labor movement of this city which has determined that no sham settlement shall be put over.

The committee which saw the mayor was headed by Father Frederic Seidenberg of Loyola University. The other members were: Mrs. B. F. Longworthy, Mrs. V. Frank Brown, Dean Thomas Holgate, Mrs. Abe Simon, Miss Mary McDowell of the University Settlement and Thomas Holland and Dr. Ralph Gerard of the General Medical College.

Weiss Gives Orders.

The committee read the mayor a report prepared by several residents of Hull House which reviewed the attitude of the police toward the strike. The report specifically charges that the police have abused strikers and man-handled them on the slightest provocation. It also tells of how Arthur Weiss, head of one of the largest anti-union dress manufacturers, gave orders to the police and how the police refer to him as "the boss."

The mayor told the committee that he had ordered the police not to hold any persons for violations of minor charges without booking them at once. He also said that he had referred the whole matter of the strike to the Department of Public Welfare.

Tell It To Sullivan."

Magistrate Samuel Trude yesterday morning refused to issue a warrant for the arrest of Leonard Wolman, the employing dressmaker who beat up Florence Corn.

"Tell it to Judge Denis Sullivan," was Trude's advice.

His excuse for refusing the warrant was that Wolman had an injunction against the strikers which he

POOR CHARLEY SCHWAB TELLS CAL COOLIDGE SCANDAL HITS BUSINESS

WASHINGTON, March 10th.—Business prosperity in the United States is being handicapped by "hysteria" over the investigation in Congress of the naval oil leases, Charles M. Schwab, steel magnate, told President Coolidge today at a conference at the White House.

"I told the president," Schwab said, "that I never saw, prior to these difficulties and this public hysteria over the oil investigation, more promising business conditions. Today, the country is prosperous as it should be.

"Conditions in the steel industry are good. General business conditions are sound."

Small Army of Lawyers Travel with Famous Oil Grabber

Harry F. Sinclair, holder of the Teapot Dome oil lease, now under investigation by the government, attended a mass-meeting of his lawyers here today. Some time this evening Sinclair and his attorneys, augmented by two or three from Chicago and perhaps a few others, will leave for Cheyenne, Wyoming.

Sinclair arrived here from New York accompanied by Martin W. Littleton, R. W. Ragland, Paul D. Cravath and other noted lawyers from the East. Col. J. W. Zevely, Sinclair's Washington attorney, who has already appeared before the Senate investigating committee, also is here.

Sinclair and his attorneys discussed the stand to be taken in the Federal court at Cheyenne where decision is to be made on whether the Sinclair company is to continue draining the Teapot.

U. S. Supreme Court Wipes Out Dorchy Conviction in Kansas

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Conviction of August Dorchy, officer of District No. 14, of the United Mine Workers, in 1921 for violation of the Kansas Industrial Relations Act, was vacated today by the supreme court.

Dorchy appealed on the grounds the sections of the act proclaiming the mining of coal to be clothed with public interest, and therefore subject to the police power of the state were void and unconstitutional.

Dorchy and Alexander Howat were sentenced together July 27, 1921, to six months in jail for having ordered the miners at H Mine of the George K. Mackie Fuel Co., in Cherokee county, Kansas, to strike until one of their number was paid by the company certain money claimed by the union to be due him.

Outraged Virtue No Match for Millions in Atlanta Court

ATLANTA, Ga., March 10.—Mrs. Clyde Byfield today lost her attempt to obtain $100,000 damages from Walter T. Candler, son of the millionaire coca-cola manufacturer for an alleged attack on board a ship.

A jury in De Kalb superior court after deliberating since Saturday denied Mrs. Byfield's claim for damages and found for the defendant, who charged the suit was the result of a blackmail plot.

IMPEACH COOLIDGE!

WITNESS TO BARE BRIBERY, GUN-RUNNING

Will Also Tell of Mysterious Washington Influence

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Evidence directly involving former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall, and some present government officials in a $1,000,000 bribery and gun-running plot will be sought by the Senate Daugherty Investigating Committee from a witness subpoenaed today.

He is Harry S. Obbon, former mayor of Calexico, Cal., a town on the border between California and Mexico. Obbon wrote a letter to Senator La Follette, Wisconsin, detailing alleged instances of interference from Washington with efforts to stop gun-running across the border during the Cantu revolution in 1921.

He also told of a $1,000,000 fund, part of which was to go to Estaban Cantu, leader of the revolution and which, according to Obbon, Fall had control of. LaFollette turned the letter over to Senator Wheeler who at once summond Obbon.

Many Willing to Testify.

Since announcement by the committee that it was going into reports that Department of Justice agents on the border were called off from Washington when they tried to prevent violation of the neutrality laws by gun runners, much information has been volunteered.

The committee has received offers from several persons whose names are being kept secret, to testify if they are afforded protection.

Will Play Trump Cards.

The committee intends to climax its revelations this week by playing long delayed trump cards.

The plan is:

1. To call Edward B. McLean, publisher of the Washington Post, who has been under subpoena for more than a month and ask him about his connections with the White House, Attorney General Daugherty, former Secretary of the Interior Fall and other high officials. He will also be asked what he knows of the reported million dollar slush fund and stock speculations of government officials.

2. Ask Leonard Wood, Jr., and Jake Hamon, Jr., what they know about a reported attempt to barter for the presidency at the last Republican convention with the post of secretary of the interior as the price.

Gaston Will Be Called.

3. Gaston B. Means, former justice department agent, who is reported to have made an early investigation into the scandal long before it was unearthed by the committee will be called to the stand. He will also be asked concerning a trip to Florida he is supposed to have made to acquaint McLean with some of his information.

The committee recessed over today and will resume tomorrow morning. Some additional telegrams received from the Three Rivers, N. M., office of the telegraph companies will probably be surveyed first and then McLean may be called.

Russian Soviet Representative to Great Britain Sends Greetings to The Daily Worker

By CHARLES ASHLEIGH.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, Feb. 21 (By Mail).—Today I went to the headquarters of the Russian Trade Delegation—or, as it will now become: The Legation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics—to talk with Comrade C. G. Rakovsky, the special agent in Britain of the U. S. S. R. This was about my last chance of seeing Rakovsky, as he was about to depart for Moscow, in order to confer with his Foreign Office, and receive instructions, before returning to London for the conference between the two countries, which shall settle the various outstanding questions between them.

I was received in Comrade Rakovsky's office, after sending in my name and that of the DAILY WORKER. Comrade Rakovsky has not been long in Britain, and his acquaintance with English is still rather scanty. Our conversation, therefore, was conducted in French.

Comrade Rakovsky is a man of about forty, slight, and of middle height. His keen, clean-shaven face, alert dark eyes and mobile expression reveal a capacity for quick decisive action, analytical power and humor.

After a comradely hand-shake, I asked Comrade Rakovsky to give me a statement of his opinion regarding the recent recognition of the Soviet Union by the British government. This he willingly consented to do.

"After great struggles and much suffering," said Comrade Rakovsky, "we have arrived in Russia at the establishment of a new state organ, namely, the Soviets.

"And now we see that this Government of Workers and Peasants is legally recognized by many of the great bourgeois powers. This I consider to be a great victory; and it is a victory owing to the magnificent courage and sacrifice displayed by the workers and peasants of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in their loyal and unswerving support of the Soviet power.

"I believe," continued Comrade Rakovsky, "that, in a comparatively short time, recognition of the Soviet Union will be general. The recent examples of Great Britain, Norway and Italy—who have all recognized my country within the last month—will undoubtedly be followed by the United States, France and other countries."

"You mention the United States," I asked. "Do you think that Americans should be closely concerned in the matter of the Recognition of the Soviet Union?"

"Most certainly," replied Comrade Rakovsky. "A great industrial country, like the United States, which needs the maintenance of peaceful relations in Europe, for the development of its foreign commerce, should be concerned, in the highest degree with the establishment of normal relations with Russia.

"The working class of all countries," pursued Comrade Rakovsky, "will gain much thru this recognition of the Soviet Government, as it is yet another manifestation of the fact that the working class have the capacity—even in an industrially backward country like Russia—to govern themselves."

"And your message for the DAILY WORKER?" I asked.

"Convey my fraternal salutations to the young working-class organ," said Comrade Rakovsky, "with best wishes for its growth and success."

SENATOR WHEELER HAS THE GOODS ON W. J. BURNS

Rival Fink Agency Is Mentioned

By CARL HAESSLER
(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

Proof positive that William J. Burns, Attorney General Daugherty's chief spy and framer against labor men and radicals, lied to the senate Teapot Dome committee is expected to be uncovered here in short order. Burns had told the committee at Washington that he has had no connection with the private detective agency that bears his name since becoming a government detective.

But documents now in Chicago in hostile hands show, some of them over Burns' own signature, that he has been directing the agency, arranging for new business and using the department of justice, the postoffice department and perhaps the department of labor in protecting the copper mining companies of the southwest against A. F. of L. and I. W. W. organization attempts. Even the barbers' union in Arizona drew his fire, in his double capacity of government and private sleuth.

Dick In Toils.

Senator Wheeler of Montana, who is collecting evidence for another senate committee, is understood to have this stuff on Burns well in hand.

Burns is also active in California, particularly in Los Angeles and in Pasadena where he interfered with a talk by Upton Sinclair before business men about a year ago. But he does not like the layout. His Los Angeles manager, G. P. Pross, thinks the merchants and manufacturers there are "the cheapest bunch of skates calling themselves business men in southern California that I or any other human has ever come in contact with." This was because the Burns rate of $10 a day was cut by other detective agencies to $7 or $8.

How the evidence came into Chicago hands is not known except that the Burns' Los Angeles office was robbed of its files some time ago, presumably by a rival agency, which sent the material where it might be used against Burns. The Thiel service is mentioned in some of the correspondence.

Just as Washington underlings referred to President Coolidge as the "principal" in their messages about him in the Teapot affair, so Burns' private subordinates write of him as the "governor."

D. of J. Burns & Co.

Over 30 copper mining companies engaged the Burns agency to spot union organizers and boosters in Arizona. Burns himself obligingly transferred a department of justice agent from Butte, another copper mining center, to Arizona to cooperate with his private men and the companies. At the same time the Burns private agent had asked the department of justice to step over to the postoffice and stop mail going to active union men so that it might be investigated. A little later the department of labor was to be enlisted to deport an American active in the metal workers' union who "thinks he would be shot if sent back to his own country. This ought to be a good chance to get rid of one red."

These anti-labor revelations showing how Burns used government resources to help employers in their private fight on the unions will probably hurt Hiram Johnson's campaign for president. He claims to be a progressive but he is the man who urged Attorney-General Daugherty to make Burns chief sleuth and stood by Burns during the attempt in the house of representatives last year to impeach Daugherty.

One of Founders of Ku Klux Held as Mann Act Violator

HOUSTON, Tex., March 10.—Edward Young Clarke, one of the founders of the Ku Klux Klan, today pleaded guilty to violation of the Mann White Slave act in Federal District court here. He admitted transporting Mrs. Laura Martin, 21 year old Houston girl, to New Orleans for immoral purposes. At one time Clarke was acting Imperial Wizard of the Klan but recently had been allied with the William J. Simmons faction in fighting the present administration of the hooded order.

Klan Leader Addresses Court.

When Clarke's case was called for trial, R. L. Henry of Houston, attorney for the klan leader, addressed the court.

The defendent wishes to change his plea to guilty, the attorney said.

Henry then asked that the court hear Attorney Westmoreland of the defense, but Judge Hutchinson refused, saying that he knew nothing of the details of the case and asked the prosecution to state the evidence.

Not Real Vice Lord.

"Is there any evidence of commercial vice in this case?" the court asked.

"No," the prosecutor replied. "It was merely a personal escapade. Clarke was engaged in interstate immorality."

Cooperation In the Party.

NEW YORK, March 10.—The Bronx English Branch of the Workers Party have called off the Commune celebration and dance they had arranged for Saturday evening, March 15, so as not to conflict with the Commune Celebration arranged by Local New York on Sunday, March 16. On Saturday evening, April 5, they will hold an entertainment and dance at Workers Hall, 1347 Boston Road, the Bronx. A fine program is being arranged.

Battle Royal In the Political Struggle of Workers and Farmers Raging In Minnesota This Week

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 10.—A battle royal to determine whether the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota shall be constructed on class lines and shall represent the interests of the working farmers and industrial workers, or whether it shall become merely a "progressive" party of the people, a Third Party, will be waged at conventions of the farmer-labor elements of the state on March 12, 13 and 14.

On March 12 a convention of farmer and worker groups will be held in Minneapolis for the purpose of acting upon the plan of a farmer-labor federation evolved last September. This is an attempt to found an organized, dues-paying party of the real producers controlled by the rank and file and composed of constituent economic and political groups.

Climax Reached.

On March 13, the Farmers' Non-Partisan League will convene in Minneapolis for the purpose of deciding its stand in relation to present and proposed movements. It will decide the momentous question of its attitude toward the proposed federation. The Federation convention in connection with the League convention intends to name and indorse candidates.

On March 14, the framework of Farmer-Labor Party imposed upon the workers by a hostile and reactionary legislature for the purpose of destroying the class character of the party, will meet at St. Cloud, Minn.

The promoters of this convention will attempt to supplant the Farmer-Labor organization of the party with the legalized form which is identical with that provided for the Republicans and Democrats and would result in a party controlled by a legailzed machine.

These three conventions are the climax of the most vital political struggles going on in America at this moment. The outcome will have a most important bearing upon the way the whole Farmer-Labor movement of America will swing this critical and promising year. Minnesota is one of the few states where the industrial and rural workers in great numbers have developed a tendency toward political class action. This development has reached the point where a well organized state-wide party based clearly on the interests of the workers has become possible. If such a party results from these conventions, Minnesota will go into the national Farmer-Labor convention this year as a force calculated to produce historic results.

On the other hand, the elements opposed to a real Farmer-Labor Party were never more conscious, or more vocal or better prepared to achieve their ends than now. They are going into the convention at St. Cloud, as the legally recognized Farmer-Labor Party, and with the law behind them to back up their decisions.

Legal Hindrances.

The law in question as amended up to date by the last legislature provides that the state central committee of the various political parties shall be appointed by the winning candidates in the primary election. The principal candidates appoint one state committeeman each. The appointee of the candidate for governor becomes state chairman. These appointees remain in office a full term altho the candidates appointing them may be defeated in the general election. They cannot be removed by the rank and file of the party. The only way they can be removed is by death or voluntary resignation. The party has no control over them. They have full control of party affairs. They are the party. They have full power to organize the party or not as they see fit.

Prior to the passage of this law the city and country workers had been satisfied to function politically thru two leagues—the Farmers' Non-Partisan League and the Working Peoples' Non-Partisan League. Reactionary laws, however, made it necessary a few years ago to construct a bridge between these two constituent workers' organizations called the Farmer-Labor Party. This Farmer-Labor Party was nothing more than a bridge, but that bridge was controlled by the leagues of the workers. Then came the vicious piece of legislation aimed like a dagger at the farm-labor movement—the law imposing the framework of organization on the various political parties. This law suited the Republican and Democratic standard bearers splendidly. It increased their facilities for perfecting machines. But it imposed the fundamentals of a machine upon the workers against their will.

Confronted with this menace, the the real farmer-labor leaders called a convention for the purpose of welding together the two leagues into a single dues-paying rank and file organization of the farmers and city workers and their allies. The federation plan was the result.

Obstacles Placed In Path.

In the meantime, this vicious law had saddled upon the party a veritable white elephant in the shape of a state chairman entirely at variance with the farmer-labor idea and determined to shift the party from its class basis. That chairman was F. A. Pike, a lawyer and democrat, of many years standing. Supporting Chairman Pike in his departure from the farmer-labor policies established by the leagues were several other state committeemen with half-baked political and unbaked economical ideas, or with political axes to grind. On the other side were committeemen sincerely desirous of building up a movement representing the interests of the workers and controlled by the workers.

This situation has resulted in a race to organize the state by the opposite factions. Chairman Pike's plan of procedure in this work is to appoint district chairmen, who in turn appoint county chairmen, who in turn appoint local chairmen. The result is an organization of officials imposed from above. The advocates of the federation, with limited means at their command, have been organizing farmer-labor clubs and obtaining with great success the indorsement for the federation plan by labor organizations, co-operative societies and advanced political groups.

To date the race has been very much in favor of the party, based on the economic interests of the workers. Active labor has bodily indorsed the Federation idea. The labor delegations to the Federation and Pike conventions can be counted upon to stand practically solid for it. The enthusiasm of labor for this kind of organization has been unrestrainable.

The Fourth, Fifth and Eighth congressional districts embracing Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, will send almost solid delegations for the Farmer-Labor Federation.

Organizers of farmer-labor clubs, have encountered unexpected enthusiasm for the Federation among the farmers. The practically unanimous report from almost every district visited is that the farmers consider that the Non-Partisan League has fulfilled its mission and should give way to a constituent organization of farmers and industrial workers. In every part of the state where the old league members have had an opportunity they have joined the clubs supporting the federation. The Ninth district farmers and workers called a convention several months ago and unanimously indorsed the federation. Fifty delegates out of 60 in this convention were farmers.

Pike's Convention at St. Cloud.

Mr. Pike called a convention in the Seventh district in January, for the purpose of turning the tables on the federation advocates. The convention did exactly the opposite to what he desired and turned the tables on him. There are ten congressional districts in the state. Six of these, at least seem sure for the federation idea. The Federationists have at least an equal chance in the other four. If there is anything like fair representation and conditions in the conventions the Federation plan or some other constituent organization of the real workers will surely result.

But fair and equal on conditions are just what Chairman Pike has guarded against in his convention. When Mr. Pike announced his intention of calling the Federationist committeemen and leaders conferred with him for the purpose of having the proposed conventions at the same place on consecutive dates, so that the question of the organization of the Farmer-Labor Party would be settled once and for all. Pike seemed to accept this challenge. He readily consented to consecutive dates and then after the Federation supporters and Non-Partisan League leaders had announced the place as Minneapolis, suddenly announced his place of meeting at St. Cloud. St. Cloud is 80 miles from Minneapolis. Mr. Pike undoubtedly feels sure that hundreds of delegates cannot be moved intact 80 miles in one night.

Discriminating Against Workers.

This is not all. Pike has announced in this call that the basis of representation shall be one delegate in each county for every 1,000 votes cast for Magnus Johnson and one delegate-at-large. There are 83 counties in Minnesota predominantly rural and three predominantly industrial. In the three industrial counties at least two-fifths of the population is centered. These counties under the Pike plan will send only 97 out of 379 delegates. There are more wage earners in Minnesota than farmers according to government statistics, but Pike would give the industrial workers only about one-fourth of the delegates. The rural counties will send 33 deelgates at large, while the industrial counties will send only 3 delegates at large. It is palpably a plan to oust labor and its "radical" theories from the "progressive" movement of Minnesota.

Despite these handicaps, the leaders of the real farmer-labor movement of Minnesota are confident that their forces will appear even in Pike's convention in sufficient strength to carry the day.

More Prospects For State's Att'y Crowe's Strike-breaking Force

JOLIET, Ill., March 10.—Three of the five convicts who last night escaped from the penitentiary here after slugging a guard, were captured at Homer, Ill., sixteen miles east of here, today.

The three men captured—Joe Moran, Williams Jones, and Clarence Langford—were surrounded in a field by penitentiary guards and a posse of citizens. They surrendered without a fight, the report here stated. The other two convicts are still at large.

KANSAS MINERS DEFY LEWIS TO DEBATE HOWAT

Convention Dumps the Autocrat's Laws

By TOM TIPPETT
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

PITTSBURGH, Kan., March 10.—John L. Lewis, international president, United Mine Workers of America, was telegraphed an invitation to appear at the convention of the Kansas district of the miners' organization in session here to debate the Kansas case with ex-president Alexander Howat, of Kansas, who was deposed from office by Lewis in 1921. Howat attends the convention daily as a visitor.

The appointive power was taken away from the officers of this district and a new clause written into the constitution providing for the direct election of all field workers. This action followed a lengthy debate and carried by an overwhelming majority vote.

Constitution Re-written.

This district constitution is being re-written by this convention. Such action is wiping out laws that were enacted at a convention two years ago. At that convention there were 60 delegates after more than 20 pro-Howat men men had been unseated. Van A. Bitner presided as a representative of the international union. The district membership at the time was between 3,000 and 4,000. No delegate has been unseated at the convention now in session here and there are 145 seated representing a membership of approximately 9,000. The provisional convention did away with the old Howat constitution and legislated new laws. The present convention is undoing the work of the former meeting.

Howat Men Eligible.

A proposition enacted two years ago preventing men who worked during the 1922 strike from holding local office or from being a pit-committee man or convention delegate for a period of three years was repealed. Another that called for six years continuous membership in the union to enable a candidate to run for office was killed and a six months proviso put in its stead. The significance of this action is that all the Howat men will now be eligible to stand for office in the coming election. Howat, himself, as well as the other deposed officials can run if their membership is brought about six months prior to the next election, which is in December of this year. The vote on these measures was practically unanimous.

A new sub-district was added to the district. The election candidates were given the right to select three men to watch the tabulation of the official vote. The district executive board was taken off the scale committee. Six men elected from convention floors together with the district president and secretary will hereafter constitute the scale and conference committees.

Expense Accounts Probed.

The power of the district executive board to levy assessments was limited to two one dollar assessments per year. Further assessments must be submitted to a referendum vote with the assessment amount printed on the ballot. Personal grievances are to be taken to conventions for final settlements instead of ending with the executive board as the law formerly stood.

A convention committee of five was elected to investigate and examine the expense accounts of the district officials and report to the convention. All the above passed by the usual overwhelming vote.

Action was deferred on a Tom Myerscough resolution and on one dealing with the Nova Scotia case. Final action will be taken on them before the convention adjourns. International Board Member Watkins (Iowa) was voted the right to defend the international union's position during the discussion of these questions. A previous vote of the convention denied the international men who are here the right to the floor without a majority vote of the house.

Colored Unions There.

Spectators in the convention hall outnumber the delegates at many intervals during the sessions. The visitors' section is segregated from that of the delegates. The extra chairs are filled early and a huge crowd files in and out all day. Among them are the deposed officials of the district and women who participated in the famous march. Here and there among the crowd is a colored miner. A real coal digger tinge is given this convention when the men from the mines stop in on their way home with pit clothes on and dinner pails under their arms. The visitors take part in the applause and laughter which is a vital part of this unique gathering. The rank and file of Kansas are having their day in court and they are making the most of it. As one international representative put it to the writer—"this is free speech with a vengeance."

Teapot Scandal Does Not Hinder Rise in Price of Oil

(Special to The Daily Worker)

FRANKLIN, Penn., March 10.—A raise of 10 to 20 cents in the various grades of crude oils, except Pennsylvania was announced by the Seep Purchasing Agency here today.

New prices quoted are corning $2.15, up 15; Somerset light $2.50, up 15 and Ragland $1.10, up 10 cents. Pennsylvania crude oil was quoted unchanged at $4.

Strikebreaker Holdom Is Endorsed by His Pal, Strikebreaker Crowe

THERE is a united front of strikebreakers on in Chicago at the present time from the "Injunction Judges" on the bench to the underworld criminals to slug the striking dressmakers for a few dollars a day and perhaps immunity for murders committed in the past.

Judges, the state's attorney, the mayor, the chief of police, the detective agencies and the gangsters are standing shoulder to shoulder with the bosses against the workers.

They must hang together or separately. "Injunction" Denis Sullivan issues a decree prohibiting the dress makers from functioning in their own strike. Crowe's sluggers aided by "Cossack" Alcock, Mayor Dever's subordinate, and divers finks from the city's crime dens, enforce the injunction's terms with their clubs and blackjacks.

Another character in the judicial anti-labor ring, in the person of the notorious "Injunction Judge" Jesse Holdom, came out yesterday with an endorsement of Robert E. Crowe for re-election.

Judge Holdom was feeling rather lonely. He had not issued any injunctions for a couple of weeks and he wanted to keep his hand in. So he boosted strikebreaker Crowe for the office he now holds. He said: "In your first term, now coming to close, you have shown your ability to cope with crime." In what way, Judge Holdom, unless to jail union men, convicted on Chamber of Commerce manufactured evidence prepared by Chamber of Commerce lawyers? The slayers of the Duffys have not yet been apprehended. Robert E. Crowe has officially declared it a mystery. The "Beer War" murders are not solved. The countless violations of law in the city of Chicago go unpunished, but the ability of Mr. Crowe to arrest strikers is unequalled. That is what "Injunction" Jesse Holdom had in mind of course.

The Committee of Fifteen appointed by John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, to investigate Crowe's office should now be ready to make a report. The resolution authorizing the committee to be appointed was passed on March 2. This is March 11. Time presses. The dress makers are still on the battle-line. The strikers are not drawing wages. The bosses are not worrying about approaching hunger.

The workers of Chicago are anxiously awaiting action from the Committee of Fifteen. It was not appointed for the purpose of asking Mayor Dever a few questions and then waiting results. The workers expect that the committee will sift the charges made by John Fitzpatrick and others against State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe. The workers expect, as the DAILY WORKER urges, that not alone Crowe's office, but that of the mayor and chief of police be investigated and that unholy alliance between the officials of Cook County and the judiciary backed by organized greed will be exposed to the workers of this city.

The Committee of Fifteen cannot afford to let this golden moment slip by without exerting itself to throw a flood of light on the capitalist conspiratorial ring of Chicago.

The DAILY WORKER believes that the publication of the truth concerning the conspiracy of the political tools of the clothing manufacturers in office in this county would be the best propaganda possible. Let us have action.

Protect Strikers? No!

The police have no orders to protect strikers.

So a bunch of Chief Collins' men told 20 employes of the C. H. Lowenthal & Co., skirt firm at 224 S. Market street when they asked for protection while they went past the employers thugs to collect their pay.

Lowenthal refused to pay the girls the money due them when the shop chairlady of the union approached him. He threatened the chairlady and told her to get out.

All 20 employes came to the entrance of the shop then and asked policemen, Nos. 5203, 1470, 3587 and 2314 to protect them while they went up to demand their money.

The cops replied that they had no orders to protect strikers.

Several more police refused: finally Officer 1843 consented and after much blustering C. H. Lowenthal got out the money.

Lowenthal has an injunction against the strikers. This morning each received a copy of the injunction from him but they were not too awed to ask for their money.

Where Is Crowe?

Federal operatives believed today they had completed a chain of evidence that links the murder of John Daugherty, alias Duffy, to the flood of counterfeit $10 bills which have been passed in wholesale lots thru the midwest.

RUMOR MORGAN IS DIVING TO RESCUE OF FRENCH FRANC

Paris Grabs at Hope of Bankers' Dough

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, March 10.—The French franc opened somewhat stronger here today at 115 francs 50 centimes to the pound sterling as reports were circulated in banking circles that the Paris government had determined on drastic measures to stave off financial disaster.

One report to the Financial Times from its Paris correspondent said it was rumored in the French capitol that an American syndicate, headed by Morgan and Company will offer the French treasury a credit of fifty million dollars for three months at six per cent interest.

"Drastic Measures."

PARIS, March 10.—The franc opened at 27 francs 65 centimes to the dollar today as the French government strove valiantly to bolster up its falling currency. The franc improved in the first hour and a half of the market, reaching 26 francs 90 centimes to the dollar at 11:30 a. m.

The council of the cabinet met at 10 a. m. in the Quai d' Orsay to discuss drastic measures to halt the decline of the franc as envisaged yesterday in a conference at the Elysee Palace.

Francs continued unsteady thruout the day and closed at 116 francs 50 centimes to the pound.

Discuss Reparations.

Experts Commission Number 1, inquiring into Germany's financial condition with reference to her ability to pay reparations, today began discussions preliminary to drafting its report.

A number of vital points still remain unsettled, including the proposal for international control of German transportation and certain other phases of industry.

It is doubtful whether the experts' full report will be ready to submit to the commission of reparations before March 22.

Disabled Service Men Unfit for Work When Turned Out of Schools

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Disabled service men are being turned out of government training schools incompetent to fill jobs for which they are supposed to have been fitted, Thomas Kirby, legislative agent of the disabled American veterans told the house veterans committee today.

As a result unemployment is spreading among them, Kirby said. He appealed to congress to provide funds with which to give governmentally trained men a half year's placement training in positions which require experience before they can be satisfactorily filled.

What Is Teapot Politics?

NEVER before in the history of this country have so many investigations of the conduct of government been launched. What is it all about? Is it merely because there is an election this year?

Nothing of the sort is true. There are investigations and investigations. The plague of investigations that is afflicting Washington today is indicative of the turn the class divisions and struggles are taking in the United States. There are now scheduled or in session from twenty-five to forty-three investigations of government corruption, political influence, and fraud, that puts to shame the worst scandals in the annals of capitalist control of our politics.

All of these scandals are an index of what control of the means of production and exchange and the government by the capitalist class brings to the working and farming masses. Whether it is General Wood's imperialist maneuvers in the Philippines, or Daugherty's manipulations in the Mexican mess, or Sinclair's holdup of Teapot Dome, all of these capitalist ventures are simply different forms of the same brand of Teapot politics.

But what is Teapot politics? "The Teapot Special" of the DAILY WORKER will answer this question with facts, figures and statements "out of their own mouths." We will tell what Teapot politics means to the workingman and the farmers in their day to day grind. We will tell what the working and farming classes can do to end all Teapot politics.

Get your order in today for "The Teapot Special." We have put on an extra staff to handle the numerous big bundle orders that are pouring in on us from every city and from many farm centers of the country. The sooner your order reaches us the sooner you will receive it and the surer you will be of getting it to your friends and your brothers in your unions and labor organizations. Delay is out of order on "The Teapot Special." Order now and order big.

GOMPERS URGES THUMB-PRINTING OF FOREIGN BORN

Begs Labor Support for Johnson Bill

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, March 10.—In a letter addressed to the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City, one of the most conservative labor bodies in the United States, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, requested the indorsement of the reactionary Johnson Immigration Bill.

Speaking in the most contemptuous terms of the Jewish, Italian and workers who had come here from Southeastern Europe, Gompers, himself an immigrant, totally ignored the debt of gratitude which the American labor movement owes these very workers, who bravely dared to challenge the power of Judge Gary and the steel trust in the great steel strike, who constitute the backbone of the needle trade unions and who have always been the first to feel the onslaught of the employing class.

Admitting that the provisions of the Johnson bill do not meet fully the demands of the A. F. of L. for the restriction of immigration, he believes, however, that it is a step in the right direction. "We must support every limitation," he says in rallying the hundred perceners to the slogan of "America for Americans."

Delegates In Revolt.

The assembled delegates would not swallow this "bunk," however Delegate after delegate rose to condemn the bill. Lefkowitz of the Teachers' union characterized it as the most reactionary and anti-labor measure ever proposed by a legislative body. He declared that the follow-up and finger-printing of the foreign-born, as provided for in the bill, was worthy of the blackest days of Czarist Russia. Delegate Gaa of the Painters' union showed that the threat of deportation would be used as an effective weapon against the foreign-born worker to dissuade him from activity in the trade unions or in strikes.

The matter was finally referred to the legislative committee to be acted on on Thursday, March 20. Defeat is expected.

Miners Hit Bills.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

COELLO, Ill., March 10.—Vigorous protest against the "immigration" bills is made by Local Union No. 232 of the United Mine Workers of America. The local declares:

> "The exception laws directed against the foreign-born are intended to stifle those efforts of the foreign-born to raise their standard of living in common struggles with the native workers. With the foreign-born workers registered, finger-printed and photographed, and under threat of deportation, should they actively participate in strikes it will be easy for the employers to hold them in check and prevent the building of more powerful organizations of labor."

Chicago Rooming Houses Very Bad, Investigators Find

The shabby, overcrowded conditions in the Chicago rooming house districts were described by Miss Marie Merrill, of the Public Welfare Department of Chicago, at the annual dinner of the Sarah Hackett Stevenson Home at the Union League Club.

Of 300 rooms examined by the department's investigators, said Miss Merrill, none were rated as "good." The highest rated were "fair," which means that they lacked the important elements of comfort. Shabbiness was general.

The inadequacy of the housing facilities downtown are revealed by the fact that there are 300,000 workers working in the industrial sections of Chicago and only 3,090 downtown residences.

In one month twice as many persons applied for rooms as could be accommodated. Rooming house landlords often shut their doors on families with children, leaving them to walk the streets if they can get no other shelter. There is no law to prevent such actions.

Daily Worker's Investigation Shows Chicago's Housing Problem Is More Acute Now Than Ever

The housing problem in Chicago in all its phases—exhorbitant rents, overcrowding, ill repair of homes and consequent misery and disease—is more acute than it has ever been before.

There are less moderately priced homes available than ever before in Chicago's history. Rooming sections, chiefly ancient mansions, are a huge pile of decay, filth and disease.

Rents have been raised to an alarming and unwarranted degree by unscrupulous landlords who do not hesitate to take advantage of the tenants' misery. Every class in the city has been hard hit, except the very wealthy.

White collar clerks, women office workers, Negroes, laborers, and families of all occupations in moderate circumstances are forced to pay extreme prices for shoddy, uncomfortable and unsanitary rooms. Many cannot secure accommodations at any price, except with difficulty. These are the facts revealed by The DAILY WORKER'S investigation of the homes of the "City Beautiful."

Plague Spots Menace Thousands.

"'Chicago has many unsanitary, uncomfortable homes which are veritable plague spots to the life of the community,'" the United Charities, which handles hundreds of housing problems each month, tells us.

"Few people who live in easy circumstances have any conception of the terrific hardships, the hopeless misery, with which thousands of human beings are forced to put up in this so-called modern and progressive Chicago of ours, because of the lack of modern, clean, sanitary homes.

"The menace of these poorly constructed old buildings is augmented in some instances by the attitude of scrouging landlords toward their tenants."

The reports flock in that there is an acute shortage of houses in Chicago. "Chicago is now confronted with a most serious housing problem," we read in an Association of Commerce circular, "and everywhere evils will arise if we do not act to prevent them."

Why, in view of the recent building booms, should there be a shortage of houses this year? The records of the city of department of health show that the year 1923 established a record for building construction in the history of Chicago Last year there were 15,494 buildings erected at a cost of $329,604,312, as compared with 9,938 buildings erected at a cost of $83,261,710, in 1914. And yet Edwin C. Jones, financial secretary of the United Charities of Chicago, tells me that this week, on the West Side, a woman, six months pregnant, was found starving in a bare hayloft with her four children. Unfortunately there was not even hay in the loft to furnish the stricken family with warmth They are now being supported by charity.

Building Below Normal.

The Illinois Society of Architects partially explains this seeming contradiction of the tremendous profits in building with the terrible sufferings of the people who are huddled into Chicago's overcrowded and poorly maintained dwellings. "Much has been heard about a building boom in Chicago," the society finds, "but a comparison of the figures of the number of building permits issued in Chicago, the total frontage covered, and the estimated cost of buildings constructed for the past fifteen years, indicates that the construction work for 1922 in Chicago is only about normal when the changed purchasing power of the dollar of 1922 is compared to the purchasing power of the dollar in 1924 and previous years. It is obvious then, that there is still a deficit to be made up in addition to the new buildings necessary for normal increased requirements."

When asked to explain the reason for the acute housing shortage, in relation to the biggest building year in Chicago's history, it was said at the offices of the Association of Commerce that "a large percentage of the building has been of the expensive apartment house type. Builders have not, in the past few years, put their money into housing accommodations for the moderate salaried man. Consequently there is a housing shortage among the working people and clerks." It is conservatively estimated by the bonding and mortgage companies that at the end of 1922 in Chicago there was a shortage of 29,692 apartments and dwellings below the normal number needed to house the population in 1923.

The cat is let out of the bag by Weber's Weekly of Feb. 9, which explains some of the true causes of the present overwhelming housing shortage. "It will be observed that the obstructive forces that have operated against home building have been of a distinctly commercial or mercenary character," writes the weekly. "The social or sociological consideration has not entered to the slightest extent. There is a shortage of the homes that the people actually require, because there hasn't been enormous profit in supplying such homes."

FIRST ORDER FOR 200 COPIES OF "THE TEAPOT SPECIAL" HAS ARRIVED

The first order for "The Teapot Special" has arrived. It is for 200 copies and it comes from Kansas City, Kansas. The order comes from a group of workers who want to let their neighbors know the truth about "The Teapot". This is the order that is expected to let loose a whole flood of demands from all sections of the country for this historic issue. We are prepared for them. Send them in. Use the blank on Page Two. The rate is two cents per copy; $1 for 50; $2 per 100. Send all orders to THE DAILY WORKER, 1640 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.

Speculators Gouging Tenants.

In an open letter to United States Senator Couzens, the Hon. Alexander H. Revell of Chicago, recently made the following statement: "You cite the abundance of capital for constructive purposes. Chicago bankers assure me that the reason for the abundance was the abnormal rental situation. There was a vital shortage of housing accommodations. The result was that the landlord charged what he wanted. New buildings were financed by mortgage bond houses on an 80 to 100 per cent of valuation basis with impunity. It was felt that before rents could drop, from 20 to 40 per cent of the value of the structure would be repaid. The rate exacted for such financing by the mortgage bond companies under these conditions ran from 12 to 13 per cent and even higher. You can find sworn testimony as to this in the records of the Dailey Legislative investigation into Chicago building conditions. In every instance the rent payer bore the burden of this item of overhead."

System Increases Death Rate.

The prime reason for the large housing shortage, our investigation discloses, is that there is more profit for real estate speculators in building large, beautiful apartments designed for the wealthy. The large landlords as well as the builders, have their own interests at heart. It is good business to enter the field which nets the most money, and that field for the builder and landlord, is the rearing of imposing looking, expensive apartments, on which bonds bearing a fat interest can be floated—bonds which are paid for out of the savings of small investors.

The real estate man never has cared about the appalling results of his dollar chasing activities. He does not heed the fact that "the death rate increases with the density of population," a fact established almost a quarter of a century ago by an extensive survey of the City Homes Association. As long as homes are built in the interest of private real estate profiteers instead of to take care of the actual needs of the people, Chicago will have the spectacle of the exclusive section of the city, with its commodious, towering apartments to be had only at fancy prices, while the great majority pay their extreme, unreasonable rents, huddled uncomfortably close together in the overcrowded sections of the city.

Wanted: Housing Shortage!

The unscrupulous real estate speculator is reaping millions in enormous building profits and fabulous rents, while the large majority of workers are forced to live in misery.

Select sections of the city enjoy beautiful, many-room flats, while the workingmen are huddled together in disease-breeding tiny flats. This is the story told in today's first installment of the DAILY WORKER investigation of Chicago's present housing crisis.

Tomorrow we tell why the large real estate men want a housing shortage. The crazy system allowed by the city government, whereby speculators control YOUR HOME, is significant. What are you going to do about it?

Irish Free State Troops Mutiny as Unemployment Grows

DUBLIN, Ireland, March 10.—The Irish Free State government is apprehensive as a result of a mutiny that broke out in the Templemore Barracks, County Tipperary. An order was issued regarding disorganization involving the dropping of soldiers from the ranks.

With the present terrible unemployment in Ireland, the throwing of thousands of demobolized soldiers on the market would add to the tenseness of the situation.

Echoes of the Templemore mutiny soon reached the rest of Ireland, causing much uneasiness. This is the first serious revolt that faced the Free State government since it succeeded in crusing the Republicans.

SAMUEL INSULL LEADS DRIVE FOR MASONIC TEMPLE

Masonic Corporation Is Shaking Down Workers

Dissatisfaction is growing among the working class members of the Masonic order at the high handed way in which Samuel Insull, president of the Commonwealth Edison company and director in numerous public utility corporations, has practically taken charge of the drive for a new monument to Masonry in the loop. One member of the Masons who has been asked to contribute one hundred dollars told The DAILY WORKER that it is a new campaign of the Edison head to get some cheap advertising.

The fact that four engineers associated with Insull as well as Insull himself are on the committee which has entire charge of the campaign to raise five million dollars has led many of the Masons to charge that Insull has a two-fold purpose in his activities to further the prestige of the Edison company, and to sell the securities which Insull controls.

A letter sent out to members of the Utilities Craftsmen's Club, Number 1, reveals that Mr. John F. Gilchrist, also closely associated with Insull, is chairman of the Campaign Executive Committee. Members of the club claim that Insull, in collecting the money thru his company instead of the lodge, is violating the rules of the lodge.

It is being pointed out that Senator Dailey, who was chairman of the legislative committee which investigated the building trades, called Insull "the uncrowned king of the loop," who because he named the candidates for both the republican and democratic offices not only in Chicago, but thruout Illinois, and that his influence extends to many places in the middle west.

Other members of the committee are Bernard Sunny, an official of the Western Electric company. All of these companies which seems to have felt it their duty to collect these millions for the Masons are representatives of corporations which are unorganized, and which have bitterly opposed the successful organization of the electrical workers and other unions.

Another just cause for dissatisfaction at this new grasping gesture of the large employers is the fact that they have not even allowed the members to contribute what they desire. They are asked to give a definite sum and are told how they must pay it. The unorganized workers, it is being said by those who are hard hit by the contribution, receive such a low standard of pay that they could not give enough unless prodded to it by their bosses.

The letter sent to members of Utilities Craftsmen's Club No. 1, which is signed by R. T. Schuettge, says in part: "Brother Craftsman: You know that the Masons of Chicago are about to start a campaign to raise $5,000,000 to erect a monument to Masonry in the loop. Mr. John F. Gilchrist is chairman of the campaign executive committee. The Utilities Craftsman's Club wants to be a part of this wonderful undertaking, and have been permitted to organize its own team. My lieutenants will be the members of the publicity committee. One of them will call on you this week.

"Wouldn't it please Brother Gilchrist to hand him a big bunch of subscriptions next Friday? Let's back him up. He made it possible for us to earn extra money. Masonry has helped you and me, and now we have a chance to turn about and help it. Subscriptions are taken for $100, payable in five installments."

Soviet Ambassador in Rome Hoists Red Flag Over Embassy

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ROME, March 10.—Italian workers could see today the red flag of Communism proudly waving in the breeze from the balcony of the Soviet embassy here. To add to the interest of the red symbol is the fact that it flew over the former home of the czar's agents in the Eternal City.

Shortly after an exchange of ratifications took place between Italy and Russia, the Italian government handed over the building to the Bolshevik envoys. Their first task was to raise the Red Flag. The incident attracted much attention and was applauded by Italian workers despite the black fascisti dictatorship.

Scab Education Is Proud Boast of Northwestern

(By The Federated Press)

WINNETKA, Ill., Mar. 10.—Northwestern University has robbed the labor movement of at least one good union organizer, according to the boast of Walter Dill Scott, the advertising expert who heads the educational plant at Evanston. Scott was speaking in a wealthy home to a private audience of capitalists.

"We received a student who had been active in his union," Scott said. "He wanted to become a more effective labor organizer and came to take a course at Northwestern. Before he was thru with his education he left the union, foreswore the labor movement and now is a successful capitalist. Eduction had broadened him and opened his eyes."

"A WEEK"

Views of Dora J. Dow.

Words are impotent to describe this story of the heart breaking struggle of the Communists of the first years! Things dimly veiled are here set forth in stark, awful realism! What a portrait gallery!

The heroic Robeiko, working, speaking, under the shadow of death.

Gornuikh, the brain of the party, finally, "The steersman of a heavily loaded barge in a winding shallow stream."

Simkova—alas! Her end.

Repin, the dastard traitor; Martuinov, the desolate; timid Lisa:—"There they all were, dear ones, her own. The lads she had taught the multiplication table to in the school, now armed with terrible rifles, they seemed to Lisa a powerful avenging force, a force of triumphant justice."

The ghastly, ironical Easter bells, of the dead religion—ringing over the little town. The twenty-eight comrades, dead, covered with red flags!

$300,000 Raised by World's Workers for German Relief

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER
(Staff Correspondent of the Federated Press)

BERLIN, Mar. 10.—Over $300,000 has been raised by the labor folk of the world thru the International Workers' Relief since Oct. 1 to lessen distress in Germany, according to General Secretary Willy Muenzenberg. Until the end of May it will be necessary to raise money at the rate of 100-150,000 gold marks ($25-37,000) monthly, to keep up the various feeding kitchens. According to a cable from the American branch, the workers of America will assume $100,000 of this sum.

22,000 Meals a Day.

Some 22,000 German workers or members of their families are receiving at least one square meal per day as a result of this international help from more fortunate workers in other parts of the world. There are committees in practically every civilized country of the world. Holland has perhaps the most perfect organization, the United States the strongest financially. In Australia all labor organizations have officially indorsed the relief and are members of it. In Spain it is the League for Human Rights which has taken the initiative and to which the labor organizations have attached themselves. The Belgians, besides raising money, volunteered to take 100 German children into their homes but the Belgian government, taking its cue from the French government, refused them passports. The French government had several months previously refused to let 1000 German children go there. One of the best centers for the work is Russia, where the workers, gratefully remembering how the International Workers' Relief came to their aid in 1921 and 1922, are now eagerly collecting for their German brothers and sisters.

Children's Home.

Besides having established a chain of feeding kitchens in Berlin and other centers (Frankfort, Mannheim, Dresden, etc.), the International Workers' Relief maintains a children's recreation home on the Baltic, a number of children's day homes in Berlin, and sewing rooms where poor housewives can mend their clothing under experienced guidance and with the aid of sewing machines. Soon a free medical advice station is to be installed.

$1,539 Yearly Paid Furniture Workers in Grand Rapids

(By The Federated Press)

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March 10.—The average wage paid employes of the Grand Rapids furniture industry during 1923 amounted to $1,539, according to figures made public by the employers. This is the highest level yet reached in the industry and represents an increase of 102 per cent over the wages paid in 1916 which amounted to $760. The number of wage earners on the payrolls also reached record proportions in 1923 when the daily average was 10,842.

In 1920, which was the high mark previous to 1923 the industry paid an average wage of $1,495 to 10,507 workers. The depression of 1921 reduced working forces to 7,916, involving a layoff of approximately 25 per cent. Average earnings during 1921, however, decreased by only 4 per cent to $1,437, according to the report.

Toller's Rebel Play Coming to the Theatre Guild

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 10.—Masse Mensch—freely translated, The Herd Spirit—a revolutionary play by the German dramatist, Ernest Toller, will be presented at the Garrick theater by the Theater Guild here in April.

Toller was closely involved in the Spartacist uprisings of 1919 and is now rounding out a five-year sentence in a Munich prison. He wrote this much-disputed play in one night, spending many subsequent months in retouching it. His most impressive work has been accomplished during his prison confinement. On several occasions, the performance of Masse Mensch in Germany was accompanied by disorders in the theaters. Louis Untermeyer has translated Toller's work, and Lee Simonson has designed the settings.

ASHLEIGH TELLS OF SOLIDARITY IN DOCKERS' STRIKE

Left Wing Committees on the Job

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BY CHARLES ASHLEIGH.

LONDON, Feb. 21.—(By Mail)—Today the docks are tied up completely. With the withdrawal of the men in the Stevedores' Union, the strike is complete. No work is being done in any of the ports.

The meat profiteers have raised the price of meat, out of all proportion to the scarcity, which, as a matter of fact, has not yet made itself felt. The longshoremen's union has proposed to the government that they will allow certain necessary stores to pass, if the government, on its side, will guarantee to prevent profiteering.

Sevral minor incidents have arisen out of the mass picketing. Three or four picketers have been fined in the courts for assaults on drivers of trucks who endeavor to enter the dock gates in order to load stores which are carried to the trucks by clerks, foreman and other employes who are—with but very scanty success—trying, in some measure, to replace the dockers.

Scab Goods Banned.

Drivers of trucks are also members of the Transport and General Workers' Union. The union has issued instructions to them that they are not to handle any goods from the docks. This order has been rigidly obeyed, and, as a result, about 5,000 men have been directly affected, and about 10,000 more, indirectly. The union has issued a warning to all employers of teamsters in the London area that "should they attempt to continue to victimize members of the union for carrying out the union's instructions, the whole of the drivers, regardless of their work, will be called out." It must be understood that these teamsters are making no demands of their own, of the bosses, but are merely demonstrating their solidarity for their fellow members who are on strike on the docks.

Labor Officially Supports Strike.

The General Council of the Trade Union Congress, the highest official trade union body in Britain, has officially endorsed the strike, pledging the full support of British unionism.

Other strikes, which have broken out in London since the dockers' strike commenced, are a strike of meat porters, in the Smithfield Meat Market, and about one thousand omnibus drivers—also members of the Transport and General Workers' Union. These strikers are for special objects, independent of the dock strike, but, arising at this juncture, and being of a spontaneous nature, they are of great importance. For one thing, they signalize a general resumption of militancy among the transport workers of all grades.

At the same time, it is rumored that the road transport workers of Britain are shortly going to hold a national conference on wages and conditions; and many branches of the railroad workers' unions are sending in demands to their executives for a conference to draw up demands for improved rates of pay.

Left Wing Activities.

The Communist Party of Great Britain and the British Bureau of the Red International of Labor Unions are by no means inactive amid all this strife. The members of the party are assisting the strikers by every means in their power. The party units have proffered their services to the strike committees in all parts of the country.

A leaflet has been issued, calling upon workers in all branches of the transport industry to stand solidly by the striking longshoremen. Special reference is made to seamen. The activities of the Red International of Labor Unions in this line are now increasing, with the publication of a special seaman's paper, "The International Seafarer," in London. Under the auspices of the Red International of Labor Unions, a Provisional Transport Workers' Solidarity Committee has been formed, consisting of left-wing representatives of all branches of the transport industry. These committees are both national and local. Comrade George Hardy, secretary of the Marine Transport Workers' Section of the International Propaganda Committee of Revolutionary Transport Workers of the Red International Labor Unions, is secretary of the Solidarity Committee. The leaflet, which is being distributed in large quantities in all ports, after stating the objects of the strike, goes on to say:

R. I. L. U. Solidarity Cry.

> "Are we to let the dockers fight alone? No! We cannot work while our brothers are on strike ashore. When the lines are made fast, seamen are finished, unless they are prepared to blackleg their fellow workers.
>
> "Dockers and seamen should form joint committees locally and nationally and make united demands. We work for the same bosses; the fight is a common fight. To achieve victory, all marine workers in docks must be inactive ashore and afloat. Not a rail, road or sea transport worker must b found aiding the shipowners.
>
> "Form your Transport Worker Solidarity Committees in ever port. Urge your national official to make demands for ALL tra port workers. A united front of a transport workers will render i effective the threats of the shi owners to reduce seamen's wage will raise wages of the road trans port workers and will recover some of the losses of the railwaymen.
>
> "Success in solidarity—defeat in division!
>
> "No compromise! No co promise!
>
> "One National Settlement! A National Victory!

The workers in the various po are reading this manifesto with i terest, and many are admitting t logic of its contents. A closer so darity among all branches of t great transport industry should be t result of this timely and vigoro agitation.

NEWARK YIELDS FREE SPEECH TO WORKERS PARTY

Foster to Speak—Was Arrested Before

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEWARK, N. J., March 10.—The police of Newark will not interfere, by threats or otherwise, with meetings held in Newark halls "for lawful discussions," according to a letter from Assistant Corporation Counsel Joseph G. Wolber received recently by John Larkin Hughes, Newark attorney for the Civil Liberties Union. The letter was sent following a conference of the Newark Law department with Director of Safety Brennan.

"You can rest assured that the constitutional and legal rights of citizens to assemble and freely speak, as defined by the New Jersey courts, will not be disregarded," the letter declares.

Foster Will Speak.

As a result of this promise, William Z. Foster, who was arrested together with Bishop Paul Jones while speaking at a meeting in Newark on Jan. 11, and was later denied permission to speak at any time, will speak in that city within three weeks, it was announced today by the Civil Liberties Union. The Foster meeting will be held under the auspices of the Labor Defense Council.

The free speech conference of the Newark officials was an outcome of the recent trial of four members of the Workers Party who were arrested following the breaking up by the police of a Lenin memorial meeting on Feb. 1, and of the arrest of Foster and Bishop Paul Jones following the breaking up of a Labor Defense Council meeting on Jan. 11.

Suits for False Arrest.

Suits for false arrest were filed against Newark police officials by the Civil Liberties Union on behalf of Foster and Bishop Jones. The four Workers Party members arrested at the Lenin memorial meeting on Feb. 1 were fined $20 each. They were Dr. Alexander Trachtenberg, former instructor of economics at Yale; Ludwig Lore, editor of the Volkszeitung; Constant Chriss and David Kaplan of Newark.

During the trial of the four men on Feb. 14, Police Judge Horace Grice said he was "glad this case has come up, for we don't know where we stand on free speech in Newark." He suggested a conference among Newark officials and the Civil Liberties Union attorney to arrange for an amicable settlement whereby meetings similar to those halted by the police might be held in public halls without official disturbance. Conferences were held and Corporation Counsel Wolber's letter to Attorney Hughes was the result.

Workers Pay More to Live Than They Did One Year Ago

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Cost of living increased during the year period, Feb. 15, 1923, to Feb. 15, 1924, in 21 cities as follows: Peoria, [illegible] per cent; Newark, 5 per cent; Atlanta, Buffalo, Detroit, Kansas City, Louisville, Pittsburgh, and St. Louis, 4 per cent; Baltimore, Minneapolis, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Rochester, and Salt Lake City, 3 per cent; and Boston, Portland, Me., St. Paul, Richmond, and Washington, D. C., 2 per cent. These facts are shown by the United States Department of Labor bureau of labor statistics.

As compared with the average cost in the year 1913, the retail cost of food on Feb. 15, 1924, was 55 per cent higher in Richmond; 54 per cent in Washington, D. C.; 53 per cent in Baltimore and New York; 52 per cent in Buffalo and Detroit; 51 per cent in Pittsburgh; 50 per cent in Boston; 49 per cent in Philadelphia; [illegible]8 per cent in New Haven and St. Louis; 47 per cent in Newark; 46 per cent in Minneapolis; 45 per cent in Atlanta; 44 per cent in Kansas City; 37 per cent in Louisville; and 25 per cent in Salt Lake City.

Chamber of Commerce Is Reopening Fight for State Cossack Bill

"The Illinois chamber of commerce continues vigorously its campaign for a state police," declares its official organ. In a recent editorial it says that lawyers, doctors, preachers and other guardsmen lose a lot of time and money every time they have to shoulder guns and march out with the national guard.

"Is there any way this loss of time and money can be made up to these men," the organ asks. "Certainly not in the wages they receive, the chow with which they are fed, the hard beds on which they lie. How then?"

The answer is obvious and easy.

"A well equipped state police force on the job all the time. Men, who are well paid, well fed, well housed and who make protection a profession."

That would relieve the lawyer and doctor and preacher rookies and let them get back to upper class chow and soft beds, the open shop organ argues.

Suggestions to Speakers at Free Speech Test Meetings

1.—The most important point to bear in mind is that free speech can be won only by speaking.

When unlawful obstacles are placed in the way, the meeting should, if possible, be held notwithstanding, and the speeches made.

If the authorities interfere unlawfully, it may be desirable for the speaker to continue until arrested or forcibly prevented from continuing, if counsel advises that by such a course a clear-cut issue of free speech can be successfully raised.

That issue can generally be raised successfully if the interference takes place on private property where there is no technical violation of laws as to admission fees, fire regualtions, obstruction of traffic, and the like. It is important to bear in mind that police orders are not law nor are the edicts of officials other than courts or judges. When injunctions are issued or legal proceedings pending, no step which may give rise to a contempt proceeding should be taken except upon the advise of counsel. For in contempt proceedings the legal question is often as to the existence of the judicial power rather than as to the propriety of its exercise. A person who thinks that he has raised a big question of fundamental rights by risking punishment for contempt of a wrongful court order may often find that he has merely raised a side issue.

2. No speaker should submit to preliminary censorship by the police or other authority. No authority has the right to censor in advance what he has to say. Speakers should however, bear in mind that the usual purpose of test meetings is to establish the right to speak, not to test the validity of laws penalizing certain kinds of speech or advocacy. They should refrain from predictions, prophecies or suggestions which hostile interpretation might twist into violations of criminal syndicalism and sedition statutes.

3. In case the police close the hall and thus prevent scheduled meeting from taking place, efforts should be made to secure another meeting place. Even if it involves having a much smaller audience. At any rate, the newspapers are going to run the fact that the hall was closed by the police, and if the publicity man is on his job, all that is said at the smaller meeting (even if it is held in a private house) can be given to the newspapers and will get space. The important point is to show that even in the face of unlawful police opposition, those who believe in free speech are determined to hold their meeting at whatever cost. Before resorting to another location, every effort should be made to get the police to open the hall and rescind their orders.

4. If the meeting is stopped after it starts and the police attempt to adjourn it without arresting any speaker, an arrest should be forced, unless it would involve danger of disorder by others than the police. The best way to force the arrest is to keep on speaking. If the police refuse to arrest but endeavor to molest the speakers by putting hands on them, it constitutes a case of assault. Witnesses should be secured and a case brought against the offending officers, or, if possible, their responsible superiors. Whoever has charge of the meeting should refuse to adjourn upon the orders of a police officer if the officers refuse to make an arrest, so that the issue can be tested in the courts. If the officer attempts to disperse the audience, he may advise the audience to stay in their places unless there is risk of disorder and violence. Persons wrongfully arrested should, upon their release, bring civil suits against the officials responsible. Theoretically, of course, the public authorities ought to proceed against law-breaking officials. Experience has shown, however, that they are unlikely to do so and that when they do they are apt to conduct them faint-heartedly. In England notable vindications of civil liberty have been obtained by private suits.

5. If a speaker is unlawfully arrested and the meeting allowed to proceed, see that a red-hot protest is made against the conduct of the police and send a committee from the meeting to police headquarters to make a protest and to see if something cannot be done to get the speaker released without further proceedings. Send the committee to the daily newspaper offices to give an accurate account of what happened. Otherwise the newspapers will get the story from the police.

6. Where meetings have been interfered with by official lawlessness, state a protest meeting for the earliest practicable date. At that meeting make the subject only that of the right of free speech, repeating in substance what was said at the previous meeting as an evidence of exercising that right. Get persons not connected with the meeting and as of great prominence as possible in the community either to address the meeting or to sit on the platform. Get a signed protest from prominent ministers, lawyers, officials and other sympathizers and see that it reaches the newspapers. Have a written resolution adopted at the meeting and signed by as many of those present as possible. Have this transmitted to the police and to the newspapers.

7. Publicity. Wherever there is any issue of free speech or assemblage, it is important to get the newspapers to see it. To that end it is essential to furnish them with copy. Get to the city editors directly either with a clear statement of the facts thru someone who knows how to talk to a newspaper man or thru statements written out in advance. The best thing to do is to employ a local publicity man who is familiar with the local newspaper (and with the wire services out of the community whenever any issue of more than local significance is involved.) It is important also to see the chief writers of each of these papers quite independent of the news story, so that they will understand the facts, and not base their editorials upon biased hostile reports.

8. In all cases where arrests are likely at a free speech meeting, an able attorney should be consulted in advance and engaged to be present. His advice will often assist the speakers and managers to raise in a clear-cut fashion the definite issue of free speech which officials (under cover of unevenly enforced local ordinances as to traffic, permits, collection of funds, safety appliances, etc.) are often astute to prevent. Bail should be provided for. The attendance of disinterested and responsible witnesses should be procured.

Germany is Willing To Enter League With Soviet Russia

BERLIN, Germany, March 10.—Germany is willing to enter the League of Nations provided there are no specific conditions for admission, according to a speech delivered in the Reichstag by Gustav Stresseman foreign minister.

Stresseman does not want to submit Germany to any further appearance before a tribunal composed of allied nations and do penance for the crime of having started the world war. He will insist that Russia be asked to join at once.

It is stated that Germany is tied to Russia by links forged at the Geneva conference when the two outlawed nations patched up a treaty which left the allies sucking their thumbs in dismay.

Britain displays considerable nervousness over the thought of a restoration of German productivity on the basis of Franco-German or German-American co-operation.

The militarist spirit is growing rapidly in Germany and this can be noted in the increasing militancy of the speeches made by the Berlin government officials.

RUSS CLOTHING SYNDICATE SHOWS PRODUCTION GAIN

Industrial Progress Is Told by RAIC

NEW YORK, March 10.—The board of directors of the Russian-American Industrial Corporation at its second annual stockholders' meeting on Tuesday reported a satisfactory year's business in rendering economic aid to Soviet Russsia.

The report shows that the activities of the corporation have been confined to its investment in the All-Russian Clothing Syndicate, Inc., the perfection of facilities for forwarding dollars to Russia thru the Amalgamated Bank of New York and the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, the purchase of some $50,000 worth of machinery and supplies for the Russian clothing factories, and services performed for other Russian businesses, chiefly in supplying information on trade with America.

Emphasizing the importance of the transmission business the report shows that some $3,000,000 have already been transferred to Rusian citizens by friends and relatives in America. The present rate of transmission is now over $20,000 per day.

Where the Factories Are.

The All-Russian Clothing Syndicate has factories at Moscow, Leningrad, Kharkov, Kazan and Nizhni Novgorod; and district sales departments at Moscow, Kiev, Rostov, Samara, Ekaterinburg, Novonikolayevsk and Irkutsk. Other branches of the selling organization are at Kharkov, Poltawa, Bachmut, Krasnodar, Tzaritzin, Astrakhan, Orenburg, Ufa, Simbirsk, Syzran, Buguruslan, Omsk, Perm, Petropavlovsk Kustanai, Tomsk, Semipalatinsk, Krasnoyarsk, Vologda, Viatka, Ekatirinoslav, Kaluga and Tchelabinsk. Important agencies of the syndicate are also in Baku, Kursk, Odessa, Tashkent, Nikolayev, Cherson and Tiflis. The branches are growing both in size and in number.

The director's report quotes Bricker, the head of the Leningrad Clothing Trust—"the production per man has gradually increased in the last two years and a suit can now be made in just half the time it took pre-war." The manager of the syndicate is quoted as follows: "The quality of work in Moscow has been raised to the level of the average quality of ready-made clothes in America. The labor cost to make a man's suit or overcoat amounts at present to not more than 7 gold rubles."

Production Increase.

Referring to the production program for the present year the report shows that the syndicate's factories will produce 25 per cent more this year than last. The plan of the syndicate for the coming year includes the purchase of $12,390,000 worth of made-up goods from the clothing trust working under it and the furnishing of raw materials to the trusts up to the same value. The production program of goods to be furnished by the syndicate during 1924 by the famous Moscow Experimental Factory and the Leningrad and Kharkov trusts includes 883,200 pieces of underwear, 394,100 special working garments, 239,650 peasant shirts, trousers and jackets, 279,050 pieces of civilian clothing and 78,250 fur garments, making a total of 1,874,250 garments, a considerable increase over the output for the same units during 1923. This, of course, covers only a part of the goods produced by all the syndicate's factories which will total over three times this amount.

Co-operative Marketing

The Russian-American Corporation's directors report dealt also with the great improvement in the distribution end of the syndicate and the new system of direct sales to co-operatives in factories, mills and mines. At present more than 50 per cent of the clothes made by the syndicate are marketed thru these channels. All the clothes made by the syndicates are sold in Russia.

Summarizing the operations of the syndicate the directors' report shows that the profits of the Russian enterprise amounted to more than 10 per cent of the invested capital.

General Von Lossow May Be Tried for Beer Cellar Revolt

MUNICH, March 10.—General Von Lossow was called to the stand as the trial of General Eric Ludendorff and others accused of fomenting the abortive "beer cellar putsch" of last November was resumed here today.

Von Lossow, who was a military commander in Bavaria at the time of the outbreak, proved an unwilling witness and was granted permission by the court to refuse to answer incriminating questions.

The judge ruled that while Von Lossow is not yet a defendant investigation which is perhaps preliminary to his arrest has been instituted against him.

Industrial Disease Dangers.

NEW YORK CITY, March 10.—One out of every three thousand wage earners in New York was killed in the last fiscal year while at work or died from injury or disease suffered or contracted at his work, according to a statement issued today by the Workers' Health Bureau urging that "the occupational disease section of the New York state compensation law requires drastic revision."

Clothing Workers Give Last Concert of Winter Season

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Concerts given by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers came to a close with a packed hall at the Carmen's Auditorium. Alexander Zukovsky, violinist of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, directed a small ensemble of some sixteen Symphony men, and there were four soloists, Jacques Gordon, violinist; Joseph Brinkman, pianist; Ivan Dneproff, tenor of the Russian Opera Company, and Herman Eck, flutist.

The orchestral part of the program brought to performance two important works that have not been heard on the regular Symphony bill for some time. The first was the Mendelssohn overture, "Fingal's Cave." The other was the movement called "In the Village," from a suite of Caucasian sketches by Ippolitoff-Ivanoff, the Bolshevik director of the Moscow Conservatory of Music.

Celia Goldman, a "juvenile classical and athletic dancer," as the program described her, won considerable applause with her jumps and leaps and steps.

Mr. Dneproff has a magnificent voice, and the songs he sang, some operatic arias in Italian and Russian, made his audience go wild with approval. It was most interesting to hear how this big voice of beautiful quality overcame the tricky and ungrateful acoustics of the Ashland Auditorium and filled the hall.

A critic of one of the large dailies recently said, with perfect truth, that there are no more bad pianists or violinists. So to say that Mr. Brinkman and Mr. Gordon are fine musicians is bromidic. Both played some of their own work, Mr. Brinkman some of his compositions, Gordon some of his arrangements. And when pianists and violinists are capable of writing as well as performing as Gordon and Brinkman do, they are deserving of all the approving adjectives in the critic's vocabulary, be they ever so bromidic.

Thus closed the fifth season of concerts given by the union. And concerts are only a part of the general scheme of workers' education carried on by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Wanted! Volunteers to Help Bazaar of National Defense

NEW YORK, March 10.—The National Defense Committee issues the following appeal to unemployed comrades for volunteers needed for the Third Annual International Bazaar, to be held April 10-13, at Central Opera House:

Clerical—10,000 letters must be out by March 15. Any one out of work can help any time during the day, including Saturday afternoons and Wednesday evenings.

Dressmakers needed to make dresses and other apparel for the bazaar from material donated for that purpose.

Milliners needed to make hats. Also committees to solicit materials and hats.

Please report to the office, 80 East 11th Street, Room 434. Telephone Stuyvesant 6616.

CAT-O-NINE-TAILS USED ON CHAIN GANGS IN SOUTH

50 Strokes from Salt Greased Lashes

By JACK METTE

(Staff Correspondent of The Federated Press)

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 10.—In the good old south we send our prisoners, especially those who have a family and cannot pay the usual $25 fine, to the chain gang to build roads.

The judge smiles when he sentences you to the gang and says he hopes it will make a better man of you. When the police catch a hobo down here, if they cannot find something serious to charge him with, they send him to the gang for 90 days for luck.

Build Road With Blood.

It has not been so many months ago that the country was stirred up over the cruel death of Martin Tabert at the hands of a Florida chain gang whipping boss. Did that stop the whippings? It did not. In North Carolina and Alabama conditions are worse than in the old salt mines of Siberia. North Carolina has good roads but it took the blood and strength of her prisoners to do it.

If a prisoner is sick and unable to work the boss has a good cure. The lash soaked in salt grease to the tune of 50 strokes is the usual dose for all sickness.

One of the North Carolina camps is at Fayetteville. The six-foot ignorant chain gang boss is allowed to knock young boys (some of them under 16 years of age) over the head with pick handles and to whip them with a cat-o-nine-tails until they cannot stand on their feet. The same food is provided day in and day out. Syrup and corn bread for breakfast. Peas and corn bread for dinner. Syrup and corn bread again for supper.

Saw Beating.

Last summer I talked with many of the prisoners. I checked up on their stories and found them to be true. Young men whose only offense is riding a freight train are thrown into these filthy holes with men suffering from terrible diseases and are forced to bathe in the same water. Ten men, four colored, were forced to bathe in a small tub of water, without changing the water. I saw a young Jewish boy hit over the head and back with a pick handle.

Alabama has the same rotten system. They hire the convicts out by the day to the coal trust to dig coal for the company for a few cents a day. Conditions are as bad if not worse than those existing in North Carolina.

Greek Cabinet Quits; Regent Offers Job To Republican Leader

ATHENS, March 10.—Greece is looking for a cabinet but it is not easy to find a man willing to take the job. Tho several statesmen have been out of work for some time, applications for the position of premier are conspicuous by their absence They have a habit here in Greece to bring out their shooting irons on the slightest provocation and once a statesmen is indicted, he stands as much show of an acquittal as an American communist before a 100 per cent American jury.

"Shoot them first; try them afterwards," is the popular way of handling out justice to unpopular Greek cabinets. The Greek cabinets are growing more responsive to pressure than they used to. The last one quit when an army corps appeared and offered it an ultimatum to resign or fight. The cabinet jumped out the windows.

The army is sick of the king and wants a republic. Venizelos is going to leave the country.

British Soap Magnate Wants Black Men to Play Donkey Role

SYDNEY, New South Wales, Mar. 10.—Protests have been made by all sections of political thought, as by commercial and industrial interests against suggestions made by Lord Leverhulme, the head of the British soap making industry, that black labor should be introduced into Australia to do the "donkey work."

Leverhulme said he had 25,000 blacks in his employ in his various plantations thruout the world and they suited him right down to the ground. He also claimed that the Negroes in the south in the United States had proved a boon to the employers.

Mormon Solon Fears House Tax Bill Will Not Meet U. S. Needs

WASHINGTON, March 10—As the Senate Finance Committee recently sought sources of $100,000,000 more revenue in the new tax bill, the House Ways and Means Committee prepared to report a soldier bonus bill.

Chairman Smoot of the Finance Committee believes the tax bill as passed by the House will fall $100,000,000 short of meeting government expenses next year, even if a bonus bill does not become law. What sources of revenue will be tapped are yet undecided, he said.

Four Plans Up.

Winding up its hearing on the bonus bill, the House Ways and Means Committee, plunged into consideration of four plans, as follows:

1.—A straight cash bonus.

2.—A straight paid up insurance bonus.

3.—A cash bonus with a paid up insurance option.

4.—A four fold plan with option of $50 cash, deferred payment certificates, vocational training and home and farm aid.

Senators Watson, Indiana, and Moses, New Hampshire, today began a poll of the Senate to determine sentiment on the tax bill. A "horse back" survey by leaders indicates the Democrats and Progressives may join to restore the Garner plan with a maximum surtax of 44 per cent on $92,000.

Haiti.

W. W. Cumberland has been named by the department of state as the financial adviser on Haitian customs and taxes. By the department of state of Haiti? G'wan! By THE department of state—the state department of the American Empire.

Honduras.

The manipulated revolution that has come as an aftermath of American umpiring of a deadlocked election in Honduras has caused the U. S. to send down another battleship on the Pacific coast. The battleship Milwaukee has just entered the port of Amapala to keep company with the Rochester of the Atlantic fleet. With modern big guns the two ships between them can fire clear across this little country, can start or stop revolutions and make or unmake presidents according to the oil-lection umpire's decisions.

* * * *

Argentina.

All interest in the most powerful labor organization of Argentina, the U. S. A. (Union Sindical Argentina) is centered in the question, Amsterdam, Berlin or Moscow? The next congress will decide the question of affiliation and the papers are full of the pros and cons. Amsterdammers almost do not exist. I have yet to see a single article in any Argentinjan labor paper in favor of Amsterdam. The tendencies of the U. S. A. are anarcho-syndicalist and the majority of the papers of the country are in Anarchist hands. But the drift toward the Red International is so strong, that they are not advocating affiliation with Berlin, but merely attacking Moscow. Moreover, they are prejudiced against Berlin on account of its splitting tactics, being all united-fronters and bitterly attacking their own "divisionista" Anarchists at home.

The Berliners have formed a little labor federation of their own called the F. O. R. A. (Federation Obrera Regional Argentina). The press of the majority unions distinguishes its anarchism from that of the F. O. R. A. by calling itself the New Anarchism (which term is much heard in South America now that the younger anarchist unionists are revising their concepts of organization and struggle in terms of a united front and class organization rather than individualism). To what is left of the F. O. R. A. they apply the term Quintista, Divisionista or Purista—the last being the equivalent of the English term "purist."

Consequently, the Anarchists in the U. S. A. in place of advocating Berlin, either attack Moscow or confine themselves to advocating a Pan-American relationship in place of an international one. This the Red-Internationalists characterize as "Gompersism."

Colombia.

When the Colombian Tenants' league boycotted the Theater Colombia because it refused to permit them to hold meetings and began picketing the place the management offered anti-labor propaganda films made in the United States. The picket lines increased. Then the government, consisting of men of wealth, used its position against the Tenants league.

The day that the boycott was extended to all the branches of the theatrical company in the entire republic and big demonstrations were planned, the police and military fired on the workers and then invaded the labor headquarters. The women's committee in Barranquilla went to the governor's palace to protest. While Maria del Mulato was appealing to the governor to lift the decree against it the Tenants' union, the military, in the presence of the governor, attacked the committee of women, driving them out at the end of the bayonet.

Maria del Mulato, with a suckling child, is in prison, as is another woman, who headed the committee. Mere membership in the Tenants' league is now sufficient to merit a jail sentence. For Nicolas Gutarra, one of the league leaders, the order was issued: "Capture N. Gutarra in any form."

A vigorous protest on the part of the Cuban labor movement is the prelude to a storm of Latin-American protest against this brutality.

Organize Capital Chauffeurs.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10.—A taxicab chauffeurs' union is being organized here by A. F. of L. organizers. The union will take action to regulate hours and improve wages.

Zinoviev's Speech to Leningrad Communists

(NOTE—The DAILY WORKER today publishes the second installment of the great speech delivered by Gregory Zinoviev to the party conference of the Leningrad District. Those of our readers who have read lurid reports of war between communist leaders should follow this discussion closely. It is true that Trotsky had a difference of opinion over questions of party organization with Zinoviev and others. But the enemies of the Soviet Republic may rest assured that a discussion on tactics will not give them the opening to rush in their war dogs and lap up the blood of the emancipated Russian workers. A further installment will be published tomorrow).

* * * *

ZINOVIEV CONTINUES:

It goes without saying that it is a perfectly unavoidable circumstance that we have been obliged to absorb the best and most mature Communist forces for the purpose of state leadership, and have taken these from the workshops and factories. We could not have otherwise formed the Red Army, or the economic, administrative, and Soviet organs.

It is perfectly comprehensible that the Party governing the state has to concentrate a considerable portion of its numbers in the state institutions. Despite this it appears to me, comrades, that if we adopt a correct attitude we have well-founded prospects of increasing the number of the members in the shops and factories; in my opinion this is one of our most important tasks.

Intensification of Party Work.

Another question is that of the intensification of Party work, of the intensification of the inner Party democracy. Those comrades who point out that this question was raised at the Tenth Party Congress, and that the resolutions passed by the Tenth Congress have not been fully carried out, in some cases not carried out at all, are perfectly right.

We put this question in the year 1921, and passed a fairly good resolution on the question of inner Party democracy. The reasons why this resolution has not been carried out are substantially objective in nature.

Let us cast our memory back to that time. What were the working people of Petrograd interested in at that time?

The situation was extraordinarily difficult. The workers were chiefly and above all interested in their morsel of bread. You will doubtless be able to recollect the atmosphere obtaining at that time in a number of other proletarian centers.

When passing over to the NEP, we formulated our fresh tasks at the same time. But at that time we could not perform them, for the working class was divided and declassed, and the subject which occupied every workman all and every day, and which hung like a leaden weight about his neck, was the question of the potato ration.

We are now putting the question under much more favorable circumstances. The fundamental difference in conditions lies in the fact that the declassing process in the working class has ceased.

The proletariat, which melted, split, and became declassed during the first years of the revolution, is now beginning to gather together again to a compact mass. This is the cardinal circumstance changing the situation.

Benefitted by Political Experience.

The same workmen who have been pulling in different directions all these years, are now coming into our works and factories, and bringing with them the political experience garnered and increased during these years. They have shared with us the first successes won on the economic field. These successes, comrades, are still very small—we need not deceive ourselves, but they are dear to us for the very reason that they are the "very first" ones.

The feeling that we have gained our first economic success is seizing the broad masses of the conscientious non-partisan workers. A wholesome atmosphere of production is to be felt, which was not the case before, but which was necessary if all our talk on the development of the Party was not based upon sand. Bad or good—wages have been raised, the productivity of work has increased, and discipline in production has improved.

I stated that the failure to put the resolutions of 1921 into actual practice had been mainly caused by objective obstacles. But there were subjective reasons too, dependent on us and our organization. These subjective reasons are to be classified in two groups. one of these is the mechanical nature of our organization. It was very difficult for us to get underway, to run on new lines from war Communism to the new epoch.

The other group of causes is explained by our inadequate cultural level—this is one of the fundamental causes confronting us at every step of the way. There exists a certain minimum of political schooling, of political learning capacity, of political and general culture, without which many of the best resolutions are condemned to hang fire.

Bolshevism and Workers' Democracy

I have already stated, at the functionaries' meeting, that Bolshevism has not always held its present attitude in the question of the workers' democracy. There was a time when Bolshevism, in view of the objective conditions obtaining in our country, expressed itself in opposition to a broad degree of adherence to the principle of election within the Party. There was such a period up to the revolution of 1905.

It was in a great measure along these lines that our split with the Mensheviki ran. The Mensheviki followed the demagogic line of "democracy" and "election" even under circustances rendering adherence to these principles impossible.

I should like to remind you of an article written by Comrade Lenin, entitled: "We Do Not Get Fat on the Song of the Nightingale."

The reason why I refer to this article is as follows: It dealt with an occurrence in January, 1905, in the midst of the struggle between the Mensheviki and the Bolsheviki. The Mensheviki accused the Bolsheviki, and especially Comrade Lenin, of being opposed to democracy within the Party, of not wanting to allow the workers to hold leading positions in the Party, of being Jacobins, conspirators, exaggerated centralists, etc. At that time a pamphlet appeared on "The Tasks of the Party," written by a Menshevist, a workman, who signed himself as a "workman."

Menshevist Viewpoint.

Paul Axelrod, one of the oldest leaders of the Menshevism, wrote the preface to this pamphlet, thus imparting a tremendous significance to it. The Menshevist worker maintained in this brochure that the Mensheviki promise much with regard to democracy, but do nothing to realise it—they also permit the intelligenzia to reign in the Party.

Comrade Lenin replied with the article entitled: "We Do Not Get Fat on the Song of the Nightingale," in which he observed: "You see that even your workman Menshevist says that we will not be robbed of without the principles of election at mere phrases, and that if you are in favor of democracy, you must really go over to an electoral system, to systematic regulation of accounts, etc. But it is impossible to carry present."

3,000 KLANSMEN HEAR WOBBLIES SING SOLIDARITY

Harbor City Flooded by Nightie Gang

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAN PEDRO, Calif., March 10.—San Pedro was flooded by white gowned klansmen in a nocturnal parade of the hooded order against the Industrial Workers of the World who shut down the harbor last year and are talking of another strike this spring.

It is estimated that more than 3,000 members of the Koo Koos took part in the procession that mobilized on Harbor Boulevard in their nighties and began encircling the town in a snake-like formation, with flaming cross and American flag in the fore.

Searchlights.

Searchlights swept Liberty Hill where the marine workers usually meet and the klansmen whispered to each other the ferocious things they were ready to do. But, after marching round and round the town they finally arrived at the wobbly hall at Twelfth and Centre streets, where they did nothing.

They did nothing but march around the hall while the workers sang Ralph Chaplin's "Solidarity" from the inside. So the klansmen marched and listened, and—whether they remembered what happened to their sister organization, the Legion, at Centralia when an illegal raid was made on a union headquarters or not—they went away as they had come, with thousands of persons who had gathered in the expectation of something happening going away with nothing to entertain them but the spectacle of a pantomime.

Hundreds of Autos.

The demonstrating Kluxers had come to San Pedro from all parts of Southern California in hundreds of automobiles—their ghastly robes gleaming as they whizzed thru the darkness.

The Klan has gained greatly in this part of California since the big strike for political prisoners last year when this port of Los Angeles was tied up for five weeks, causing a loss of several million dollars.

Police partly made up for the failure of the Klan to act. They invaded the headquarters themselves in the absence of the Klan and arrested 15.

Frisco Workers Will Celebrate Paris Commune

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SAN FRANCISCO, March 10—The Paris Commune will be celebrated Saturday night at 225 Valencia street with music, dancing and an address by Marvin Sanford of the Young Workers League. Friday the 14th a mass meeting will be held for the starving German workers at California Hall, Polk and Turk streets.

Independence for the Philippines will be demanded at a mass meeting at California Hall. Jack Carney, editor of Labor Unity, will preside and the speakers will be: Abdon Llorente, Philippine Commercial attache; Gabriel Q. Arellano, editor of the Philippine Independent News of Salinas, former secretary of the Filipino Laborers Union of Hawaii and James H. Dolsen, district organizer of the Workers Party.

May 30 Convention Asked by Oregon Farmer-Labor Party

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PORTLAND, Ore., March 10.—The Farmer-Labor party of Oregon was formally launched at a meeting at 455 Alder street here and declares that it will work in conjunction with the national farmer-labor movements that demand a May 30 convention.

Organizers will cover the state and expect to organize a powerful 1924 campaign. Otto Newman was chosen state chairman; Franklin L. Rusmisel, secretary-treasurer; A. L. Knarnopp, vice-chairman and state organizer.

The state executive committee was elected as follows: Otto Newman, Franklin L. Rusmisel, A. L. Karnopp, and P. L. Turner. Temporary headquarters have been opened at 455 Alder street.

Ice Cream Bosses Surrender to All Union's Demands

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, March 10.—The lockout in the confectionery workers' trade here has been settled after a three weeks' struggle, the employers surrendering completely to the union's demands. Actually, only the ice cream cone makers were involved, tho they received the unstinted support of the Amalgamated Food Workers. The settlement establishes the union shop, replaces the unlimited working week with the 48-hour week, and provides for a wage increase from $35 to $40 weekly. The agreement can be terminated by either party and is not valid for any fixed period. Its importance lies in the failure of the employers' campaign for the open shop.

COMMUNISM IS SPREADING IN ERIN, SAYS LAD

Splendid Propaganda Done in Prison Camps

That Communist propaganda is spreading thru Ireland in spite of all obstacles is revealed in a letter from a young Irish Communist who has just passed his fifteenth birthday, to his uncle here in Chicago.

There were approximately fifteen thousand radicals and republicans in Irish Free State prisons until the recent releases took place. There are still about 5,000 locked up.

The Communist Party which was obliged to liquidate since this letter was written was severely hit by the arrests, many of the most militant members being incarcerated.

The letter follows:

150 North Strand Road,
Dublin, Ireland.

Dear Uncle:—Most of the Communist prisoners have been released. During their imprisonment they did fine propaganda work among their fellow prisoners and internees, by delivering lectures and distributing literature, so that there is not the least doubt that the gospel of communism and working class freedom will be carried by hundreds of exprisoners to the remotest corner of Ireland.

The Communist Party has lost many of its members, and owing to lack of funds it has been forced to suspend its paper, The Workers' Republic. Larkin has conducted a great fight against the Labor Party but he did not as yet (nor is it expected that he will) define once and for all his attitude toward Communism, or the different political parties of Ireland. There is not a word spoken about the food ship or the money collected for it at all.

The Hunger Strike—as I am sure you know from the papers—proved a great failure due to the low morale of the people. Larkin proclaimed a general strike as a protest against a continued detention of the hunger strikers, but due to the fact that he did not have control over the machinery of the trades unions which are in the hands of the reformists and Social Democrats the strike did not come off.

I will send you a few back numbers of the Workers' Republic in a week's time. If you have not already done so, buy and read THE IRISH PEOPLE, an excellent magazine published in Chicago to which Liam O'Flaherty contributes.

Hillquit Labelled 'Red' No Longer by Headline Writers

By SHERMAN BOWMAN
(Special to The Daily Worker)

DETROIT, March 10.—All confusion as to "Who Are the Reds" has disappeared, said Robert Minor, speaking to a large audience at the Labor Forum under the auspices of the Workers' Educational Association.

"We can all remember when, a few years ago," he went on, "the word 'Red' was applied to any one of an assortment that ranged from the polite, philosophic readers of the works of Bakunin all the way around the circle again to Morris Hillquit. But today when a capitalist newspaper head writer, over a story dealing with street fighting in Berlin, for example, refers to 'Reds,' he means Communists. The 'Reds' today are the Communists everywhere.

Control of the United States government by the oil interests began 40 years ago, according to evidence Minor gave, when agents of oil interests began nominating presidents and buying their way to power thru increasingly extensive contributions to the campaign chests of the Republican and Democratic parties.

Cleveland Communists Announce Series of Lectures on Lenin

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The English (East Side) Branch of the Workers Party, announced that it has prepared a course of six lectures on "the history of the Russian Communist Party and the role of Lenin in the Communist Movement," to be delivered by Comrade John Brahtin at Swedish Hall, 1467 Addison Rd. near Wade Park avenue side entrance.

The lectures will be held on 2nd and 4th Thursday of each month on the following dates:

March 13—The Populist Movement in Russia.

March 27—Formation of the Russian Social-Democratic Party.

April 10—The Convention of 1903—The beginning of Menshevism and Bolshevism.

April 24—The Revolution of 1905 and its consequences.

May 8—The World War and the ascendency of the Bolsheviks.

May 22—Nikolai Lenin—The Man and his work.

Comrade Brahtin has made a study of the Russian Communist Movement and his lectures will be a treat to all those who will attend. Lectures start at 8 p. m. Admission free.

Australian Unions Move to Revise Court Fixed Wage

(By The Federated Press)

MELBOURNE, Australia, March 10.—Action is to be taken in the near future by the big unions thruout Australia to secure a revision of the basic wage by the federal arbitration court.

Union officials point out that dissatisfaction regarding the existing basic wage dates back to 1907 when it was determined. It is contended that the amount was fixed too low at that time. Due regard, it is considered, was not paid to casual work and the probability of stoppages owing to weather conditions.

It is also argued that the basic wage fixed by the court provides for a bare existence only, and does not constitute a reasonable living wage. Should the appeal of the unions be successful, it will mean a revision of practically every arbitration court judgment, affecting almost every worker on the Australian continent.

Doctor Says Ignorant Surgeons Amputate Limbs Where They Should Not Have Been: Writer Agrees

When doctors meet in convention their potential victims are liable to get a few tips that may be the means of cheating the undertaker of several honest dollars—or at least postponing the expense of a funeral.

After reading reports of speeches delivered at the congress of medical education and licensure recently held in the Congress Hotel, Chicago, one hesitates to decide whether it is not better to let the darned disease knock you out more or less painfully than suffer agony at the hands of a practitioner, which may only be a snappier introduction to the gravedigger.

Dr. Ernest A. Codman of Boston, declared that hospital records showed that "legs are amputated where they should not have been" and probably when they should not have been. He also stated that patients have died on the operating table "without the operating surgeon knowing for a certainty whether they should live or die."

This is by no means encouraging to prospective patrons of the operating room. The writer knows of a young man who went to a hospital in Boston to have a serious operation performed. The disease was diagnosed and the doctor who made the diagnosis agreed to perform the operation. But imagine the patient's surprise when, after he was strapped to the operating table, the said surgeon looked at him with thoughtful surprise and rather brusquely asked "What are you here for?"

Osteopaths, chiropractors and other "radicals" engaged in the lucrative calling of healing the wounded without pain, may take some comfort from the preceding remarks. But wait.

A man disappointed with the efforts of surgeons to relieve him of bodily ills hied forth to one who offered health in return for a modest financial consideration and a loyal, unquestioning belief. He entered a well rigged office, was received cordially and before he had time to say "Jack Robinson" he was thrown on a stretcher and severely pummelled by two husky "doctors" who took turns at the exercise.

They seemed to have a special grudge against the victim's neck, which they twisted violently, placing one knee against the patient's back while the head was slowly turned so that the owner could see straight behind him. The "doctors" were not entirely successful however, but they were persistent and succeeded in cracking the neck in two places.

This appeared to give them much satisfaction and filled them with new hope. Perhaps the durned neck would be more accommodating next day! Then the spine was attacked, the ribs pummeled and the shoulder blades assaulted vigorously. The groans of the sufferer fell on deaf ears. Science could not be disturbed.

Feeling somewhat groggy, after this experience the patient was hustled into another chamber where he was introduced to the mysteries of what looked like a radio machine. The "doctor" proceeded to tune up and the victim did not know whether he was in a beauty parlor or Station R. I. P. ready to send forth his death song to a waiting world.

For the latter treatment, however, the patient says a kind word. It is not very painful—immediately. Its after effects however, were by no means painless. He was assured the "reactions" would destroy the malicious germs under the skin, but it almost destroyed the germs' meal ticket as well. So far as the patient knows the germs are still doing business at the old stand.

The patient was almost as persistent as the doctors. He was under the impression when a child that the most obnoxious medicine was the best, that only a suffering sinner could enter the kingdom of heaven in short that the value of anything could be measured in proportion to the pain its possession caused. On the same principle he believed that only doctors who hurt were worth bothering with.

He returned for another trial. Since then he has been in bed hovering between life and death. The neck which registered the first efforts almost succumbed to the second attempt. As a result of the "adjustment" of certain parts of the central column of his neck, sound sometimes misses its way and wanders aimlessly around seeking egress thru the nasal and ear tubes, before finally stumbling into the regular channel. It is sad.

What are we to do about it? The business of tinkering with human bodies is a paying one. Sick people will insist on getting cured. Under this capitalist system even the work of looking after the health of the people—a most sacred duty — is looked at from the cold eye of profit rather than from the point of view of the welfare of the people. And in spite of attempts of honest doctors to remedy this situation, ignorant doctors and unscrupulous quacks with new cure-alls will be inflicted on humanity until the profit is taken out of medical science.

Russ-Roumanian Confab.

VIENNA, March 10.—The conference between Russia and Roumania is announced to begin here shortly. The discussions, which are expected to result in diplomatic recognition on the part of the two governments, will deal with both economic and political problems including the dispute over Bessarabia, which fell to Roumania as a part of the spoils of war. M. Krestinsky, Russian minister in Berlin, has been appointed by Moscow as its chief spokesman.

DROP IN WAGES, JOBS DECREASE, BUREAU REPORT

Average Pay of U. S. Factory Slave $25.63

By LELAND OLDS
(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

A drop of 4% in average weekly earnings within a single month coupled with the continued spread of unemployment are features in the January report of the U. S. department of labor covering employment in 7849 manufacturing establishments. The report shows that the average weekly pay of an American factory worker in January amounted to only $25.63, an amount insufficient to provide a normal family with the bare necessities of life.

The decline in the average pay envelope brings it to a level only 5½% above that of January, 1923. During the same period the cost of living, according to the conservative National Industrial Conference board, advanced approximately 4.1%. So the purchasing power of wages has increased only 1½% in the course of 12 months which have been described as unexampled prosperity. Annual reports of corporations showing profits running from $5 up to more than $40 a share of common stock show who takes the cream of prosperity.

Wages Below Living Cost Level.

Wages of millions of workers in January were below the level required to meet the year's increase in living costs. Some wages gained on prices but others remained at a standstill or even decreased. More than 40% of the wage earners covered by the report could purchase no more in January, 1924, than they could in January, 1923, while nearly 30% could purchase less. The unequal gains in the case of workers in 16 important industries are shown in the following table which shows average weekly earnings for January of each year:

	1923	1924
Slaughtering and meat packing	$22.90	$24.37
Cotton manufacture	17.26	18.32
Hosiery and knit goods	16.85	17.39
Wool manufacture	22.37	23.12
Men's clothing	26.50	26.60
Women's clothing	29.75	29.13
Iron and steel	27.40	29.18
Foundries and machine shops	27.66	29.12
Sawmills	18.20	19.90
Boots and shoes	22.84	22.76
Paper and pulp	24.92	26.29
Printing (newspaper)	35.34	36.56
Petroleum	31.42	31.41
Automobile	28.24	28.21
Car building and repair	26.06	26.82
Electric machinery, etc.	24.79	28.64

The report shows that manufacturing establishments have reduced their forces by 5% since June, 1923. Notable decreases during the last month are shows as follows: Meat packing 2.6%, confectionery 13%, baking 2.1%, cotton manufacture 2.4%, dyeing and finishing textiles 10.3%, foundries and machine shops 5%; saw mills 3.3%, furniture factories 3.1%, brick yards 6.5%, glass works 5.8%, car building and repairing 5.3%, and rubber footwear 5%. While increases of importance between December and January occurred as follows: Men's clothing 5.4%, women's clothing 10.1%, iron and steel 2.8%, automobile 4.7%, and agricultural implements 3.8%.

Unemployment Increasing.

Many of these changes in working force were in part seasonal. But comparison with January, 1923, figures shows the extent to which the upward movement of a year ago in many industries has been reversed. Thus the textile industry shows a material reduction over a year ago in nearly every branch with 5½% fewer workers in cotton, 3.5% fewer in hosiery and knit goods, 4.2% fewer in silk, 4% fewer in wool, 19% fewer in dyeing and finishing textiles, 2.1% fewer in men's clothing, 5.4% fewer in the manufacture of shirts and collars and 5.4% fewer in women's clothing.

Foundries and machine shops are employing 10.3% fewer workers than a year ago while other industries show the following reductions in force since January, 1923: stove makers 13.5%, leather, boots and shoes 8.1%, glass works 4.2%, railroad car building 14%, automobile tires 16.8%, and shipbuilding 18.2%.

A few industries show expansion in working force, particularly the automobile industry with 26.3% more employes than in January, 1923, and the manufacture of electrical machinery and appliances with 11.5% more workers than a year ago. Other gains of importance are 4.5% in brick, 9.7% in newspaper printing, 6.9% in book and job printing, 4.1% in saw mills and 4.2% in the iron and steel industry.

The Disaster in Utah

The coal mining industry affords the most harrowing proof of the destructive character of capitalism. Coal mining, like all other industries today, is run on the principle that dollars come first and lives come last.

Unless the unexpected happens 175 miners working eleven thousand feet below the surface shall have lost their lives digging coal and dividends for their bosses. As the charred bodies of the Utah miners are taken out of the ghastly pits, the families and friends of the entombed coal-diggers are giving way to despair and giving up all hope for the rescue of their beloved.

The miners are continually exposed to gas and dust explosions, to the falling of slate and coal, drowning and electrocution, mine damp and fire. Coal mining is an especially hazardous industry and extra steps must be taken all the time to prevent the loss of life and limb amongst the miners. But to take these safety measures would entail an expense of dollars. It might mean a reduction of profits. Consequently the coal capitalists, like all other capitalists, do their best not to spend any money for the protection of the lives of the workers. Last year more than two thousand miners were killed while at work for their bosses.

The horrible conditions arising out of capitalist control in the mining industry is characteristic of the criminal state of affairs in every other capitalist-controlled industry today. In the year following the war no less than 28,000 workers were killed and three million wounded in the "peaceful industries" of America. This horrible toll is a gruesome monument to the efficiency of the profit-hungry employing class running our industries. Ten per cent of all railroad men were either killed or injured while at work in 1922. Close to thirty thousand metal miners were injured or killed at work in the same year. In New York State one out of every three thousand workers is killed or crippled in industry.

The Utah mine disaster, the moans and cries arising out of the hell holes at the Castle Gate mine, the broken hearts and the shattered lives of the families of the murdered workers in the coal pits are the sordid picture of life as the workers live it under the tyranny of their capitalist exploiters.

Not until the working class takes matters in its own hands and assumes full political power and reorganizes the management and control of our productive system along social lines so as to eliminate the private profits of the individual capitalists, will this huge toll of life taken every year from the working masses be saved. Not until the mines are owned and controlled by the coal diggers, the railway workers who haul the coal, and workers and farmers who use the coal, will we be spared of the calamities and disasters, the wholesale murder of workingmen as have occurred in this Utah mine disaster, at Spangler, Pennsylvania, Pekin, Illinois, and many other places where the workers sweat blood to enrich their capitalist masters.

"Battle Around the Franc"

Recent days have seen a headlong, perpendicular collapse of the Belgian, English, French and Italian exchanges.

But the center of the great politico-financial battle is now the franc. In the demoralized foreign exchange markets the franc has dropped to about three and a half cents or almost one-sixth its normal value. Judging from the atmosphere prevailing in financial circles it is safe to conclude that the French currency has not yet hit the bottom and that the next few months will see a further collapse.

This tragedy that has befallen the franc, the symbol of the haughty French imperialists, is one of the most important political factors in European and hence in world politics today. To the workers of France it means a further rise in the cost of living. What the increase of dissatisfaction among the French masses, already crushed by military burdens, will bring, no one can tell at this moment. The May elections in France should prove of great service to the Communist Party.

The basic reason for the fall of the franc is to be found in the unsound, unsatisfactory condition of the financial state of affairs of the government. The French imperialists are face to face with one of the inextricable, insolvable contradictions arising from the capitalist system of production and exchange and all its political implications. The French government has been doing a lot of borrowing and raising the taxes in order to be able to finance the armies of such outposts of French imperialism as Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. The supremacy of French capitalism on the continent is contingent upon the support of these reactionary puppet governments. Thus within the last week alone nearly one billion francs in paper money has been issued by the government.

Here we have the dilemna. Politically French capitalist imperialism must squander these billions of francs. Financially, it is suicide for them to continue piling up huge military expenses and to support their military outposts and buffer states against Soviet Russia and Germany. No matter which policy the French imperialists pursue, they are up against it. There is no middle of the road in sight for them. The note circulation legally must not exceed forty-one billion francs. It is already more than forty. The advances of the bank to the state must not exceed 23,200,000,000 francs. This has already reached the perilous sum of more than twenty-two billions.

France, capitalist France, is on the brink of financial ruin, despite the outward appearance of prosperity. When France totters many more will. The crisis in the Belgian cabinet is merely an echo of the crisis of French finance. Belgian capitalist policy has been interlaced with French imperialist policy in the Ruhr and against Soviet Russia.

"The battle around the franc" is one of the decisive struggles in Europe. The workers of the world trust in the working class of France, the working class that has distinguished itself so often in struggles against oppression, to bring to a successful conclusion for international Communism, for the Communist International and the workers and poor farmers whose class interests it represents, the battle now raging around the franc.

Business in Government

The story now being unfolded before the workers and farmers of the unity between the big capitalists and all the governmental departments and administrators is more gripping and stirring than the best of our best sellers.

Within the last year the Treasury Department of Mr. Mellon of Aluminum Trust, Steel Trust and banking fame, has refunded to taxpayers the meagre sum of almost $125,000,000. These millions were supposed to have been collected "illegally or erroneously."

This is just plain balderdash. The whole transaction is as crooked as a corkscrew and as corrupt as the manner in which Mr. Mellon has been handling the internal revenue department in so far as prohibition enforcement is concerned. No worker or farmer will or can believe that taxes were "erroneously or illegally" collected from such humble citizens as John Hays Hammond, the millionaire mining engineer, Edward L. Doheny, the notorious oil thief, and such captains of industry and finance as Charles R. Crane, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Oliver and Joseph W. Harriman, and Payne Whitney. These men have had years of experience in aiding and abetting fraud against the masses and can teach the poor government clerks the great national game of corruption in tax evasion. These men are past masters in the game of skinning their own government and the workers and no one will allow the wool to be pulled over his eyes and believe that such powerful capitalists were thus victimized.

This huge tax refund is simply another link in the already long and powerful chain of evidence showing that the United States government is owned outright by the capitalist class and that its primary function is to protect the rich and hound the poor. Mr. Mellon can talk himself blue in the face and Mr. Coolidge can punctuate his over-advertised silence with frantic declamations about his purity and integrity, but harsh, cold facts confront the workers and farmers. There are more chances of the workingmen and farmers believing that the moon is made of green cheese than that such giant corporations as the Singer Manufacturing Company, the General Electric Company, the Merchants Loan and Trust Company, the estate of Marshall Field, Coca Cola Company, New York Life Insurance Company, and the American Steel Foundries Company made mistakes or were fooled in their last tax payments. It is mighty corporations of this class that received eighty per cent of the refunds.

Truly, this tax refund scandal is a monument to the menace of business in government—capitalist democracy.

Soviet Frees Women

In the early days of the Russian revolution the lying scandal sheets of the capitalist press, that revel in unloading filthy stories on the people of this country, flooded their columns with lies about the manner in which women were treated in the new Workers Republic. Our readers have not yet forgotten the fake stories of the nationalization of women.

But the Chicago Tribune, the leading sinner in peddling the nationalization yarn, is now obliged to publish conspicuously, because it is good news, a story sent by the Associated Press from Moscow to the effect that the women of Turkestan, the Kirghiz Republic and the Bashkir and Kalmuck regions of Russia, who have suffered for centuries under terrible inequalities, are now granted full equality by the Soviet Government at Moscow.

This is but another example of the splendid spirit that animates the Communists who today rule the greatest republic in world history. Unlike its capitalist contemporaries, the Soviet Government has lived up to its promises and fulfilled the hopes that its coming to power raised in the hearts of lovers of freedom all the world over.

(WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE)

The Russian Communist Party branch is governing this frontier city and fighting the counter-revolution. Earlier installments tell of the fuel shortage that prevents seed grain from being fetched on the railroad. The Party meeting decides to send the Red Army far away for fuel, at the risk of leaving the city open for bandits and counter-revolutionists. It also decides to conscript the local bourgeoisie for wood cutting in a near-by park. Varied types of party members are flashed on the screen: Klimin, the efficient president of the branch, who still finds time to have a sweetheart; Robeiko, the consumptive, whose devotion is killing him; Gornuikh, the brilliant youth of 19 on the Cheka; Matusenko, the luxury-loving place-hunter and Stalmakhov, a practical workingman revolutionist. Gornuikh, disguised as a peasant, overhears talk in the market place about a plot of counter-revolutionists to seize the town while the Red Army is away getting wood. The Communist company is summoned but, perhaps, too late. Robeiko is dragged out of his house and shot; Klimin's sweetheart is butchered and Klimin and Stalmakhov are overpowered and hurled into a dungeon. The counter-revolutionaries are in possession of the town, with the Red Army away. Klimin and Stalmakhov are butchered before the Communist company led by Gornuikh can arrive. The Red Army appears at last with great reinforcements and the big battle is about to start.—(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY).

CHAPTER XII—Continued.

AND the telephonogram received in the morning had been for Seletsky what a light pressure of the bridle is for a good and mettled horse; he had instantly pulled himself together, carried out all the instructions, had waited all day expecting the alarm, and had been in no way surprised at the arrival of Karaulov.

And now, every half hour, he rode up to Karaulov, reported briefly on the progress of the operation, set out his hypotheses and asked respectfully:

"Will there not be such and such orders, Comrade Brigade Commander?"

And all the time Karaulov became less and less suspicious, and thought to himself: "Well, this one will not betray us."

No. Seletsky will not be a traitor. To be a traitor is to break the rules of the game. Once you have chosen yourself a place in the game, stick to it. Otherwise there is no interest in playing.

The first company was advancing on the left flank.

A dark mass of people was moving forward, but in that mass, in that row of silhouettes, was its own system and internal organization. . . . Each man knew his neighbor and his chief, each obeyed the quiet command. Political leader Spitsyn marched in the ranks, his rifle firmly on his shoulder.

From time to time, in a whisper, he shared his ideas with his neighbor, Fidein, a short, snubnosed fellow, with sharp, bright blue eyes.

Fidein remembered everything and understood everything. . . . He was as greedy of knowledge as dry sand is of water. And Spitsyn was forever boasting of his pupil who was already a candidate for admission to the Party. Yet, when his relations from a neighboring village came to see Fidein, his father, a stout peasant with shrewd eyes and a brown beard, or his sisters, taciturn and gloomy, blue-eyed like their brother, and there began long, whispered talks somewhere in a corner of the barracks. Fidein grew gloomy and morose, kept himself to himself, and would no longer talk with the Political Leader. . . . And Spitsyn waited and knew in advance; the moment would come, and the lad would break out, all red, with shining eyes, gesticulating uniformly and energetically with his right hand, and would start talking of the improper collection of the corn-toll, of bribes taken by the local committee, of the misdeeds of the militia and of the district food commissar, of the whole miserable muddle of village life.

What Do You Think of Our First Story?

The DAILY WORKER wants to know what its readers think of the first serial novel it offers to its readers. We have published many installments of this gripping story. Another appears today. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill. We publish as many of these letters as we can find space for. Don't delay. Write today.

And Spitsyn would listen without interrupting, and would then begin to explain, and would talk for a long time about the difficulties of revolution in Russia, of how the peasants were themselves to blame for not knowing how to deal with abuses, of how many had joined in for their own ends and were consciously putting difficulties in the way.

And suddenly a group of attentive Red Army men would collect about them, would listen, smoking their cigarettes, and would ask questions. . . . And the Political Leader would find what to say to each one of them: it was not for nothing that he was himself from the country.

In questionnaires, oposite the question as to social origin, Spitsyn was accustomed to write himself down as "village inhabitant." He was a village tailor, and did not know whether to call himself a peasant or a workman. Tall, narrow-chested, round-shouldered and bald, his face was pale and freckled, his step even and light, and his little eyes looked always openly and straight before them.

The Red Army men liked his talks, only his voice was very squeaky, and they were always shouting to him, "Louder, louder," but Spitsyn could not talk very loudly, for if he tried to he immediately lost the thread of his argument, and began to use foreign words which the Red Army men did not understand, and to which he himself gave cloudy and approximate meanings. And now, in the ranks, in these quiet, dread minutes of waiting for battle, first one and then another come up to him, smoked, talked, and asked him to explain more definitely:

"Against whom are we marching? And why?"

And, conscious of the perplexity in those peasant souls, perplexity from the fact that . . . they had to march against their own folk . . . against peasants . . . Russians . . . brothers . . . Spitsyn with careful, clear, sharp words, spoke of rebels and reminded the men about Denikin, about Judenitch, about Kolchak . . . And again the lines moved on over the dark country, under the deep blue sky and the few stars, and with each verst, ever louder and louder was heard from the town a distant, clear fusilade. They marched on, until from man to man, from squad to squad, from platoon to platoon, from company to company, ran the command:

"Halt! Dress the line by the right!"

Already the rare lights of the town were twinkling before them, and on one side the river showed, dim and white. And Karaulov's mare, which carried him sleeping on her back, also stopped, half a verst behind the line. The Military Commissar of the battalion, riding beside him, caught her by the bridle and checked her carefully: "Let the old man have his sleep," he thought.

But Karaulov instantly started sharply, woke up, and standing up in his stirrups, looked keenly ahead and listened carefully. . . . He knew at once the place, the light of the town, the river, the ravine.

The Battalion Commander rode up and reported in a whisper, his hand respectfully at the salute:

The reconnoitring party have returned. They have been to the outskirts of the town, and have seen a big band coming in our direction. . . . Better for us to await them here. We have a good position here."

"Yes, yes," said Karaulov.

"The shooting over by the railway station," continued the Battalion Commander, "means that some of our side are there. I have sent to get in touch with them. But so far no one has returned."

"Right, Comrade Battalion Commander," said Karaulov. "You, Danilov, stop here, while we have a look at the position."

But they had not ridden off more than a few yards, when they saw before them the quickly growing silhouette of a horseman, and heard the loud beating of a horse's hoofs.

"Another scout," said the Battalion Commander.

The three horsemen rode to meet each other. The Red Army men, looking behind them, saw a fantastic, many-headed, living mass. . . . Suddenly three of the heads disappeared and nothing was left but the silhouettes of the horses, as the horsemen hurried on their way.

"Lie down," ran along the lines. . . . "Prepare for action!"

And the order had not reached the left flank before, on the right . . . tok, tok, tok . . . tapped out a machine gun, and one after another, interrupting, pursuing each other, light shots flew by.

Karaulov hardly had to interfere with the progress of the operation. He nodded his head approvingly at all the orders of the Battalion Commander, saw in the scanty light of dawn his face, unshaved, with a growth of red hair, his tight-closed lips, and listened to him with more and more attention, while his voice at the same time grew more and more friendly. Karaulov arrested only one of Seletsky's orders. He forbade the use of machine gun fire on the little houses of the outskirts.

"But what if they are firing from there " asked Seletsky in surprise.

"We mustn't, all the same. . . . Might hurt peaceful inhabitants," replied Karaulov.

"The first company, slowly, running forward a few yards at a time, advanced towards the town. The place was open and low, and a lot of snow had stayed there, half-melted, and falling in under the heavy feet of the soldiers. The grey figures made good marks on the blue snowdrifts.

(To Be Continued Wednesday.)

The Sharpening Conflict in England

SLOWLY but surely the class conflict in England is growing sharper. The Tories are becoming more aggressive against the Labor Party Cabinet. The condition within the Labor Party itself is the best index to the sharpening of the struggle that is impending. The mass of the membership is being driven further to the left by the repeated flirtations and illegitimate marriages of some of the Party leaders with the reactionary capitalist Tory interests. Some leaders are being driven further to the right; others are going headlong to the left. The flight of the latter is naturally precipitated by the fact that their colleagues in the Cabinet are throwing overboard, plank by plank, the program of the Labor Party, limited and reformist as it is.

A crisis is coming to a head. Two events of recent date show which way the wind is blowing. The other day forty-three members of the Labor Party representation in Parliament voted against the measure of the Cabinet to guarantee an additional 3,500,000 Pounds for the completion of irrigation works to increase the production of cotton in the Sudan. These opponents of the united front of Conservatives, Liberals, and pro-government Laborites were Clydeside members representing the workers engaged in the big industries of their districts. This Sudanese scheme was vigorously opposed by the Labor Party before election and these members therefore denounced the Secretary of Trade who now advocated it as "the new apologist for capitalism."

Before MacDonald took office he denounced the imperialist plan to build a powerful naval base at Singapore as "a wild and wanton escapade" and "colossal folly". Now the First Sea Lord of the Admiralty, Beatty, and other sea chiefs are threatening to resign unless MacDonald permits the building of this Gibraltar of the Far East. The Premier must now choose. He must either accept the dictation of the imperialists or call upon the masses of the Labor Party to stand behind him in a battle with the reactionaries. The capitalists feel that the question of navalism is of too vital importance to their class interests and they will not allow the Labor Party to play with it. MacDonald and his Cabinet members cannot straddle this issue. These Laborites must either go to the left and call upon the workers to support them, for the workers are the only ones who would dare fight imperialism, in a struggle with the reactionaries or they must go to the right and commit suicide by lining up with the navalists and the capitalist class served by the navy.

There can be no center, middle position, for long at that stage of the class conflict when the alternatives are a strike by Admiral Beatty and his capitalist clique against the working class and a strike by the working class against Admiral Beatty and the employing class. To the left and forward or to the right and backward! The Cabinet Socialists must soon make their decisive choice.

British Unrest Grows.

Labor unrest is increasing in England. Hundreds of thousands of workers are demanding increases in wages. MacDonald is swearing at them under his teeth. Brailsford, editor of the New Leader, Independent Labor Party organ, says the trade unions are most inconsiderate. They should wait until a Tory or liberal government should come in and should not embarras the Labor Party. Well, if a Labor government is good only to enhance the prestige of MacDonald the workers don't see much in a labor government for them. They want a government that will be concerned with their interests only and not with building battleships to fight France and guns to shoot Hindus.

The Poor Fish Says: One thing is certain if the workers ruled this country there would be no graft for anybody. The workers would keep it all.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

Ambassador Geddes, on his return to England, told an audience of Pilgrims at a dinner given in his honor that if he were an American, he would be a prohibitionist, but he was glad he was not. The best minds in the United States were strong for prohibition, he said. One would never believe that after reading the investigation of the Veterans' Bureau. He said the conditions of the workers in America were better than in England. This remark was received with cold politeness. The best minds in Washington are too busy dodging jail for national burglary to waste any valuable time jailing bootleggers.

The Chicago Tribune is doing pretty well with its Moscow uprisings, splits and civil wars. Red army officers are being arrested. Trotsky is being watched and all kinds of irresponsible devilment is taking place. In the meantime Trotsky and Zinoviev engage in a verbal duel as to the best means of perfecting the Communist organization so that it can overthrow the capitalist system. A report of the "civil war" is now running serially in the DAILY WORKER. We confess that it is so interesting and it makes us almost wish that our Russian comrades would stage a fight like it frequently to break the monotony.

* * *

But it takes the Boston Herald to publish a yarn that would make Messrs. Ananias and Munchausen give up their leadership in the art of prevarication. In a recent issue of that organ of the United Shoe Machinery Company, a fellow by the name of Eaton, whose mind, judging from his picture in the Herald, stopped growing after the boy reached the age of ten, tells a story that would be scoffed at even in the hectic days when Lenin died hourly and Trotsky spent his spare time, when he was not slaughtering children and priests, cutting off Lenin's head and assuming the dictatorship.

* * *

Now, this moron, Eaton, adds a sinister feature to the far-famed Cheka machinery for punishing "gallant anti-Bolshevists." There appears, it seems to use for the first time, "the blonde woman Simanova, the great terrorist." Those of us who have had the experience of being apprehended by a dog faced fink of capitalism would rather welcome a resort to extreme devilish ingenuity on the part of the Department of Justice and install some Nietchean blondes to at least save other victims from the torture of having to gaze on the human caricatures that the underworld of capitalism spews into the maw of the D. of J.

* * *

Mr. Eaton sat in a Boston hotel while some reporter no doubt sporting a mind of the same calibre as the Harvard graduate discovered that he "revealed a keen insight into European affairs as a result of three years of newspaper investigation and correspondence." He opined that Lenin's death would have a damaging effect on the fortunes of the Soviet Republic, but unfortunately for Mr. Eaton as he was speaking, Europe was making a grand rush to recognize the Soviet government, the various governments stepping on each other's toes, in fact.

* * *

His analysis of the discussion which recently took place in the Communist Party, however, deserves honorable mention. It shows that sometimes a fool can outdo in the brilliance of his stupidity the most serious efforts of genius. "He tells us that the crisis in the Communist Party was revealed when Trotsky fell in love with a beautiful young woman, and (curses, as Desperate Desmond used to say) was obliged, owing to the puritanical moral code that exists in Russia, to ask Grand Duke Nicholas for a passport to every country in Europe, so that he could take the lady fair with him."

* * *

In return for this favor, Trotsky agreed to turn over the Soviet government to the Grand Duke. But the cursed Cheka intervened. Before Trotsky had a chance to scoot with the woman, he was exposed and what do you think the bloody Cheka did to him? They told him to take a vacation in the Crimea. They are surely a dangerous gang to fool with. Rather disconcerting that Mr. Eaton did not have the job of official adviser to Trotsky. He could have told him, for instance, that here in America it is not necessary to turn over the U. S. to an oil baron or even to secure a divorce in order to enjoy the company of other "beautiful women." The bankers are masters in that manly art. Old James Stillman and his successor as head of the National City Bank knew a thing or two about managing such affairs. They could give the Caliph himself cards and spades. Trotsky could have seized power and then did what he pleased without having to beg the Grand Duke for favors? By the way, did anybody hear of the Grand Duke lately?

* * *

The worst is yet to come. Reading the last paragraph from the clipping sent us from the Boston Herald we notice that Mr. Eaton was born in Chicago, and was connected for a time with the Chicago Tribune. That explains everything.

OIL INQUIRY MAY BE CHOKED OFF

THREE FORCES PREPARE FOR STRIKE TALK

Workers, Bosses and Citizens' Spokesmen to Meet

Three forces interested in the strike of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union were preparing today for the clash, Thursday afternoon, before Miss Mary McDowell, of the Bureau of Public Welfare. These forces are represented by:

The Workers—Including spokesmen for the Garment Workers' Union, as well as the "Committee of 15" of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Bosses' Lawyers There.

The Bosses—Including individual bosses, as well as spokesmen for their various associations. These spokesmen will no doubt include some of the most able "open shop" lawyers in the city.

The Citizens' Committee—Including members of the committee that called on Mayor William E. Dever Monday morning, and forced the hearing that was granted for Thursday afternoon.

"This is the first time that I have acted in this capacity," said Miss McDowell, to The DAILY WORKER, "but we have hopes of accomplishing something. Invitations have been sent out to the unions, the manufacturers and the members of the Citizens' Committee, to attend the conference Thursday afternoon."

"Who has been invited to represent the strikers?" was asked.

"The officials of the Garment Workers' Union," said Miss McDowell.

Consider "Committee of 15."

It was pointed out that the Chicago Federation of Labor was taking a keen interest in the strike, that it had appointed a "Committee of 15" to protect the interests of the strikers, and it was urged that such a body ought also to be invited.

"We had not thought of that," said Miss McDowell. "That might be done."

Miss McDowell was asked about the attitude of the garment bosses during their visit to Mayor Dever last week. She admitted that they were rather hostile in their position at that time.

The Real Boss.

If Mayor Dever ordered the police to book all arrested strikers promptly, so that they could be admitted to bail, his orders are being treated with indifference by the policemen he has assigned to State's Attorney Crowe's office—and whom he is still paying.

Lillian Shapiro and Edith Abrams, arraigned before Judge Samuel H. Trude in South Clark street police station yesterday, had been first kept for hours in the police station without being booked. They were arrested by Crowe's men and detained and bulldozed in the hope that they would turn scabs to regain their liberty. The police, as a matter of fact, did not book them until the union lawyers took an aggressive stand and forced the police to do so.

Jailed With Prostitutes.

The girls were peacefully picketing along Market Street when a couple of husky bulls from Crowe's office grabbed them and threw them into a patrol wagon. They were taken to the South Clark Street police station and held here with scores of prostitutes. They finally managed to get word to the union of their plight when Sophie Altschuller, Freda Reicher, and Kate Miller were brought into the station under arrest.

When Sophie and the other two girls were released on bonds they went to the union offices and told there what had happened to Lillian and Edith. A lawyer was sent to the police station and when he told the desk sergeant about the two girls who

TEAPOT DOME PROBERS FACE STONE WALL

Opposition Is Felt From Many Directions

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, Mar. 11.—Facing a stone wall on every side, the Teapot Dome committee may be forced to close its investigation within two weeks.

The weight of high pressure from various sources is being felt and investigators let it be known today that unless some means can be devised of breaking thru the obstacles, their inquiry may fail.

Many reasons are ascribed for failure of the committee to ascertain the facts concerning multifarious reports, rumors or direct information that have come to it. They include:

1.—That the exigencies of politics have caused some witnesses conveniently to "forget."

2.—That the agencies of the committee are not sufficiently powerful to dig up the absolute evidence in the face of opposition from high quarters.

Smoke—Must Be Fire.

3.—That there is no evidence and hence it cannot be found. (The committee, however, is reluctant to believe there is no such smoke without a little fire).

This situation obtains regarding reports of a big pool of government officials, rumors of the so-called million dollar slush fund, the story that an effort was made to barter the secretary of interior at the last republican convention and other important phases of the inquiry.

Hears of Gun Running.

Tales of a gun-running and recruiting for an embryonic revolution in lower California in 1921 were told the Daugherty investigating committee by men of the southwest today.

Senators Brookhart and Wheeler, who will conduct the probe into the attorney general's administration of the department of justice talked with witnesses from California and Texas and outlined the cases they hoped to have ready for presentation at an open hearing tomorrow or Thursday.

The Daugherty committee has definitely decided to train its opening guns on the department's alleged complicity in the counter-revolution of 1921—a revolution which came to naught, but in which, Senator Wheeler and his colleagues will try to show, the rebels were aided by American Department of Justice agents acting under orders from Washington.

The trail may lead up to the most recent revolution in Mexico—that of Adolfo De La Huerta—but at the start the committee's efforts will be confined to showing the part they will allege Daugherty played in assisting Cantu.

What the committee will seek to prove is that wealthy oil men, who hoped to secure favor and concessions if the former governor of Lower California was successful, "pulled wires" in the Department of Justice with the result that United States agents were ordered to violate the law against gun running and recruiting and thus assist the Cantu faction.

Read More Telegrams.

The Senate Oil Committee today searched thru a new batch of telegrams, tracing additional facts to show the ramifications of Albert B. Fall's relations with other principals in the oil scandal.

In executive session the committee studied messages which passed be-

QUIZ OF DAUGHERTY'S CRIMINAL ACTS TO COVER WIDE TERRITORY

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Senator Brookhart today asked the Senate to broaden powers of the Daugherty investigating committee by permitting its members to go anywhere in the United States, issue subpoenas and take testimony.

Introducing a resolution for this purpose, Brookhart indicated that the committee might wish to depute a committee member or members to go to the Mexican border or elsewhere to question witnesses in connection with its inquiry into reports that orders were issued from Washington to prevent Department of Justice agents interfering with gun running to Mexican revolutionists.

SOLON LENROOT HAS TOO MUCH OIL IN SYSTEM

Quits as Chairman of Teapot Quiz

WASHINGTON, Mar. 11.—Senator Lenroot, Wisconsin, today resigned as chairman of the Senate Public Lands Committee which has been investigating the naval oil reserve scandal.

Lenroot, who has been at Southern Pines, N. C., for a week resting, sent his resignation to the committee. The following statement was given out on his behalf by the committee:

The Oil Sticks.

"Since coming to Southern Pines I have not recuperated as I had hoped and it will not be possible for me to continue my work on the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

"I realized some time ago that I was nearing the point of exhaustion and stated upon the floor of the Senate that if the oil investigation continued indefinitely I would feel compelled to resign from the committee.

Sacrificed Much.

"I have given nearly four months service in this investigation trying as best I could to keep up with such other work as could not be neglected, with the result that I cannot in my present state of health continue any longer.

"I hope to be able to return to Washington next week but shall not attempt anything more than routine work of my office, until my health is restored."

Senator Ladd, North Dakota, is ranking Republican on the committee and therefore, in line for the chairmanship to succeed Lenroot. Ladd has been presiding over the committee's sessions since Lenroot went south.

FALL HELD SECRET SESSION WITH OIL MEN BEFORE LEASES

WASHINGTON, Mar. 11—Telegrams read in executive session of the committee today strongly indicated that former Secretary of the Interior Fall held a secret conference with certain big oil men at his New Mexico ranch in 1921 before leasing the naval oil reserves.

Other interests outside the Sinclair and Doheny group are reported to have been in attendance at this conference.

The telegrams were not made public by the committee. Witnesses will be summoned in an effort to learn what the conference was about, who was present and what resulted from it.

SET JUNE 17th FOR FARMER-LABOR MEET

Compromise Date Accepted to Maintain Unity

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. PAUL, Minn., Mar. 11.—The National Farmer-Labor Party Convention will be held in St. Paul on June 17th. This was the decision reached by the delegates of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor movement, the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, eight State Farmer-Labor parties and other Farmer-Labor groups meeting here.

The debate over the date of the convention was vigorous. But despite the fact that the sessions were stormy at times, there was a spirit of determination to organize a powerful Farmer-Labor party among all the delegates except the handful principally comprising Rodriguez, Ernst, Buck and Brown. Rodriguez and Ernst distinguished themselves as obstructionists thruout the sessions.

Committee for May 30th.

The Committee elected at the first session to act on the Taylor resolution reported by a vote of four to three in favor of holding the convention on May 30th.

This was strongly opposed by Delegate William Mahoney and some of his colleagues of the Minnesota delegation. Mahoney proposed that the national convention be held on June 20th.

After quite some debate the conference voted to refer the report back to the sub-committee. A half hour recess was declared to enable the committee to act on the report. The revised report of the sub-committee, which was subsequently adopted by the conference, called for the holding of the convention on June 17th.

Delegate Manley Pleads For Unity.

After the recess when the subcommittee presented its revised report Delegate Joseph Manley, who along with William Bouck, of Washington, represent the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, moved that in the interest of unity the conference agree on a date also acceptable to the delegates following Mahoney. After some discussion the compromise was made to accept June 17th as the date on which to hold the convention. The decision was unanimous.

Rodriguez Is Disruptionist.

Delegate Rodriguez who was sabotaging the sessions continually lost no time to prevent the delegates from getting together for common action. By inuendo and roundabout inference Mr. Rodriguez insinuated that the compromise was merely another one of the many communist plots which he had been seeing all thruout the debates.

The delegates as a whole were quick to recognize that this was a deliberate campaign of sabotage by Brown, Rodriguez and Buck to smash the conference. Teigen appeared to be lending a strong helping hand to these disruptive efforts.

The debate was on the resolution as a whole with the change of the date. The small disruptive group wore out the Conference with amendment after amendment. It was obvious to everybody that the sole motive of these delegates was to destroy all possibilities of holding a big, successful united farmer-labor convention. Their amendments had no other objective than to confuse the delegates and thus prevent action on their part.

Adopt New Taylor Resolution.

These efforts at sabotage by Rodriguez and his group consumed the entire morning session. The net results achieved by them was only to secure the adoption of an amended resolution which was considerably strengthened by the adoption of a substitute proposed by Delegate Taylor.

The resolution of Taylor as adopted by the Conference assures the calling and holding of a national Farmer-Labor Convention on June 17th, whether the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party acts or not. The strengthened Taylor resolution reads as follows:

"That this conference ask the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Movement to co-operate with it and the organizations represented in this conference

UTAH MINE PIT CONTINUES TO GIVE UP DEAD

Twenty Crews Search For Bodies

CASTLE GATE, Utah, March 11.—Little hope is now held that any one caught in Utah Mine No. 2 at the time of the fatal explosion has escaped with his life. It was believed that by tomorrow the fate of all the unfortunate wage slaves will be determined.

Governor Charles R. Mabey, of Utah, who reached here yesterday, is planning to issue a nation-wide call for relief funds for the dependents of the coal company victims.

It is estimated that on an average the widow of each dead miner has five children.

Picked rescue crews, working in groups of twenty, continue to remove the dead.

Strike Speaker Urges Reading of The Daily Worker

"Read the DAILY WORKER; it is the only paper telling the truth about the strike," urged Leo Krzucki, an organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, former socialist alderman of Milwaukee, who addressed the garment strikers at 180 W. Washington St. yesterday afternoon.

The strike speaker urged support for the workers' paper after the strike as well as during its progress.

Applause followed and there was another burst of applause when Krzucki declared that the workers' fight would go on until they had achieved the same success as their comrades in Soviet Russia.

BIG SHOPS SURRENDER TO STRIKERS GRANTING UNION EVERY DEMAND

While "strike settlement" talk is being wafted from Chicago politicians two important shops surrendered completely to the union late yesterday. They are Moll & Coopersmith at 115 S. Market street and Deusch & Miller at 325 W. Adams street. All union demands were conceded. Vice-President Perlstein said the loss of these two large shops means a perceptible weakening to the ranks of the bosses.

The Weiss Dress Company at 302 S. Market street is a smaller firm yielding at the same time.

Skirt makers employed in the cloak shops have assessed themselves five per cent of their earnings for the strikers, announced Mr. Perlstein.

Indiana Governor in Court for Graft: He Is Republican

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., March 11.—Surrounded by self-admitted criminals, bootleggers, automobile thieves, white slavers and operators of fake matrimonial schemes, Warren T. McCray, governor of Indiana, stood before Federal Judge Anderson today and pleaded not guilty to indictments charging him with using the mails to defraud and violation of the national banking laws.

In a room reeking with the unmistakable odor of jail disinfectants, the governor of the state of Indiana sat thruout the morning and waited his turn to be arraigned.

The governor pleaded only after demurrers to each indictment, filed by James W. Noel, his attorney, had been overruled.

Judge Anderson set April 21 as the date for McCray to go on trial on the indictment charging violation of the postal laws.

INDIANA COAL MINERS MEETING AT TERRE HAUTE

Question Expenditures Of Their Officials

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., March 11.—More than 200 delegates, representing as many local unions in the 13 coal mining counties of Indiana, gathered here today for the opening sessions of the 29th consecutive and sixth biennial convention of district 11, United Mine Workers of America.

The convention will continue until all business has been transacted, which will require at least four days.

From all indications, the convention will involve numerous heated discussions between the administration and opposing factions of the district.

Resolutions are in the hands of committees caling for a check on the expenditures of district officers during the past 18 months, and for a thoro investigation of the legal department of the district organization.

If You've Got Them.

ROCKFORD, Ill., March 11th.—"Watch your ten dollar bills, especially those bearing the portrait of Andrew Jackson."

This was the warning sounded by authorities thruout northern Illinois today following the passing on local merchants yesterday of a number of the counterfeit $10 bills.

Get Aboard "The Teapot Special"

THE conference of the delegates of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Movement, the Federated Farmer-Labor Party and eight state farmer-labor organizations has decided to hold a national convention in St. Paul on June 17th. At this convention candidates will be chosen to represent the united front of the workers and poor farmers against the Teapot politicians and agents of the capitalist class as organized in the Democratic and Republican parties.

Big things are ahead for the workers and dispossessed farmers of America. Bigger events than have ever occurred in the history of our political labor movement are in the making.

New sensations that will dwarf the shocking revelations already disclosed in the investigation are promised for the end of the week. Washington observers openly confess that not even one-tenth of the sordid tale of the Teapot has been told to date.

Daugherty, the strikebreaker general, who broke the shopmen's strike and has hounded innocent workingmen, is counting his days before resignation.

Senators, cabinet officers, Congressmen and the White House are all waiting anxiously for coming developments. They do not know where the cat will jump next.

The Teapot Special which we are getting out on March 17, will give you a line on all these historic events. The Teapot Special will equip you with just these facts and figures, with just the information you have been looking for in all your discussions in the unions and the labor organizations. If you want to know how the capitalists play Teapot politics get your order in for a big bundle of Teapot Specials at once. If you want to be a better fighter in the great struggle of the workers and poor farmers to abolish all Teapot politics, all capitalist control of your jobs and the government make sure that you get your bundle of Teapot Specials and hand them out to all your friends and shop mates.

Soviet Russia Frees Women While Capitalism Rivets Chains on Them

MOSCOW, March 11.—The Soviet Council of Commissars emphasized the significance of the International Working Women's Day by passing a degree freeing 8,000,000 Moslem women under the flag of the Soviet Republic from inequalities imposed on them for centuries by their Moslem rulers.

A new law was passed punishing with five years imprisonment the kidnaping of brides and also parental compulsion of daughters to marry. The decree also abolishes bigamy and polygamy, thus outlawing harems.

Similarly the paying of ransoms by bridegrooms to brides' relatives is now punishable by imprisonment.

Divorce has been introduced by a new decree entitling wives to a part of a husband's property.

KLAN SUPPORTS JOHNSON BILL, SAYS LAGUARDIA

Speaks for Council of Foreign Born

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, March 11.—Charging that the Johnson Immigration Bill was dictated by the Ku Klux Klan and by the employing interests who wish to shackle the foreign-born workers, Congressman LaGuardia brought an audience in the Labor Temple to enthusiasm at a mass meeting organized by the Western Pennsylvania Council for the Protection of Foreign Born, a federation of 50 powerful organizations with 100,000 members.

LaGuardia warned the throng before him that the danger was serious and that "if the Johnson bill was to be voted on tomorrow in the house it would carry." He urged organized effort by organized labor and the foreign born groups to create such a tide of sentiment that the Johnson Bill and the others like it would be overwhelmed.

Foreigner Has Changed.

"As long as the foreign born workers were meek and submissive, worked long hours in sweatshops for a few dollars a week, raised large families and sent them to work in the factory instead of to school and to college and lived in poor houses we were 'good immigrants.' But as soon as we begin to organize into unions, raise our wages, educate our children, then we are no longer 'good immigrants'; we are 'bolshevik.'

"The industrial and social development of America has been possible only thru the sweat and blood and toil of the immigrant. Behind all this propaganda is desire for profits. The great employing interests want to continue the exploitation of the immigrant but they see that he is becoming conscious of his rights and is organizing and therefore he wants to shackle him.

"I can remember when in New York in the needle trade Sicilian girls worked ten hours a day for $5 a week. We went out into that great unorganized mass of antagonized, competing nationalities and organized them into the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and raised the standard of wages and conditions until today these workers have a union scale that compares with the best. This is why the employing interests are fighting to get this Johnson Bill enacted."

The chairman of the meeting was Attorney Anthony Lucas and the secretary of the council is A. Rostrom of 237 Shaler St., Pittsburgh, Pa., to whom all contributions or requests for information should be sent.

Conference March 30.

The next meeting of the delegate conference will be held Sunday, March 30, 2 p. m., at Walton Hall, Stanwix St., Pittsburgh. Organizations should send delegates from all over Western Pennsylvania to this meeting with credentials and make this a permanent organization to protect the rights of the foreign-born.

Labor sentiment is believed to have been greatly changed by the facts brought out at the meeting. Two weeks ago reactionary labor leaders obtained endorsement of the vicious immigration bills which Gompers and employing interests are supporting.

Hoover Says Question Of Radio Monopoly Must Be Settled

WASHINGTON, Mar. 11.—Early and vigorous revision of the law regulating radio communication is an urgent necessity, Secretary of Commerce Hoover told the House Merchant Marine Committee at a hearing on the White radio bill today.

"Not only are there questions of orderly conduct between the multitude of radio activities in which more authority must be excited in the interest of every user, whether sender or receiver, but the question of monopoly in radio communication must be squarely met," Hoover said.

Hoover declared that the law of 1912 by which the Department of Commerce is attempting to keep radio regulated is woefully out of date and urged enactment of the White bill with a few changes.

Postpone St. Paul Farmer-Labor Conference to Tuesday, June 17th in issuing the call for the conference on June 17th in the Twin Cities."

Obstructionists Denounced.

In a caustic, biting speech, during the debate on the resolution, Delegate Taylor lashed Rodriguez mercilessly. Rodriguez squirmed when Taylor brought home his point as to the role of the lawyers in the labor movement, when he referred to the continuous sabotage of the sessions by this Illinois delegate. Rodriguez is a lawyer who deserted the Socialist Party during the war because it was not jingoistic and did not call upon the workingmen and farmers to give away their lives and money in order to save their capitalist masters.

When Taylor brought to bear the full weight of his argument against Rodriguez as a lawyer-obstructionist in the labor movement and in this conference the farmer delegates greeted his arguments with prolonged intense applause.

Unity Maintained Despite Sabotage.

The sole and entire purpose of the desperate fight made by Rodriguez and his handful of allies, supported by Teigen, was to split the conference and thus enable the capitalist newspapers to engage in a vigorous publicity campaign in which the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, the Workers Party, and all other left wing elements would be blamed for the split.

The decisive majority of the delegates are firmly convinced that there is no danger of any division or split in the ranks of the conferring organizations. All such dangers that might have arisen have been warded off by the unanimous agreement over the convention date. This situation is not altered by the fact that Teigen, Magnus Johnson's secretary, came here to wage a bitter fight on the left wing elements of the Farmer-Labor movement. Teigen is looked upon here as the spokesman for the Washington politicians. He has already suggested a change in the basis of representation to permit only state and local organizations to send delegates to the June 17th convention. Teigen hopes in this fashion to exclude such national organizations as the Federated Farmer Labor Party, which has been one of the dynamic and most energetic forces in the movement for the organization of a powerful national farmer labor party inclusive of all the workers and poor farmers.

The Rodriguez-Buck-Ernst-Brown faction is supporting Teigen in this maneuver.

The conference adjourned to reconvene in the afternoon. The farmer delegates are in a particularly ugly mood against the lawyer obstructionist and his saboteurs. These delegates who are "dirt" farmers from Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Washington are complaining and are determined to do away with the sabotage of the lawyer-like tactics of Rodriguez. They feel that they have suffered enough from gentlemen of this class on their farms, in their bankruptcy and mortgage and lien suits.

The delegates from the Minnesota Farmer-Labor organizations, the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, the eight state Farmer-Labor parties and groups, and the representatives of the Buffalo and District of Columbia Labor Parties have got right down to business in preparation for the monster national convention of the poor farmers and workers to be held in St. Paul.

William Mahoney, editor of the Minnesota Union Advocate, was unanimously elected chairman; C. A. Hathaway, who is business agent of District 77, of the International Association of Machinists, and a member of the National Committee of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, was chosen to act as secretary of the conference.

Fix Basis of Representation.

The first proposition considered by the conference was the question of the basis of representation for the present sessions. Delegate John C. Kennedy, of the Farmer-Labor Party of the State of Washington, moved each State organization be allowed two votes and that local labor parties be given one vote. This plan was adopted by the delegates.

Taylor Is For May 30th.

After a brief controversy between Mahoney and Delegate Redwing, representing the Committee of Forty-Eight, Delegate Charles Taylor got the floor and proposed the resolution which involves the principal decision of the whole conference.

Taylor's resolution provided for the conference adopting the following plan of action in the organization of the National Farmer-Labor Party:

1. This conference re-indorse the proposal adopted by it on November 15th, to hold a convention of all the Farmer-Labor progressive groups on May 30th, in the Twin Cities.

For United Action.

2. In re-affirming its decision to hold the convention on May 30th, the convention declares that the organizations participating will recommend to the convention of May 30th such a course of action in nominating candidates and adopting a platform as will leave the way open for co-operation in support of the same candidates and platform with the Conference for Progressive Political Action or any other group provided, of course, that group indorses political action.

This part of Delegate Taylor's motion is distinctly aimed at securing unity of action with the Conference for Progressive Political Action, should it decide at its convention to be held in Cleveland, on July 4th, in favor of independent political action and not to indorse any candidates on either republican or democratic parties.

Farmers Want Real Party.

Delegate Kennedy, speaking for the resolution, told the conference in a very ably delivered address, that the workers and the farmers of the State of Washington, whom the Farmer-Labor Party represented, demanded a real party of their own. They wanted to see this party formed on May 30th and were opposed to delaying its organization any longer. Kennedy went on to say that LaFollette would be supported for the Presidency by the farmers and workers of his state.

The speaker continued to lay particular stress on the fact that there was a growing suspicion amongst the masses clamoring for the organization of a Farmer-Labor party that there was something wrong somewhere, because the call for the May 30th convention had not yet been sent out.

Against Politicians Deciding.

Delegate Kennedy put himself flatly on record against permitting the capitalist politicians infesting Washington to decide the date of the coming national convention. He declared emphatically that the masses in Minnesota and the other Northwestern States were the most competent ones to settle this question and to determine what was needed.

"Dad" Walker Rouses Audience.

"Dad" Walker representing the North Dakota Farmer-Labor Party delivered a strong speech for the May 30th resolution. His remarks brought repeated rounds of applause from the audience.

In his eloquent address "Dad" Walker said in part: "There are three kinds of farmers: tired farmers, retired farmers, and rubber-tired farmers. The tired farmers are for May 30th and they are eighty per cent of the population in my state."

Then Henry Teigen, Secretary to United States Senator Magnus Johnson took the floor. Teigen is a delegate representing the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota. He urged postponing the convention until after the Republican Party had held its convention in Cleveland.

Teigen admitted that states like Montana and North Dakota were ready to get into convention on May 30th and had genuine functioning Farmer-Labor Parties but made the plea that the rest of the country was not yet so far advanced. He declared that he was sure that La Follette was going to bolt the Republican Party and was seeking to secure the support of the masses that would follow the Farmer-Labor Party.

Schaper Proposes Amendment.

Late in the afternoon session, Delegate Schaper, of the Conference Committee, submitted a resolution amending the Taylor motion. This motion provided that the matter of representation be referred to a committee for working out. The amendment carried and the following committee was elected for this purpose: Joseph Manley, of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, Alice Lorraine Daly, representing the Farmer-Labor Party of South Dakota, Jay G. Brown of Illinois, J. L. Beebe, representing the Progressive Party of Nebraska, Delegate R. D. Cramer of Minnesota as a member of the original committee appointed on November 15th, and William Rodriguez of the faction which recently split away from the Illinois Farmer-Labor Party because it was not baiting the militants and communists sufficiently.

Elect Special Committee.

Another amendment was then proposed to have the whole Taylor resolution referred to a committee. There was considerable debate over this motion.

After its adoption the following committee was elected from the floor: Taylor of Montana, Royster of Minnesota, Kennedy of Washington, Teigen of Minnesota, Green of Nebraska, Ayres of South Dakota and Ernst of Illinois.

Royster Talks of C. P. P. A. Influence.

In the course of the debate on the Taylor resolution, Delegate Royster, legislative agent of the Railway Brotherhoods and representing the Working People's Nonpartisan League said that the influence of the Conference for Progressive Political Action must not be discounted. Royster made a plea to the delegates to use strategy in the present situation confronting them. He defended the railway brotherhood officials and stated that they were more progressive than their rank and file but "not so progressive as we are". Royster sought a postponement of the Convention from May 30th until July 5th.

Emme Takes Issue With Royster.

J. F. Emme, one of the Minnesota delegates, took issue with Royster. He quoted Mahoney to the effect that the railway organization spokesmen who endorsed McAdoo at his Chicago revival conference were more representative of the Conference for Progressive Political Action than were the delegates gathered at St. Louis on February 12th.

Delay of May 30th Convention Was Fought by Big Illinois Mine Union

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BELLEVILLE, Ill., March 11.—Opposition to any delay of the Farmer-Labor convention scheduled for May 30 is vigorously voiced by the powerful miners' union of Belleville in a resolution which declares that the class interests of the industrial workers and farmers can be represented only by a mass party of their own.

The resolution follows:

> We, the members of Local Union 4639, declare that the industrial workers and exploited farmers must be represented in the Presidential campaign of 1924 by a Farmer-Labor Party with a program representing the class interests of the industrial workers and farmers.
>
> We, therefore declare our support of the Convention to be held on May 30th in St. Paul, Minnesota, for the formation of such a party. We are opposed to delaying this Convention until after the conventions of the old parties as we are now convinced that neither the candidates nor the programs of either the Republican or the Democratic parties are of any importance in deciding the question whether the farmers and industrial workers shall organize a mass party which will fight their political battles.
>
> We instruct that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Organization Committee in charge of the work of calling the May 30th Convention and be published in the labor press.
>
> JACOB PETRI, President.
> JOSEPH PETRI, JR., Secretary.

'LOTS OF GUARDS' IS BOSS'S BAIT TO STRIKE BREAKERS

Scab Dressmaker Admits Use of Thugs

"Yes, this is David Perlman's employment manager," said the voice over the telephone, "tell her to come right away."

"What's that? You say your sister is afraid to come. Aw there's no trouble; nobody's bothering the girls who come to work in our place."

"What did you say? Have we got plenty of guards. Sure we have. Lots of them. Tell her to come to work; we need operators."

"You say she won't come herself. Well we'll send a car up and get her."

While David Perlman's man was admitting over the wire that "there's no trouble" plug uglies were seen lounging about the vicinity of 320 S. Market street, where his factory is located. "There's no trouble" except what the plug uglies and the police are making—that is no "trouble" in the sense of disorder. The boss was having lots of trouble in trying to operate his plant. Pickets were doing their work efficiently.

Singer & Dudlemann, another firm called were also very eager for help and also assured the interrogator that they were supplied with guards and there was no trouble.

Lots of Guards.

Ironical advertisements for scabs are appearing in the newspapers. The ads promise "ideal conditions" and urge operators, pressers and cutters to come ready for work. One name off the scab boss advertising list is that of Jack Shure at 324 S. Market street, who has joined the group of 54 employers who have yielded to the union demands. From information as to the slender output from the factories of the rest it looks as tho they would be compelled to join him.

Evanston Exclusive Territory.

"You gotta get outa Evanston: we won't stand for no Chicago folks here during this strike."

These words were shouted by a plain-clothes bull of that municipality as he hustled a group of six citizens off Davis street into an automobile and rushed them to the town limits where they were dumped off. He said, he was obeying orders of the mayor and chief of police.

Among them was Tom Holland, formerly labor manager of Hart, Schaffner & Marx who had been arrested by Crowe's men in Chicago for walking the streets in the strike zone and later discharged by a judge; Miss Helen Tippy of Hull House and Morris Topchevsky of Hull House.

They had heard that the police were running amuck in the burg which has the distinction of being the first place where General Dawes organized the first group of the Minute Men of the Constitution. They found the strike going strong in Evanston with the police doing all they could to break it. As they reached the picket line near Netribak's shop they were pounced upon by the bull. He said the chief of police had called him up at the shop and told him to deport all "Chicago folks" coming in.

Back on the picket line in the afternoon the police arrested Miss Tippy and Topchevesky, also Minnie Edelman, Harry Gallagher and May Oppenheim who were with them, took them to the police headquarters holding them there until after five o'clock when the scabs were safely home, then forcing them into an automobile and dumping them out at Howard street and Western avenue, at the outskirts of the city.

No charge was placed against them. The picketers say they will refuse to recognize such illegal action.

Mutiny In the Free State Army Spreads; Cabinet Demoralized

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DUBLIN, Ireland, March 11.—Consternation reigns in government quarters as the mutiny in the army spreads. It is now general all over Ireland. The big barracks in Tipperary is deserted by the officers and men who took their equipment with them. The same is true of the Wexford barracks.

The minister of Commerce, Joseph McGrath, has resigned as a protest against "muddling" with the military situation. Civil war looms. General Owen O'Duffy is placed at the head of an emergency defense force.

The reactionary labor faker, Thomas Johnson, has protested against a military dictatorship of the revolting army. He did not fight against the dictatorship of the Free State government.

The republicans may take out their rifles again and make another bid for the Republic. It is felt that the British Labor government mould not dare send troops to bolster up the Free State.

The Communist International has recently issued an appeal to British labor urging them to insist that the Labor government declare for the freedom of Ireland, India and Egypt.

A fresh crisis in Ireland will add to the responsibility of Ramsay MacDonald and the overthrow of the Free State government would again make the Irish question a thorn in the side of British imperial ambitions.

Hamburg Dock Workers Strike

LONDON, March 11.—Dock workers at Hamburg have voted to strike next Tuesday, an exchange telegraph dispatch from Berlin says today.

Make Bosses Hear Voice of Labor

SLUGGERS from Crowe's office and city policemen continue to assault striking dressmakers and then lodge them in jail. The mayor of Chicago did not know there was anything the matter with the conduct of the police with regard to the strike until a committee of general citizens called on him and brought him to a realization of what was happening.

What is the "Committee of Fifteen" appointed by the president of the Chicago Federation of Labor doing? It was intended to aid the dressmakers in winning their strike, to investigate the office of Robert E. Crowe who was charged by John Fitzpatrick with strikebreaking activities, and to place the prestige if not the power of the organized labor movement of Chicago behind the strikers.

But it took a committee of clergymen and social welfare workers to make the mayor realize that there was anything wrong in the conduct of the strike! Where is the mighty voice of the hundreds of thousands of workers in the city of Chicago that should make itself heard in the struggle between the greedy clothing bosses and their overworked underpaid slaves? Are the workers of Chicago with power sufficient to stop the wheels of industry in this city within twelve hours going to allow things to drag until the bosses are able to break the morale of the dressmakers?

After the committee of Chicago citizens impressed upon the mayor the necessity for action, he turned over the whole situation to Miss Mary McDowell, head of the Department of Public Welfare.

Miss McDowell announced that she is calling a conference of manufacturers, citizens and dressmakers on Thursday afternoon. The DAILY WORKER demands that the "Committee of Fifteen" be invited to this conference. The "Committee of Fifteen" should insist that it be invited.

When a resolution was passed at the Chicago Federation of Labor pledging aid to the striking dressmakers it was not meant for a joke. It was a serious resolution. The delegates did not intend that the committee should be appointed in order to live up to the letter of the resolution and then waddle around until the strike was over.

So far, very little has been heard from the "Committee of Fifteen." A good deal has been heard from the manufacturers. They have every capitalist paper in Chicago to give their side of the case to the public. The striking dressmakers only have the DAILY WORKER. The "Committee of Fifteen" has not given any publicity to its acts, if it has acted. As far as we know it has visited the mayor, but the mayor stated afterwards that he did not know there was anything wrong in the conduct of the strike.

The DAILY WORKER believes that the time for whispering to capitalist politicians has gone by. The time for plain talk and action has arrived. The labor movement in this city is strong enough to make the capitalist press take notice of it. The "Committee of Fifteen" which started out to try Crowe is itself on trial before the workers of this city. The workers want deeds, not words. They want something besides resolutions and letters against one capitalist lackey. They want action against the clothing bosses, that will help the dressmakers win their strike. The "Committee of Fifteen" has it in its power to do this. LET IT ACT.

Three Forces Are Preparing For Garment Strike Talk Thursday

were being held without being booked the sergeant said he knew nothing about it. Finally he got in touch with the matron and had the girls booked and they were released on bond.

The five girls all demanded jury trials when they were arraigned in court. With them were Albert Dubran, Michael Fuchsman, Emma Goldberg, Bessie Katz and Olga Levin, who had been arrested at the same time and who also demanded jury trials.

Emma Deering and Margaret Welch were arrested yesterday morning for picketing on S. Market Street.

More bosses are rushing to the union headquarters trying to arrange settlements. Some of them come in with all sorts of compromise proposals. It is plain that they are trying to find the strength of the union. When they are told that scores of bosses have settled on the union terms they are always disappointed. They come trying to find the union anxious to end the strike on any terms and discover that the union feels much stronger then they do.

12 More Surrender.

Twelve bosses have settled with the union on their terms since Sunday. One of them was a party to the injunction taken out by a group of bosses represented by Dudley Taylor. He is Jack Shure, 324 S. Market St., and admits that an injunction, even if drawn up by a bright legal mind like Dudley Taylor, will not sew dresses or break the strike.

The other bosses who have settled since Sunday are: The Florence Garment Co., 12 N. Market St., Buchman & Savitt Dress Co., 325 W. Adams St., Samuel Weiss, 1332 Milwaukee Ave., National Cloak Co., 702 Roosevelt Road, B. Weiner, 706 Roosevelt Road, Elias Dress & Skirt Co., 1031 Roosevelt Road, I. Mittledorf, 1711 Ellen St., Ex-El Garment Co., 1370 Milwaukee Ave., J. D. Herman, 337 S. Market St., Queen Dress Co., 302 S. Market St., and Jake Ferdinand, 1441 N. Wood St.

Collapse of Wolman.

Leonard Wolman who beat up Florence Corn last Saturday, has not been to his plant at 319 S. Market Street since, nor has his sister whom he has compelled to scab. The Wolman plant is almost the only one attempting to operate in that block and has only six employes left out of the 60 working there before the strike.

These six girls, three white and three colored, are guarded by six bulls and a private thug. There is one plain clothes bull, five uniformed police and the civilian heavy—all ride to and from work with the scab girls in two closed automobiles.

Wolman's plant has had to give up its regular work and is doing little odd jobs for a secret partner named Keller, who comes to work each day with a special thug of his own. Wolman himself is ashamed to pass his indignant employes on the picket line and hear their reproaches for his brutal act in beating up Florence.

Thursday Conference.

The Commissioner of Public Welfare has received no indication from the bosses as to what attitude they will take toward the conference that will be held in her office Thursday afternoon, looking toward a settlement of the strike. The union, altho not officially invited yet has said that it will be glad to send delegates to the meeting and put labor's case before the representatives of the city. They will gladly take part in negotiations which might lead to a settlement of the strike.

"Altho we are winning in this fight with the bosses we are willing to talk with the bosses any time if it looks as if that will help to bring about a quick and peaceful settlement," Meyer Perlstein said yesterday.

Compromise Offered Actors.

NEW YORK, March 11.—Frightened by the Equity's threat to close theatres June 1 the managers propose a compromise by which 80 per cent of the actors should belong to the union and the remaining 20 per cent would pay to the Actors' fund or to some other recognized charity an amount equal to Equity dues. The union is expected to refuse this.

KLUXER CHARGED WITH PEDDLING THE KLAN VOTE

Dragons and Titans Air Their Troubles

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 11.—Circuit Judge Burton today is expected to set a date for arguments in the injunction suit instituted by Charles Palmer of Chicago, grand dragon of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, against Grand Titan Charles Wanless, and other officers of the local chapter of the Klan.

In his bill for injunction, Palmer charges the local chapter is under suspension for failure to pay its dues and for efforts on its part to disrupt the national organization. Wanless has been banished as grand titan for his activities and by the bill for injunction the grand dragon seeks to prevent the local chapter from functioning as a klan organization and to restrain the expenditure of $11,900 in its treasury.

Grand Dragon Attacked.

The bill also charges officers of the local chapter made false charges against the grand dragon.

Relative to these charges, the bill cites several letters and circulars purported to have been sent out by the local officers.

In one of these letters Wanless declared that as grand titan, in charge of twenty-four counties in central Illinois, he "refused to be a party to the delivery by the grand dragon of the klan vote of the state."

Delivering Votes.

The bill then cites a circular purported to have been mailed to many klansmen by the propagation committee of the local klan.

The circular charges the grand dragon advocated the election of Judge C. H. Jenkins, director of the state department of public welfare of the state of Illinois to the office of judge of the supreme court of Illinois.

Another communication was quoted tending to show the local chapter circulated the charge that the grand dragon sought to force James Ashby, the local chapter's legislative candidate, out of the race, "in order that the candidate of the Jenkins forces might have a clear field."

Another circular declared Wanless was ordered to halt preparations for a roundup of klansmen in convention here because to show this courtesy to the klansmen of Illinois would cause the governor serious embarrassment in the coming election.

FIRST POLITICAL TEAPOT VICTIM LEAVES CAPITOL

Going to Detroit to Hear Brass Band

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Secretary of the Navy Denby, first casualty in the naval oil scandal, in leaving office at noon yesterday saw no one yet selected to succeed him.

President Coolidge, it was stated at the White House, hoped to send to the senate before night the name of a new navy chief, but the task of filling the first vacancy in his cabinet has proved very difficult.

Theodore Roosevelt, now assistant secretary, automatically took over the administration of the department and will serve until Denby's successor has qualified.

Mr. Coolidge today was understood to be considering three or four candidates, including:

Judge Curtis Dwight Wilbur, California, who was at first mentioned for attorney general. Judge Wilbur is a graduate of the naval academy and deeply interested in naval affairs.

James E. Davidson, Michigan. Davidson, Republican national committeeman from Michigan, is a ship builder of Bay City.

Governor Joseph Dixon, Montana. Dixon, a former Roosevelt Bull Mooser, has the support of Assistant Secretary Roosevelt.

George Edmund Foss, Illinois, former member of congress.

Later this week Denby will go home to Detroit, where he will be met by a brass band and a delegation of friends. He plans to come back to Washington in ten days to begin a campaign of vindication.

DEVER'S POLICE ASSAULT STRIKE COMMITTEEMAN

Then Crowe's Men Give Him Third Degree

While Mayor Dever was saying that he saw nothing wrong with the police conduct of the strike the thugs who form one of his "flivver squads" under Officer Charles W. Lodding were inflicting a severe beating on Sol Flack, a member of the strike committee.

Flack, absurdly, was charged with "assault with intent to kill," but the police have not had nerve enough to produce a formal complainant or to say whom he assaulted and Judge Trude threw the case out of court yesterday.

Arrested for Nothing.

Flack was walking along Market and Jackson streets Sunday on his way from his home to a Loop theatre when he was picked up by the flivver squad, thrown into the car and the beating began.

The cold-bloodedness of the affair aroused Isador Tendler, another striker, who asked the police what they were doing. For answer they threw him into the car also. Tendler says the police beat Flack all the way to the station on La Salle street. The beating continued at the station. He was held until 8 p. m.

The lack of any kind of a case against the strike committeeman was shown by the action the police then took. Flack was allowed to go home on his mere promise to appear again next morning.

In Crowe's Office.

Crowe entered the plot Monday. When Flack and Tendler appeared in the police station they were quickly transferred to the state's attorney's office and given a rough inquisition. The upshot of it was that when the unionists refused to answer the questions of the strike breaking assistant state's attorneys they told him that he would "get it."

Flack and Tendler were taken to the So. Clark St. police station, where they were held for several hours. In the meantime the assistant state's attorney who had questioned them went before the grand jury and had them indicted. When Crowe's servile grand jurors had returned the indictment Flack and Tendler were charged with assault with intent to kill.

They had assaulted no one. The only assault was the one committed on Flack and it was a brutal one and he still carries the marks of it. The police and the grand jury did not have gall enough to charge them with assaulting anyone in particular. Both were bailed out on $5,000 bonds each.

When they appeared before Judge Samuel Trude he dismissed the case against them on the grounds that the police had failed to prove "probable cause," which means in plain English that they should never have been arrested.

Public Ownership Friends Fight Ford's Muscle Shoals Gift

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Government ownership advocates today raised a barrier across the path the Muscle Shoals bill must travel in the senate before Henry Ford gets control of the great nitrate and power project.

The bill presented yesterday by Senator Norris, providing a "superpower system" to conserve, develop and operate all natural resources in the answer of the public ownership group to the Ford program for Muscle Shoals.

Norris, author of the new bill, already has been an avowed opponent of turning Muscle Shoals over to Ford. He introduced his public ownership bill a few hours before the house, by a decisive vote, passed the McKenzie bill to give Ford a 100-year lease on the shoals as a fertilizer and power producer.

Supporters of the Ford offer in the house drove back every onslaught on the bill so that it passed in exactly the form in which it was reported from the military affairs committee by a vote of 228 to 142.

Coolidge Has His Say.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—President Coolidge today sent congress a message urging immediate adoption of the resolution for a 25 per cent reduction in taxes on 1923 incomes payable this year. Adoption of the resolution was believed impossible by congressional leaders because of the widespread opposition from democrats and some republicans.

If It'll Do Him Any Good.

NEW YORK, March 11.—For what is believed to be the first time in the case of a prominent citizen, funeral services for Alfred H. Smith, President of the New York Central railroad, will be broadcast by radio.

Making Hip Pockets Safe.

MADISON, Wis., March 11.—Hip pockets were made safe today by the Wisconsin Supreme court. The court handed down a rule that pockets cannot be searched without a search warrant.

Dever Is Guilty, With Crowe, For Police Violence In Garment Strike, Report of Citizen Probers Shows

Mayor William E. Dever's claim that State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe's police, not his, are doing all the dirty work on the picket line in the garment strike is torn to tatters by the text of the report which the special Citizens' Committee made to him.

This document, which is printed in full below, gives the findings of the special investigators of the committee. The fact is revealed that Mayor Dever's uniformed police have been guilty with Crowe's men of indiscriminate arrests of pickets and visitors, of violence and foul language. It is further shown that the regular uniformed police have been taking orders and have become willing tools of the state's attorney's men and that both sets of officers have been obeying the struck employers.

A day by day account of brutality and illegality by the police forces is given, with the charges clinched by names and dates in a way that cannot be evaded.

• • •

The report of the committee of impartial observers which was read to the mayor follows:

Police Serve Bosses.

As representatives of Chicago citizenry we are not in a position to take sides with either party in the present disagreement between the I. L. G. W. U. and the various employers' organizations, and we believe that the persons representing the citizens should be similarly impartial in their enforcement of the law. Unfortunately, the police and detectives have not acted justly in the majority of instances, but have used their power to further the interests of the employers as far as possible.

A large portion of the workers who are on the street are women, certainly numbering two hundred in the vicinity of Market and Jackson streets. To insure peace there were present in this same region at one time over 30 uniformed po- State's Attorney Crowe's office, and well over 25 private detectives. The lice, 36 plainclothes detectives from following statements as to the behavior of the agents of the law apply with few exceptions.

Abusive and Violent.

They use profane abusive and obscene language in the presence of and addressed to women.

They threaten strikers with violence and arrest.

They violently handle passers by with no provocation and without arresting them.

They arrest persons indiscriminately on the charge of disorderly conduct and are often unable to state what constituted the disorderliness.

Crowe Bosses Cops.

The uniform officers act largely under orders from the state's attorney's men, and both groups act directly or indirectly under orders from the struck employers. Of the 250 arrests to date over 200 are reported to have been made by men from the state's attorney's office.

The following specific instances were observed and accurately recorded on the spot by members of a group of persons who were present for the express purpose of securing the facts. They suffice to illustrate the above statements. During the period covered by this report these observers saw only three instances of physical violence on the part of the strikers and many violences of which they were the victims.

February, 28—Afternoon. A well known woman, not connected with the strike, was shoved by one of the state's attorney's detectives. A uniformed officer at once warned him, "leave her alone. She is the wife of ———." Her arm is still, eight days later, sore and discolored where the detective grabbed it.

More Weiss Arrests.

March 1—8:30 a. m. A group of girls were arrested in front of Arthur Weiss & Co., charged with stopping pedestrians. Four observers on the spot for thirty minutes did not see anyone stopped.

March 3—7:55 a. m. Market St., between Quincy and Adams. An officer walking south turned from his path and as he passed severely jostled two girls walking north. The action was unquestionably deliberate.

Mr. Thomas Holland, one of our group, makes the following statement which is substantiated by persons with whom he was conversing:

Holland's Story.

"I was walking down Adams street accompanied by an observer and a striker whom I was questioning. Near Market street we met two girls of our group and stopped to speak with them. We had paused for a very short time when a man in civilian clothes, Sergeant Gentile of the state's attorney's office, gruffly ordered us to move on. I was irked by his uncalled for roughness, but said nothing and was about to move along when he roughly took my arm saying, "You are under arrest." This was shortly after five o'clock. The officer took me into the corridor of the Arthur Weiss & Co., where a group of arrested girls were being held and there he showed me his star and searched me. Officer No. 338 who was in the corridor, shoved me roughly into a corner. Later, at the station, I was held an hour and a half before a charge of disorderly conduct was preferred. I appeared before Judge Trude the next morning and was at once dismissed."

Four of the girls held in the lobby of the Arthur Weiss & Co. at this time were arrested by Sergeant Gentile while they were following some strikebreakers, but not speaking to or molesting them.

Miss Freda Riquart was arrested at five o'clock for asking the officer who had arrested her friends to what station they would be taken.

Brutality to Women.

At the corner of Adams and Market streets three more girls were put into the patrol carrying Mr. Holland. An observer who was present learned the following from them between their sobs: They were walking together when one of them, Florence Corn stopped to ask a friend about a striker who had been injured. Officer No. 390 shoved the friend from behind. Miss Corn asked why he did so and was arrested. The officer grabbed her arm and so squeezed it against her breast that she cried from the pain. Nora Hoffman, her companion, asked to which station Miss Corn would be taken and was also arrested. The girls were almost hysterical when put into the patrol wagon and spit at the arresting officer. Later they all maintained that they had smelled alcohol on the officer's breath and that he acted as if intoxicated.

March 4—4:55 p. m. Adams and Franklin. Two girls were arrested for speaking to some workers. Three other girls asked the officers why the arrests had been made and were also arrested.

March 5—8:30 a. m. Corner Market and Jackson. Ralph Gerard makes the following statement: "A crowd was gathered about a girl who was crying and demanding damages, and an officer was shoving her along and threatening arrest. Acting as reporter, I was allowed to question her and was told the following story: Ethel Birn, entirely unconcerned with the strike, was walking on Market street between Van Buren and Jackson, unknowingly following a group of strikers. As she passed Sergeant Parode of the state's attorney's office he gave her a severe shove and tore her coat. When she remonstrated with him she was ordered on and soon after was seen by me.

Sergeant Identified.

"One of the state's attorney's officers who was in the crowd, assured me a striker had done it and gallantly offered to avenge Miss Birn and 'crack his head.' I asked Miss Birn to identify her assailant and the whole crowd followed us to where Sergeant Parode stood. When he was pointed out I asked the volunteer Sir Galahad what he thought, but he murmured as he walked away, 'Oh, this is different.' On seeing Miss Birn Parode said: 'If you were a man I'd bust your jaw. Now get the hell out of here.' I said I was reporting and asked if she had done anything to merit his action. His demeanor at once changed to a quiet one and he said she had called scab and spit at him and scratched him when he asked her to move on. Later five of the persons who had followed us had been present from the start stated to me that Parode's accusations were entirely false."

Crowe Men Get Rough.

March 6—7:55 a. m. Evelyn Byron made the following statement, substantiated by a number of companions: "I was walking slowly back and forth with Benjamin Silverman asking him questions when a crowd gathered in front of the doorway at 234 So. Market street and began to shout 'scab.' As we approached the edge of the crowd one of the state's attorney's men who had come up behind us pushed Mr. Silver in the back of the head causing him to lose his balance and pushing his hat over his eye. The officer also said, 'Get out of the way, you big bum.' The man had not spoken a word up to that time except to answer to my questions. When addressed he said, 'Leave me alone, I'm not doing anything.' He was arrested and dragged across the street, and called as he went, 'Scab, scab.' Nothing had been said till after the officer had pulled him away from me."

8:00 a. m. 229 West Quincy St. A group of cloakmakers waiting for the elevator of the building to take them to work were being cursed at and threatened by a private detective in the employ of a dress manufacturer in the same building. One of the state's attorney's men also present said, "Just show us who you want and we'll get them."

"Boss" Weiss.

8:00-8:15. Mr. Arthur Weiss, of Arthur and Co., was giving orders in very strong language to officers in uniform and in plain clothes at the corner of Market and Jackson streets more than a block from his shop. They obeyed his orders and referred to him as "the Boss."

5:15 p. m. During the snow blizzard four strikers sought shelter in a protected doorway at Franklin and Adams. An officer went in behind them and pushed them into the street ordering them to move on. One fell in the slush. Other bystanders in the doorway were not molested.

Three Abreast—A Crime.

March 7, 4:25 at Market and Jackson streets. One girl had been arrested and officer No. 3181 was heard to remark, "Let's get some more in so we can fill the wagon." At 4:30 he roughly arrested three girls. When asked why he answered, "They were walking three abreast."

Numerous more trival happenings have been omitted as has also other evidence indicating that the police force, especially the plain clothes men detailed to State's Attorney Crowe's office, is not attempting to enforce law and order but rather is aiding the employers in breaking this strike. With the hope of securing a more just behavior we bring these facts before our mayor.

Hull House Probers.

The Hull House residents who have been investigating the strike and whose findings were read to the mayor are: Dr. Margaret Gerard, Helen Tippy, Elise Richards, Marion Palmer, Evelyn Byron, Morris Topchevsky, Alex Elson, Sarah Tower, Ellen Gates Starr, Thomas Holland and Dr. Ralph Gerard.

At the very moment the committee was reading the above report to the mayor the police at the instigation of the men from the state's attorney's office arrested four girl pickets and manhandled them as they were thrown into the patrol wagon. The girls arrested were, Eleanor Sadlowska, Emma Goldberg, May Borncynski and Jennie Lieberman. They were taken to the S. Clark street police station where they were charged with disorderly conduct. They were released on bonds and will be arraigned in S. Clark street police court this morning.

RUSS MONARCHISTS PREFER COMMUNISM TO U. S. TREADMILL

(By The Federated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., March 11.—Evidently to the expatriated Russian White or monarchist there are worse things than Communism. Every ship which leaves this port for Japan is said to carry a quota of Russian ex-refugees, who have decided to go back home and risk even the horrors of having to earn their own livings rather than face unemployment or the drudgery of unskilled labor in America. "We are thoroly disgusted with American conditions," stated one of these refugees, who refused to give his name but said he had belonged to a "noble" Russian family before the revolution. "We would rather put up with Bolsheviks than with the machine treadmill of industry or the lack of cultural life in the United States."

DETECTIVE FIRM OFFERS HELP IN AGITATOR HUNT

Bosses' Dough Sought by Russell Co.

The letter of another industrial stoolpigeon agency offering its services to employers has fallen into the hands of the DAILY WORKER. Unlike the letter from the Smiley Company in Chicago which offered "guards" to garment bosses who are trying to break a strike this letter is to employers who have no strikes on their hands at present and it endeavors to sell under cover men to discover "agitators." It is a Milwaukee agency writing to Milwaukee manufacturers: The letter follows:

HOWARD W. RUSSELL, INC.
Secret Service
Caswell Bldg.
MILWAUKEE

Can you answer these questions about your own business?

Are you going to have labor trouble this year?

Are all your employes satisfied with their wages and working conditions?

Are there any agitators, chronic kickers or trouble makers, drones or time killers, dishonest or disloyal employes on your pay roll?

Are your production and labor costs what they ought to be?

Are your department heads and foremen serving your faithfully?

Are leaks, graft, waste, carelessness or other irregularities affecting your profits?

If you cannot answer every one of these questions to your entire satisfaction, then you have need for Russell Service which has been designed and created to do this very thing and help you solve your problems.

Is there anything at all in connection with either your personal or business interests on which you would like reliable information, confidentially secured?

Seventy-Three Per Cent of Chicago Workers Pay Greedy Landlords Tribute For Homes

The problem of securing apartments and dwellings at a reasonable figure directly concerns the majority of the people of Chicago.

The population of Chicago in January, 1924, is estimated by the telephone companies as 2,925,000. In 1923, 2,162,400 people were living in apartments, flats and over stores.

Only 27 per cent of the 623,910 homes in Chicago in 1922 were owned by occupants, seventy-three per cent being rented. Of the 27 per cent owned, 17.2 per cent were mortgaged. Chicago is a city of home renters and flat dwellers.

And yet this large majority has no voice as to what kind of homes are to be built, or in the building program in any way. The housing of almost the entire city is left to the discretion of the selfish real estate shark and the grasping contractor. What does the public's lack of control of the housing situation lead to? The housing shortage does not seem to disturb the large business interests. Let us read one of the most recent surveys of the Chicago building situation, here given I believe the light of newspaper publicity for the first time, "A Study of Building Costs and Rental Returns," by William J. Moore, president of the American Bond and Mortgage Company of Chicago and New York. The housing shortage and the high rents do not alarm Mr. Moore. On the contrary, he admits that a housing shortage is highly beneficial to the real estate men.

Speculators Control Homes.

"Today current advertisement of the larger real estate bond houses stand out conspicuously as a class because of their solemn and indisputable declaration of no loss to investors on their real estate bond offerings secured by improved city properties. Such unequivocal statements of safety have properly won the increasing confidence of the investing public."

Mr. Moore then goes on to show that the reasons for the safety of these bonds are the housing shortage and the high rents. He says:

"Reasons for outstanding safety: Payment of the months rent, which in turn is applied to the payment of principal and interest of the mortgage bonds is the first and foremost obligation of the thousands seen on the streets of our great cities. Shelter is the most vital and unescapable need. New inventions do not and can not interfere in the payment of rentals which in turn pay the real estate bonds. These considerations account for the outstanding safety of real estate bonds as a class.

Landlord Against Tenant.

"Because of an accumulated housing shortage of large proportions, and because of permanently higher land values, and construction cost levels, the 1921 propaganda for lower rents was destined to fail and it did fail. It now appears—April, 1923—that the causes for rentals remaining firm still continue to a very considerable degree, and these underlying causes for firm rentals promise to prevail for several years. The housing shortage is far from being made up, and the prospect for a considerable reduction in rents by reason of over production is at least several years off."

This statement shows clearly the wide opposition of the interests of the tenant and landlord. The real estate man does not want rents reduced, nor does he want a plentiful supply of vacant houses from which the tenant may choose to suit his needs. As the bond house president goes on to say, "The owners would be at the mercy of the tenant should the city be overbuilt. When there is a housing shortage it is a building owners' market and rents will go up regardless of either building or operating costs."

City Allows Suffering.

It is evident from the foregoing that just when overcrowding is at its worst, is the period of high rents and most profit for the landlord. This crazy system and shortsighted policy the city has unwisely allowed to grow until it has ripened into an unprecedented menace to the comfort, health and very lives of thousands of her citizens. The Department of Health has for some time realized the its weakness in coping with the evils arising from the housing shortage and its attendant overcrowding.

"A large number of the people in certain parts of our city are living in basements and cellars which were never intended for habitation, but have been converted into living rooms without the approval of the authorities," said the bulletin of the department. "There are many rooms which, by reason of the lack of light, and especially sunshine, are unfit for human occupancy. Such rooms are on the increase."

Out of all the cases reported to the United Charities in February, over 50 per cent of them were concerned with problems of housing. The evil effects of the system of private exploitation of the building industry, with which the government seems powerless to cope, are seen on every side.

No Children Allowed.

Miss Marie Merrill, of the Public Welfare Department of the city, told me this week of a typical case which has come to her attention, illustrating the misery caused by the lack of control of the people over the landlords. Mrs. X— whose husband, before the present housing crisis, earned a salary large enough to support his family at a decent standard of living, is now hard put to get rooms which the family can afford, and at the same time have room enough to exist. The family was last week forced to vacate their apartment in Woodlawn because of an excessive raise of the already high rent. Mrs. X— tried to secure another apartment, but was turned away by the landlords who objected to taking in her three children, even at higher rates. In desperation Mrs. X— came to the Department of Public Welfare for relief. They were forced to tell her that there is no law which can at present be brought to bear to make the landlord take in persons who are objectionable to his over-sensitive discrimination. Mrs. X— is now being housed by relatives and is still unable to secure an apartment at a moderate price. The department of welfare handles many such cases every month.

We will next tell how the landlords have become increasingly overbearing as to their choice of tenants, have raised rents arbitralily, and have instituted almost no repairs since the shortage gave them control of the housing market.

White Collar Slaves Drift to the Trade Unions After Strike

(By The Federated Press)

VIENNA, March 11.—A settlement has been reached in the three weeks' strike of Austrian bank employes. The agreement provides a slight extension of the working week to 42½ hours, to be compensated by a 5 per cent wage increase.

More significant, however, is the influx of white-collar workers to the militant movement during the strike. Organized labor in Austria has been conducting vigorous opposition to the government's and league of nations' "economy" measures at the workers' expense. In this struggle, the Socialists have now won thousands of recruits among the salaried laborers.

The Federated Press learns that the Socialists are about to open a powerful campaign for the swift abolition of league control in Austria. The indignation of the workers against this class regime, backed by the clerical government and foreign bankers, has now attained a point where it holds promise of success. The fiction of "how the league saved Austria" is rapidly being dissipated. Even the liberal and conservative press here admits that all the saving that has been done under the foreign regime in Austria is limited to the native profiteers and alien investors.
